

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Nov. 9. } THE QUEEN v. C. H. H. ELLIS.

Pauper Lunatic—County Asylum.

When a county lunatic asylum has been established under 9 Geo. 4. c. 40. the Justices have no power, under section 38. of that act, to remove an insane pauper to a private licensed asylum, on the ground that the county asylum is too full to afford accommodation for the pauper.

On an appeal, in which the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of St. Luke, in the county of Middlesex, were appellants, and Charles Ellis, Esq., clerk of the peace of the said county, was respondent, against an order of two Justices for the said county, whereby the overseers of the poor of the parish of St. Margaret's, Westminster, in the said county, were ordered to cause Harriet Ellis, an insane person, to be conveyed to a house duly licensed for the reception of insane persons, in the county of Surrey, it appearing to the said Justices that there was not room or accommodation for the said Harriet Ellis in the county lunatic asylum established at Hanwell, in the said county of Middlesex, and against a certain other order, whereby the said Justices did adjudge the settlement of the said Harriet Ellis to be in the parish of St. Luke, in the county of Middlesex, and did order the overseers of the poor of the said parish of St. Luke to pay the sum of 6s. 6d., being the amount of the reasonable charges of conveying the said Harriet Ellis to the said licensed house; and also to pay to Peter Armstrong, the keeper of the said licensed house, the sum of 10s. per week, which payment the said Peter Armstrong was willing to accept, and the same appeared to the said Justices to be a reasonable charge for the maintenance, medicine, clothing, and care of the said Harriet Ellis, whilst confined therein; the Sessions quashed the said orders, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench upon a case, the material facts of which were as follows:—At the time when the orders in question were applied for and made, there was a county lunatic asylum at Hanwell, for the county of Middlesex, which asylum then contained nine hundred patients, and was then quite full. When that asylum was first completed, under the provisions of the statute 9 Geo. 4. c. 40, it was capable of containing three hundred patients only; it was afterwards enlarged and altered from time to time, until it became capable of containing upwards of nine hundred patients; but it was proved before the Justices who made the order appealed against, that there was no room or accommodation for the said Harriet Ellis in the said county lunatic asylum when the orders were made. The above facts were admitted on both sides. When the appeal came on to be heard, the appellants insisted that since, in fact, there was a county lunatic asylum in the county of Middlesex, the Justices had no jurisdiction under 9 Geo. 4. c. 40. s. 38. to direct such insane pauper's removal to a house duly licensed for the reception of insane persons. The Court of Quarter Sessions, on the objection so taken, quashed the orders, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench. If the Court of Queen's Bench should be of opinion that the said orders were, under the circumstances, legally made, then the said orders of Justices to stand affirmed, and the order of Sessions to be quashed; otherwise the said orders of Justices to be quashed, and the order of Sessions affirmed.

Prendergast, in support of the order of Sessions.—The Justices were not warranted in making the orders. Their power is derived from the act of parliament, which enables them to make such orders in cases in which "no county lunatic asylum shall have been established" (1). Here they remove because the asylum is full. It may, perhaps, be said, that the lunatic asylum being full, leads to the same result, as far as the pauper is concerned, as if there were none; but if that be so, all that can be said is, that the legislature should have provided against it by the same sort of provision as is made in the other case. This is in effect a casus omissus, and the Court will not extend an act of parliament to a case for which it clearly has not provided—The King v. Chagford (2).

(1) By stat. 9 Geo. 4. c. 40. s. 38, it is provided, "That upon it being made known to any Justice of the Peace that a poor person chargeable to any parish or place is deemed to be insane, it shall be lawful for the said Justice, by an order under his hand and seal, to require the overseer of the poor of the said parish to bring the said insane person before any two Justices of the Peace of the said county; . . . and if upon view and examination, &c., the said parties shall be satisfied that such poor person is insane, it should be lawful for them, by an order under their hands and seals (according to the form given in the schedule to the act), to cause the said poor person to be conveyed to and placed in the county lunatic asylum, established under the directions of that or any former act. . . . and if no such county lunatic asylum shall have been established, then to some public hospital or place duly licensed for the reception of insane persons" (then follow provisions empowering them to make order on the parish where the pauper is settled, for the payment of the charges of his conveyance and maintenance).

Section 41, after reciting that the place of legal settlement of such insane persons cannot always be ascertained, enacts, "That in every such case it shall be lawful for the said Justices, by their warrant, to direct such person to be confined in the county lunatic asylum for the county, &c., if any such county lunatic asylum shall have been established; and if no such county lunatic asylum shall have been established, in some public hospital or house duly licensed," &c.

Bodkin and Pashley, contra.—The Justices might, in their discretion, send the pauper to a private asylum. The 38th section as well as the 41st, shews that the object was to give ample powers to Justices. The title of the act states it to be for providing more effectually for the care and maintenance of pauper and criminal lunatics. The pauper cannot be lodged in the workhouse. It is impossible that a strict and literal construction can be insisted on at all times. Suppose the asylum were to be burnt down, it could not be said that none "had been established." Remedial acts should be liberally construed—Henderson v. Sherbourne (3), Edmonds v. Lawley (4), Lord Zouche's case (5), Bro. Abr. tit. 'Parliament,' pl. 13, Doe d. Richardson v. Thomas (6); especially where a manifest inconvenience will result from any other construction—The King v. Hall (7). If the 38th and 41st sections of the act are read together, it will be clear that the intention of the legislature was to provide for the pauper in one of the modes there mentioned, and if one is impracticable, the other must be adopted.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I think the Sessions were quite right in quashing the order, which it is clear the Justices have made under circumstances not contemplated by the legislature. If we supported it, we should be making an act of parliament, not construing one; for that this case does not come within the meaning of the act, as it now stands, is too plain for argument. Here there is a case in which a county lunatic asylum has been established. We are not to take into consideration any state of things arising from that which has been so established ceasing to remain so, nor is any such state of things suggested or likely to occur; and the consequence is, that this order must be quashed.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. The only question is, whether this case falls within the provisions of the act. The argument urged by the appellants would be very strong to shew that if the case had presented itself to the legislature at the time the act passed, they ought to have provided for it, and probably they would have done so; but it cannot now, therefore, be contended, that the case of an asylum being full comes within a provision made for the case of there being no asylum at all.

COLERIDGE, J.—I think there can be no doubt whatever on this question. It is true that the object of the act was to provide a proper place of confinement for pauper lunatics, and for that object new powers are given to Justices of the Peace, and are meant to get rid of the nuisance of the miserable parochial care to which such paupers were before left in many instances. No doubt there should be one uniform rule observed in administering the powers given by the act, and two cases seem to have presented themselves to the legislature—the first, where there is a county lunatic asylum, in which case the Magistrates are directed to make an order for the removal of the party there; and the other case provided for is that where no such asylum shall have been established. But if a case occurs of an asylum not being sufficient to accommodate the pauper, which is the present case, all that can be said is, that this is like other cases to which the rule applies, that powers given by the legislature must be strictly pursued. That has not been done in this case, and the order of the Sessions must be confirmed.

WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

1844. } THE QUEEN v. WILSON AND
Nov. 21. } OTHERS.

Quarter Sessions—Indictment, Power to quash.

The Court of Quarter Sessions has the power of quashing an indictment for forcible entry, riot, and assault, before plea pleaded. Where, therefore, jurisdiction appears, this Court will not review their judgment in such case, upon its being brought before them by certiorari: the proper mode of proceeding being by writ of error.

A writ of certiorari had been directed to the keepers of the peace for the county of Gloucester, requiring them to return all and singular the indictments in this case, with all things touching the same, and all proceedings thereupon. In answer to the writ, a record of the indictment properly made up was returned; from which it appeared that the indictment had been preferred at the Quarter Sessions, and consisted of three counts; the first against eleven defendants, for forcible entry into the house of the prosecutor; the second against two of the same defendants and others unknown, for forcible entry and assault upon the prosecutor; and the third against the eleven defendants, for riot and assault. It seemed by the record, that the parties had not pleaded (1), as there was no plea upon the record; but the record concluded by stating that the indictment came on to be heard &c., and was quashed by the Court.

A rule had been obtained, calling upon the keepers and Justices of the Peace and the defendants to shew cause why the judgment given upon the indictment, at the the Quarter Sessions, held &c., should not be quashed.

Keating now shewed cause.—The object of the writ is to bring the proceedings of the Court of Quarter Sessions before this Court, that the proceedings may be quashed. That may be the proper course, with regard to certain orders and summary proceedings of courts of inferior jurisdiction; but the record returned in answer to this writ, is a judgment, and it cannot be got rid of by certiorari, and motion to quash, but only by writ of error. The rule, in this case, calls it a judgment—The King v. the Inhabitants of Seton (2), The King v. Jackson (3), The Queen v. Potter (4). In 1 Chitty's

(1) It was admitted in the argument, that the parties had not pleaded when the Court quashed the indictment.

(2) 7 Term Rep. 373.

(3) 6 Ibid. 145.

(4) 2 Ld. Raym. 937.

Crim. Law, p. 747, it is stated, "When once judgment is given, this (namely, the writ of error,) is the only remedy for any defect in the proceedings." But, secondly, if the judgment of the Court of Quarter Sessions can be reviewed in this way, it is submitted, that that Court has jurisdiction to quash indictments, and the proper exercise of that jurisdiction will not be reviewed here. The Judges sitting under the usual commission of oyer and terminer, have power to quash indictments. Such power is inherent in the court by common law, to enable it to do complete justice, and will be exercised in the discretion of the Court, even although an indictment might be good upon demurrer. If, for instance, a count of an indictment contains several charges, or several felonies are stated in different counts, although the indictment be good on demurrer, the Court, in its discretion, will quash it, if it tend to embarrass the prisoner in his defence. In Archbold's Crim. Plead. p. 66, 9th ed., it is stated, that "in cases of indictments at Sessions, or in other inferior courts, the application to quash is made to the Court of Queen's Bench, the record being previously removed there by certiorari." But it is submitted, that that position is incorrect, and no authority is cited for it. The Court of Quarter Sessions proceeds, according to the ordinary rules of the common law, and every common law incident attaches to that court — Hartley v. Hooker (5), The King v. Wadley (6). This power then being so essential to the proper duties of the Court, some strong authorities would be requisite to shew that it does not possess it. The commission of the Quarter Sessions, which is the same as the commission of the peace, contains no restriction in this respect. By their commission, they are required to inspect all indictments which shall come before them; and to hear and determine all felonies, and various other offences, according to the laws and statutes of the kingdom of England (7). The words are as ample, and nearly similar to those used in the ordinary commission of oyer and terminer, under which the Judges sit. The Judges are required "to hear and determine the said treasons and other the premises, according to the law and custom of the realm of England," Black. Com. vol. 4, App. ii. As therefore the Court has this discretionary power as incidental to it, and has exercised it, the grounds upon which it has been exercised will not be inquired into, in this form.

Newton, contra.—The Court of Quarter Sessions having exceeded any jurisdiction they possess, the proper mode of questioning what has been done is by removal of the proceedings into this court by certiorari. It may be that a writ of error would also lie, but that is not the only mode of proceeding. It is admitted in this case, that the defendants had not pleaded. But this was not a case where the indictment was so defective that no judgment could be given upon it. It may be, that in such cases, the Court may have power to quash, or where, upon the application of the prosecutor, the indictment appears so defective that the defendants cannot be convicted upon it.

LORD DENMAN, C. J. — This question turns upon the jurisdiction of the Courts to quash an indictment; and there is no doubt that this Court possesses that power before plea pleaded. It is a course which has been frequently followed here, and in courts of assize. Nor is there any doubt that the Court of Quarter Sessions possesses a similar power. That Court had the power to do what they have done, and they are the Judges of the proper occasion for the exercise of the power. It is no answer to the exercise of that power to say, that the indictment was good, but was nevertheless quashed, as this Court would not in such case interfere, even if there had been a demurrer to the indictment, and the demurrer had been overruled. The matter has been brought before this Court by certiorari, and the circumstances attending the case cannot be considered, but the record only looked at, to see whether it discloses jurisdiction. The argument in favour of the prosecutor has been not so much to shew, that the Court of Quarter Sessions has not the jurisdiction to quash, as that their proceedings were wrong. If the Justices have acted improperly, the remedy is by criminal information; but as it clearly appears that they have the jurisdiction which they have exercised, that cannot be questioned in this form.

(5) Cowp. 523.

(7) See the Commission of the Peace, Dalton's Justice, p. 16.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. It appears to me, that there is much reason in Mr. Keating's observation—that it rather lay upon the other side, looking at the large power and discretion which is intrusted to the Justices in Quarter Sessions, to produce authorities to shew that it was not competent to that Court to quash an indictment. In their commission, there is no limit at all, nor any discrimination made even as to felonies. If, then, they are trusted with powers to so large an extent, it would be a fair presumption that they possessed also the subordinate power of quashing an indictment, unless there is some authority to shew that that is excluded from their jurisdiction. There is no authority to be found to shew that; as, therefore, it appears upon the return to this writ, that the indictment was quashed by the Court of Quarter Sessions, the only question that could arise was, whether that Court possessed the power so to dispose of it; and there is no doubt they had the power.

COLERIDGE, J.—I also agree that this is solely a question of jurisdiction. It has been so put in terms by Mr. Keating, and Mr. Newton has not denied, that in some cases the Court of Quarter Sessions possesses the power to quash. That Court tries cases with all the incidental power of a court at common law. It is said, however, here, that the rule should be made absolute, on two grounds:—first, because this indictment had been found at a previous sessions, and notice of trial had also been given. But there is nothing in that to interfere with the power of the Court. It is no objection that the indictment was found at one sessions, and the trial was to have taken place at another. The same thing frequently occurs at the assizes. This indictment was before the Court, and the course taken was one mode, which they possessed, of disposing of it. The same objection might be made, under similar circumstances, to a demurrer, or even a trial by the jury. The other ground is, that the Court of Quarter Sessions have done wrong, as the circumstances did not exist under which they ought to have quashed. But that is in other words making their jurisdiction depend upon the decision they come to. Again, it is not correct to say, that no indictment can be quashed, except where no judgment could be given upon it, as an indictment has been quashed by the Court, where there would have been a fatal defect upon demurrer, in order to enable the prosecutor to prefer another indictment, as in The King v. Roysted (8). If the judgment is erroneous, that is upon the record, and may be brought before us by writ of error.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. We are asked to quash a judgment of the Court of Quarter Sessions which has been brought before us by certiorari. As a general rule, the proper course of proceeding is by writ of error—The King v. the Inhabitants of Seton. But it is said, that in giving this judgment, the Court of Quarter Sessions went beyond their jurisdiction, as they have no power to quash this indictment. It cannot, however, be said, that the Quarter Sessions had not power over the subject-matter of the indictment; and there can be no doubt, therefore, that they also possessed it incidentally over the indictment itself. They have only done here without demurrer, what they undoubtedly might have done upon demurrer. But it is also said, that even admitting that under certain circumstances the Quarter Sessions have power to quash, yet that they should not have done so in this case. That, however, was a matter for the Sessions, and is not a point of law for the consideration of this Court.

1844. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS OF CASTERTON.
Nov. 9, 25. }

Order of Removal—Certainty—Jurisdiction of removing Magistrates—County named in Margin, part of Order.

Where a county was named in the margin of an order of removal, the order was addressed "to the overseers of the poor of the parish A. and to the overseers of the poor of parish B, in the said county," and recited a complaint by the overseers of the poor "to us whose names are hereunto affixed, being two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the said county :"—Held, that the jurisdiction of the Justices sufficiently appeared on the face of the order, since the county in the margin is to be considered as part of the order, and there was only one county mentioned; and that for the same reason it sufficiently appeared in what county parish B. was situate.

The following order of Sessions, together with the original order of removal set out in it, had been brought up by certiorari :—

"Westmoreland, to wit.—Be it remembered, that at the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, holden at Appleby, in and for the said county of Westmoreland, on Monday, the 1st day of January, in the seventh year &c., before &c., that same session of the peace is adjourned by the Justices aforesaid, until Friday, the 5th day of January in the year aforesaid, to be holden at Kendal; and on the same Friday, the 5th day of January aforesaid, the same General Quarter Sessions of the Peace is holden by the adjournment aforesaid, at Kendal aforesaid, in and for the said county, before &c., at which said General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, continued and holden by the adjournment aforesaid, at Kendal aforesaid, in and for the said county, on the said Friday, the 5th day of January, in the year aforesaid, before the said Justices, an appeal against a certain order, bearing date, &c., under the hands and seals of S. W. Esq. and T. F. Esq. is then and there depending for trial, which said order is annexed to this schedule, and is in the following form :—

"Westmoreland, to wit.—To the overseers of the poor of the township of Kirkby Lonsdale, and to the overseers of the poor of the township of Casterton, in the said county: whereas you, the overseers of the poor of the township of Kirkby Lonsdale, have made complaint unto us, whose names are hereunto affixed, being two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace and quorum in and for the said county, that James Dixon has come to inhabit, &c. (in the usual form), and upon proof &c., we adjudge &c., and we do likewise adjudge, that the lawful settlement of the said J. D. is in the parish, township, or place of Casterton, in the county of Westmoreland; we do, therefore, require you, the overseers of the poor of the said township of Kirkby Lonsdale, to convey, &c. Given under our hands and seals this 28th day of October, A.D. 1843.

"T. F. (L.S.)"

"And whereas the overseers of the poor of the township of Casterton did prosecute, and carry on the said appeal to trial, against the said order, to the present General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, and wherein this Court, upon hearing of counsel on both sides, ordered that the said order be confirmed. By the Court,

"T. B.

"Clerk of the Peace for the county of Westmoreland."

The grounds of objection to the order of Sessions, stated in the margin of the paper book, were—First, that it failed to shew that the order appealed against was made by Justices in and for the county of Westmoreland. Secondly, that it did not confirm the order of removal, except by way of recital of something that the Court, upon hearing of counsel, ordered, and did not contain, in the present tense, any order or adjudication of the Court of Quarter Sessions. Thirdly, that it failed to shew who were the parties severally appellant and respondent in the appeal. Fourthly, that it failed to shew in what county the township of Kirkby Lonsdale was situate. Also that the order of removal was bad, for the same reason, and for not shewing in what county it was made.

Baines and Ramshay, in support of the order of Sessions.—As to the first objection, the original order is incorporated in the order of Sessions. As to the second, the case of The King v. Maulden (1) is in point to shew that the words "having adjudged" amount to a present adjudication. As to the third objection, the order of Sessions sets out the order appealed against, and states that the overseers of Casterton did prosecute the said appeal. As to the last objection, the Court will not make intendments to vitiate the order. The county of Westmoreland is the county mentioned in the margin. The case of The King v. Moor Critchell (2), and The King v. Chilverscoton (3), will be relied on by the other side; but those cases were distinctly overruled in The King v. St. Mary's, Leicester (4). This is a stronger case, as there is but one county mentioned, and prima facie it must be taken, as the fact is, that both parishes are in the same county. The case of The King v. Holbeck in Leeds (5), and The King v. Southwold (6) shew that the Court will look to the margin to ascertain the county for which the Magistrates profess to act. Even if it is possible to read the order in two ways, the Court will so read it as to support it—The King v. Countesthorpe (7). The words “in the said county” govern the whole, there being but one county mentioned. This is the rule in construing acts of parliament, even when there are disjunctive words, as in Magna Charta, c. 29, “Nullus liber homo capiatur vel imprisonetur . . . aut utlagetur, nec super eum ibimus, nec super eum mittemus, nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum, vel per legem terræ,” where the concluding words have always been held to refer to all the precedent matter (8).

(1) 8 B. & C. 78; s.c. 6 Law J. Rep. M.C. 76.

(2) 2 East, 66.

(3) 8 Term Rep. 178.

Pashley, contra.—As to the first objection, the order of Sessions merely states that an appeal was depending against a certain order of J. W. Esq. and T. F. Esq. The jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessions is given by 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. s. 2, which provides, that “all such persons as think themselves aggrieved by such judgment of the said two Justices (i. e. of the division which the pauper comes to inhabit), may appeal to the Justices of the Peace of the said county, at their next Quarter Sessions.” It should, therefore, be shewn on the face of the order, that it was made by Justices of the Peace of the county for which the Sessions were holden. No intendment will be made in favour of jurisdiction—The King v. Chilverscoton, (which has never been overruled), In re Clarke (9), The Queen v. Toke (10), Christie v. Unwin (11), Wilson

v. Dodd (12), as cited in Lutw. 1413. The proper form of these orders is perfectly well known, and the Court will not assist parties who do not adhere to them. The order of Sessions cannot, in this respect, be aided by the order of Magistrates, as the one is not incorporated with the other, but annexed in a schedule. Secondly, there is no present adjudication. In The King v. Maulden there were the words, “do order,” &c. after the words “having adjudged.” Thirdly, for anything that appears any two Magistrates of the county may have been the respondents in the appeal. Lastly, the uncertainty as to the county in which Kirkby Lonsdale is, vitiates the order. A special statutory authority should be strictly pursued—The King v. Chilverscoton, The Queen v. Toke, The King v. Austrey (13). Suppose the order had been “to the overseers of Bodmin and to the overseers of Casterton, in the county of Westmoreland, would that shew that Bodmin was in Westmoreland?” All that can be said is, that the words “in the said county” may be referred to the township of Casterton as the last antecedent—Vin. Abr. tit. ‘Maxims,’ Baker v. Bacon (14). The same objection applies to the order of removal.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The principal question is, whether the Justices making the original order of removal, appear on the face of it to have jurisdiction, or, in other words, whether there are statements therein of sufficient circumstances to shew the Justices to be Justices of and for the county in which the removing township is situated. The order, so far as this point is concerned, is in the following terms:—“Westmoreland, to wit: to the overseers of the poor of the township of Kirkby Lonsdale, and the overseers of the poor of the township of Casterton, in the said county.” It then proceeds to state the complaint of the overseers of Kirkby Lonsdale, “to us whose names are hereunto affixed, being two of her Majesty’s Justices of the Peace in and for the said county.” The rest of the order, being in the usual form, and not being objected to, is not material to be set out. It was contended in argument, that, inasmuch as the Justices had failed to describe themselves in terms as being Justices of and for the county of Westmoreland, their jurisdiction for making the order is not shewn, and, therefore, it cannot be supported. Two cases were cited; one of The King v. Chilverscoton, and the other of The King v. Moor Critchell. It was admitted by the learned counsel, in arguing against the validity of the order, that the latter can no longer be considered as law by us, and we are of opinion that neither of the cases cited are applicable to the present. In the case of The King v. Chilverscoton the county was named in the margin of the order, and in the body of it one parish was described as being in one county, and the other in the other; and it was on this circumstance, the mention of the two counties, that the want of jurisdiction of the removing Justices was made to depend,—the Court considering that it was left uncertain of which county they were Justices. In the case of The King v. Moor Critchell, the county of Wilts was in the margin of the order, but in the body of it the county of Dorset was mentioned; also the Justices described themselves as "Justices in and for the said county;" and upon this the Court held that it ought expressly to appear that the Justices had jurisdiction to make the order, and that two counties having been mentioned before, they ought to have stated of which county they were Justices. It is obvious, therefore, that the order in the present case is free from that uncertainty which, in both the instances referred to, the Court considered to be fatal. And the question seems to resolve itself into this, whether the margin is to be considered part of the order or not, because if it be, the two contending townships are described as being in the county of Westmoreland, none other being named, and the removing Justices as being Justices of that county, by words of direct reference. Now this point seems to have been long settled; the case of The King v. Holbeck is thus reported. It was objected to the order of removal that the borough of Leeds is not mentioned in the body of the order, but only in the margin, and therefore it does not appear that the two Justices had jurisdiction to make this order. Lee, C.J. said, "I take it to be settled that in orders the margin is ever to be considered as part of the order, and a clear, plain reference to it is sufficient," and the Court decided thereupon. We are of opinion, so construing the present order, that it may be sustained, and that the jurisdiction of the Justices making the order sufficiently appears. It was also objected, although to this I believe an answer was given at the time, that the order of Sessions is defective, inasmuch as it purports to be in the shape of recital, and not of direct allegation; we think, however, that the order does adjudicate, and that objection must therefore fail, and that the rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

1844. { THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS OF ST. SEPULCHRE, NORTHAMPTON.
Nov. 29. }

Order of Removal—Examination—Certainty in Renting a Tenement.

Where the landlord stated in his examination that, on the 22nd of July 1839, he let a house, situate, &c. to A. "at the rent of 10l. per annum," exclusive of parochial rates, and that A. occupied the house until the 22nd of July 1841, and paid him the whole of the rent during that time; and the examination of A.'s widow stated, that she and her husband went to the house in July 1839, and resided in it till March 1842, when her husband died:—Held, (dissentiente Coleridge, J.) that the examination did not sufficiently disclose a hiring for a year or a residence under a yearly hiring.

On an appeal against an order of two Justices, for the removal of Ann Adams, widow, and her three children, from the parish of Farthingstone, in the county of Northampton, to the parish of St. Sepulchre, in the town of Northampton, in the said county, the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court on the following

CASE.

The order of removal was grounded on certain examinations; the material portions of those on which any question arose are the following:—

The examination of Joseph Putley states,

"on the 22nd of July 1839, I let a house, situate at No. 10, in Leicester-street, in the parish of St. Sepulchre, in the town of Northampton, to Thomas Adams, the husband of the pauper Ann Adams, at the rent of 10*l.* per annum, exclusive of parochial rates. The said Thomas Adams occupied the house until the 22nd of July 1841, and paid me the whole of the rent during that time."

The examination of the pauper Ann Adams, 13th of December 1843, states, "in the month of August 1832, I was married to Thomas Adams, shoemaker, who, at that time, resided in the parish of Weedon Beck, in the said county, at the parish church of Weedon Beck aforesaid. In the month of July 1839, my said husband and I went, with our two children, Reuben Adams and Mary Adams, to a house, No. 10, in Leicester-street, in the parish of St. Sepulchre, in the town of Northampton, belonging to Mr. Putley; we resided in that house till March 1842, when my husband died. I am chargeable to the parish of Farthingstone."

Amongst other grounds of appeal were the following:—Fourthly, that the said examinations are defective and insufficient, inasmuch as it is not therein stated, nor does it appear therefrom that the said Thomas Adams rented or occupied the house No. 10, Leicester-street, in the parish of St. Sepulchre, in the said examinations mentioned, or any other house or tenement in the said parish under a yearly hiring. Fifthly, that it is not stated in the said examination, nor does it appear therefrom, that the said Thomas Adams ever bonâ fide rented a tenement in the said parish of St. Sepulchre, at the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least, for the term of one whole year, or that he occupied any such tenement under such yearly hiring, and actually paid the rent for the said time, to the amount of 10*l.* at the least, for the term of one whole year. Sixthly, that it is not stated in the said examination, nor does it appear therefrom, that the said Thomas Adams resided for forty days or upwards, in the said parish of St. Sepulchre, whilst renting and occupying a tenement therein, at a yearly rent of 10*l.* or upwards.

At the trial of the appeal it was objected, on behalf of the appellants, that the examinations were defective for the causes set forth in the foregoing grounds of appeal. The Court of Quarter Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court, on the above objections. If the Court should be of opinion that the Court of Quarter Sessions ought to have given effect to the above objections, or either of them, the order of Sessions to be quashed, otherwise the order of Sessions to be confirmed.

Macaulay and Mills, in support of the order of Sessions.—There is, on these examinations, sufficient evidence that the pauper's husband rented a tenement for a year at the rent of 10*l.*, and as he occupied and paid rent for a year, and, by the statement of the wife, resided more than forty days in the appellant parish, the Sessions were right in holding the examinations sufficient, for, if what was stated in them was true, a settlement would be gained. The Queen v. the Recorder of Pontefract (1) will be relied on on the other side, but that case is distinguishable, as there was there no contract at all, but the mere fact of occupation and payment of rent, which the Court considered might have been consistent with a tenancy at will. In this case the contract as set out is for taking a tenement at 10*l.* per annum, which is equivalent to a taking at 10*l.* by the year, within the statute 6 Geo. 4. c. 57—The King v. Herstonceaux (2); and in The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Pillingington (3), Lord Denman says, "If the facts stated (in the examination) amount to a hiring for a year, the Justices may properly adjudicate that the settlement was gained, and remove the party; and they must form their opinions upon the effect of such statement." The Justices have done so in this case; they have properly adjudicated upon a state of facts which amount to clear evidence of a renting for a year. So as to the occupation. The yearly hiring being made out by sufficient evidence, the occupation for two years and the payment of the yearly rent during the whole time are sufficient evidence of an occupation under the yearly hiring. With respect to the residence the pauper expressly states it.

(3) 13 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 61.

Miller and Barlow, contrà.—The Court cannot confirm the order without overruling The Queen v. the Recorder of Pontefract, for though in that case it was observed, that there was a hiring, yet as there can be no doubt that the occupation for a year, and the payment of a yearly rent, is evidence of a taking by the year, that case would have been decided differently if it were sufficient to state facts from which a hiring for a year might be inferred. In The Queen v. Pilkington a hiring and service were distinctly found by the Sessions, and the Court decided that, they having done so upon the evidence of facts which warranted such finding, this Court would not take upon itself to say that they had put the wrong construction upon that evidence. In this case nothing has been found by the Sessions; and the question entirely turns on the examinations, by which the order must stand or fall. Now, in drawing up the examinations the parties have but to look to the plain requirements of the statute 6 Geo. 4. c. 57, which are, that the tenement "shall be bond fide rented at and for the sum of 10*l.* a year at the least for the term of one whole year; and that it shall be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent paid for the term of one whole year." Parties who endeavour to charge a parish with the support of a pauper, should take care to bring themselves within the provisions of the act of parliament. Have the respondents done so in this case? There is no allegation that the house was hired for a year, or that it was occupied under such yearly hiring. There is only one of the three ingredients required by the statute set out, namely, the rent of 10*l.* With respect to the occupation, The King v. Banbury (4) shews that it is necessary that the occupation for a year should be under the same yearly hiring, and the Court will not intend in favour of the respondents what they have not alleged—The Queen v. Wymondham (5), The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Leeds (6), in which latter case the taking "for a year" was alleged.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I am of opinion, that in this case we are bound to adhere to the express words of the statute, and to hold that the statement in these examinations is not sufficient. We cannot infer anything beyond what the examinations themselves disclose; and this Court has, in successive decisions, laid down certain rules to which we must adhere. We shall have no reason to regret so doing in this case, if the effect is to produce greater care and precision in framing these documents. The order of Sessions must be quashed.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think we must be guided by The Queen v. the Recorder of Pontefract, which has never been overruled; and we cannot go beyond the examinations themselves, to intend anything to support them.

COLERIDGE, J.—In this case I am not satisfied that the examinations do not disclose sufficient to support the order of Sessions; and I am bound to say, that I cannot agree with the rest of the Court in the conclusion at which they have arrived. Were it not for the case of The Queen v. the Recorder of Pontefract, I should have felt no difficulty in saying that there was a sufficient statement of a yearly hiring; if this case was not distinguishable, I should, of course, be bound by it. Mr. Macaulay, however, has succeeded in satisfying my mind that the cases are distinguishable, on the ground that there was in this case an actual contract of hiring. The examination states, that "on a given day A. lets to B. a house at the rent of 10*l.* per annum;" there is then a statement of occupation in general terms, till a period two years subsequent; and, under the allegation of payment of the whole of the rent during that term, I ought, in all fairness, to infer the rent for the premises mentioned to have been let; if so, there is sufficient evidence of a renting, occupation, and payment of rent, to support the order of removal.

WIGHTMAN, J.—In this case I agree with my Lord and my Brother Williams, that the order of Sessions ought to be quashed. There are many cases in which it has been laid down that nothing is to be taken by intendment in examinations, and that it is not sufficient to state evidence from which a material fact is to be inferred. The statute distinctly says, that the tenement must "be rented at and for the term of 10*l.* a year at the least, for the term of one whole year, and that it shall be occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent paid for the term of one whole year." In this case, even assuming that there has been a letting for a year, still there is no statement of any occupation under a yearly hiring; this is so worded as to be consistent with an occupation under different lettings.

BAIL COURT. { THE QUEEN v. THE JUSTICES
1844. { OF THE WEST RIDING OF
Nov. 23. { YORKSHIRE, (STANLEY v.
ALVERTHORPE).

Appeal, Time of giving Notice of—Order of Removal—Poor Law.

Under sect. 79. of 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. notice of appeal may be given against an order of removal after the lapse of more than twenty-one days from the service of the copies and notice required by that section on the appellant parish, though the pauper has not been removed.

An order of removal of three paupers from the township of Alverthorpe with Thornes, to the township of Stanley cum Wrenthorpe, was made on the 29th of July 1844; and a copy of it, with the proper notices, and a copy of the examination, put into the post, on the 1st of August, and received by the overseers of the appellant township on the 2nd of August. On the 24th of that month, notice of appeal was served, and no removal having taken place, the appeal came on to be heard at the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions, for the West Riding of Yorkshire. It was then objected by the respondents, that the notice of appeal was a nullity, inasmuch as it was given after the expiration of more than twenty-one days from the service of the order allowed by the 79th section of 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76, and before the removal. The Sessions held this to be a fatal objection, and refused to hear the appeal. A rule nisi for a mandamus to the Sessions, to enter continuances and hear the appeal having been obtained,—

was given by the statute 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. s. 2. in the first instance; and upon the words of that statute it was held, that there was no appeal till the removal, because no person was aggrieved by an order, which the parties obtaining it might never execute—The King v. the Inhabitants of Norton (1). Lord Kenyon's observations, in The King v. the Justices of Herefordshire (2), also shew that the appeal was to be to the next practicable sessions after the removal, and not after the date of the order. This right was extended by statute 49 Geo. 3. c. 124. s. 3, which permitted an appeal at once in cases of suspended orders. Then, by the 79th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76, it is provided that no poor person shall be removable, until twenty-one days after notice of chargeability, and a copy or counter part of the order and a copy of the examination shall have been sent by post to the overseers of the parish to whom the order is directed; and that if notice of appeal shall be received by the officers of the parish, procuring the order, within the said period of twenty-one days, it shall not be lawful to remove such poor person until after the time for prosecuting such appeal shall have expired, or in case such appeal shall be duly prosecuted, until after the determination of such appeal. Under that section the present question arises; and it is, whether, when parties have omitted to appeal within the twenty-one days after the sending of the order and notices, they can appeal, until after a removal has taken place. A power of appeal can only be conferred by the express terms of a statute; and, being an infringement on the common law, the clauses giving the right must be construed strictly—The King v. Hanson (3), The King v. Skone (4), The Queen v. Stock (5). Then a new right of appeal is given by the concluding words of this section, but it is confined within the terms of it; and, therefore, can only be given within the twenty-one days mentioned in it. The King v. the Justices of Suffolk (6) is the only case which militates against this position; but that case was decided immediately after the passing of the Poor Law Amendment Act, and before its provisions had been canvassed. It had not then been held that there was still a right of appeal, after the removal, and it was then the general impression that the right of appeal was simply under the old, as corrected by the new statute. The course of the argument shews this to have been so; and, ultimately, the case went off upon the questions, whether the grounds of appeal could be delivered before the notice of appeal; and also, whether fourteen days' notice of appeal was not necessary in every instance. The practice of the sessions, requiring only seven days' notice, could confer no fresh right of appeal; and without notice, they had no jurisdiction—The King v. the Justices of Lincolnshire (7). The King v. the Justices of Leicester (8), in 1836, was the next case; but it does not appear from these that the paupers had not been removed; and, at all events, proceeded upon the same assumption, as The King v. the Justices of Suffolk. The King v. the Justices of Cornwall (9) followed; but there the notices had been served only on the 8th of June. The Sessions were held on the 28th of June: on the 29th, the pauper was removed; and the question was, whether the parish could appeal to the October Sessions, having failed to give notice of appeal for the Midsummer Sessions: that is, clearly, no authority upon the present point. Then came the case of The Queen v. the Justices of Salop (10), and there, Littledale, J., for the first time, pointed out that the serving of the order was no grievance under section 81, because it created only a possible contingency, and that the appeal given by section 79. was a distinct right of appeal; that the old right remained, and the parties had their option, whether they would appeal in the first instance, or upon the removal. There the pauper had been actually removed, and the appeal was against that grievance. That case was decided in 1837. The Queen

v. the Justices of Herefordshire (11) occurred in 1840; but there the notice had been given within the twenty-one days; and the only question was, as to which were the next practicable sessions. In The Queen v. the Justices of Middlesex (12) an informal notice for the next sessions was given, and nothing done upon it; and then the pauper was removed, and an appeal thereupon, to the next session, after the removal, and this was held to be good. That was followed by The Queen v. the Justices of Cheshire (13), in which case the pauper had also been removed, and the appeal was upon that grievance. The last case was The Queen v. the Justices of Lancashire (14); but that was a suspended order; and the only question was, which were the next sessions to which the appeal ought to be made? No case has, therefore, occurred where this question has been considered by the Courts, since the decision in The King v. the Justices of Cornwall, and The Queen v. the Justices of Salop, which, for the first time, pointed out that the old appeal stood, and that an entirely new right was created by the 79th section. The judgment of Littledale, J., in the latter of those cases, shews, that, although under section 80. the service of the order is a grievance, still it is not a grievance against which per se the parties could appeal.

Pashley and Pickering, in support of the rule.—Before the recent statute it is quite clear that parties could not appeal against an order until the removal had been made under it, because they were not aggrieved, not being liable to maintain the pauper. This is recognized by the statute 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 20. s. 6; but the 80th section of the recent act having imposed this burden upon them from the service of the order, the service of the order became a grievance. The parties, therefore, have a full right to appeal then, and the 79th section does not limit it, but merely prevents the removal of the pauper within a given time. The cases, however, of The King v. the Justices of Suffolk and The King v. the Justices of Leicester are precise and direct authorities upon this; and in order to warrant the decision of the Magistrates those cases must be overruled. They have been recognized as being good law, in The Queen v. the Justices of Middlesex, which was decided some time after The Queen v. the Justices of Salop. It is admitted, in support of the rule, that there is a grievance by the order for twenty-one days; but that is said suddenly to cease, and it is suggested, that there is a sort of vacuum between the expiration of that period and the period of actual removal. No reason can be suggested for this; and it is clear that the appeal is under the old statute, for that it is which regulates the notice, and points out who are to be the parties. The statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. merely extends that statute, by rendering the service of the order a grievance; and once being a grievance, it continues to be so.

WIGHTMAN, J.—This is said to be a case of novelty; but I do not feel much difficulty in coming to a conclusion respecting it. The statute 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. gave an appeal to the Sessions to the party aggrieved; but it was considered that a mere order of removal constituted in itself no grievance; and, therefore, no appeal could be prosecuted till the removal of the pauper. The New Poor Law Act, however, provides that the pauper shall not be removed till twenty-one days after service of the order of removal, and even then, if notice of appeal be given, that he shall not be removed until after the next sessions. The party, therefore, has then clearly a right to appeal. The cases of The Queen v. the Justices of Salop and The Queen v. the Justices of Middlesex have decided, that if this notice be omitted to be given, nevertheless the parties may appeal, after the removal. Then the point of the present argument is, that, if the twenty-one days are permitted to elapse without notice being given, a notice cannot be given until after the actual removal. But the only reason why removal was requisite, before the recent statute, was, that the removal created the grievance, and until then there was none; but the new act directs that the expense of maintaining the pauper shall be borne by the appellant parish from the time of giving notice of the order, and it is conceded by Mr. Hall, that, under these circumstances, the order itself operates as a grievance; the parish, therefore, may appeal upon that.

1844. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS OF WOOLDALE.
Nov. 16, 20. }

Apprenticeship, Settlement by—Examination—Indenture—Mistake—Ambiguity.

An indenture of apprenticeship purported to be made between John B., of the one part, and J. R. of the other part, and was to the effect that John B. bound himself apprentice to J. R., and covenanted with him: and in a subsequent part of the indenture J. R., the master, covenanted with the said Joseph B., apprentice, and the indenture purported to be executed by Joseph B. The removing Magistrates took the examination of Joseph B.; in which he stated that he was the person who executed the indenture, and served under it, and that he was called John B. in the indenture by mistake:—Held, that this was not such an ambiguity as to render the deed void, and that the facts stated by Joseph B. were properly taken in his examination, and were legal evidence to prove that he was the person who executed the indenture and served under it.

Held also, that, it being stated in the deed that the apprentice was bound till he attained the age of twenty-one years, and the age of Joseph B. appearing on the examination, and also it being therein stated, that he served under the deed, and resided with his master until he was twenty-one, a forty days' binding, service, and residence sufficiently appeared.

Upon an appeal against an order of two Justices for the removal of Joseph Beaumont and Alice his wife, from the township of Upperthong, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, to the township of Wooldale, also in the said West Riding, the Court of Quarter Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court on the following

CASE.

The only examination on which the said order of removal was made, was that of the said Joseph Beaumont; and the same, so far as related to the said Joseph Beaumont's alleged settlement in the township of Wooldale, was as follows:—"I am seventy-one years of age; my father's name was John Beaumont; he resided at Scarfold in Upperthong, and was a cloth-dresser. On or about the 28th day of March 1789, I was bound apprentice to Joseph Roberts, of Cinderhills, in the township of Wooldale, in the said riding, clothier, by the indenture of apprenticeship now produced, bearing date the said 28th day of March 1789, and made between the said Joseph Roberts, therein described 'Joseph Roberts, of Cinderhills, in the parish of Kirkburton and of York, clothier,' of the one part, and myself, therein by mistake called John Beaumont, and therein described 'John Beaumont, of Holmfirth, in the parish of Almondbury, and county aforesaid,' of the other part; my master, the said Joseph Roberts, resided and inhabited at Cinderhills in Wooldale, and I lived with him there for some time before I was bound apprentice. I also resided, inhabited, and slept at my said master's house at Cinderhills in Wooldale aforesaid, as an apprentice under the said indenture for several years, and until I was twenty-one, and at liberty from my master. My father is one of the witnesses to the indenture. When the indenture was executed it was left in the care of John Beaumont, carrier, the other witness to it. And when I came of age I got it from him, and have kept it ever since. I have done no act to gain a settlement in my own right since I was apprenticed to Joseph Roberts as aforesaid."

The indenture of apprenticeship above referred to, and which was set out verbatim in the case, and a copy of which was duly sent by the overseers of Upperthong to the overseers of Wooldale, was as follows:—"This indenture, made the 28th of March 1789, between Joseph Roberts, of Cinderhills, in the parish of Kirkburton, and of York, clothier, of the one part, and John Beaumont, of Holmfirth, in the parish of Almondbury and county aforesaid, of the other part, witnesseth, that the said John Beaumont hath, of his own free will, and with the consent of, and by his father's, John Beaumont, has put and bound himself apprentice to and with the said Joseph Roberts, and with him, after the manner of an apprentice, to dwell, remain, and serve from the date hereof, for, during, and until the term of his attaining the age of twenty-one years thence next following, to be fully completed and ended, during all which term the said apprentice his said master well and faithfully shall serve, &c. [here followed the apprentice's covenants]. And the said Joseph Roberts for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns doth covenant, promise, and grant by these presents, to and with the said Joseph Beaumont, apprentice, that he, the said Joseph Roberts, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall and will teach, learn, and inform him the said apprentice, or cause him to be taught, learned, and informed in the art and mystery of a clothier, which the said master now useth, &c. [here followed the master's covenants]. And for a true performance of all and singular covenants and agreements aforesaid, each of the parties aforesaid doth bind himself unto the other firmly by these presents; in witness whereof the parties above named to these present indentures interchangeably have set their hands and seals the day and year above written.

"Sealed and delivered (being first duly stamped,)

"Joseph Roberts. (L.s.)

"John Beaumont. (L.s.)

"John Beaumont, carrier.

"John Beaumont, clothier."

The following were the grounds of appeal against the said order:—First, that the said examinations do not, nor either of them does disclose any ground of settlement in and removal to our said township, other than an alleged service and residence there, under a supposed indenture of apprenticeship; which said indenture, as appears by the examination of the said Joseph Beaumont, being one of the said examinations whereon the said order was made, is and always was bad and insufficient, and not obligatory on any person thereby supposed to be bound apprentice, inasmuch as the said indenture is and always was ambiguous on the face thereof, both as to the person who was intended to be bound apprentice thereby, and the term for which it was intended that he should be bound, and, in other respects. Secondly, that the said supposed indenture, appearing by the said examination of the said Joseph Beaumont to be ambiguous on the face of it, as in the preceding ground of appeal is mentioned, the said Justices at the hearing wherein the said order was made improperly and contrary to law admitted parol evidence in explanation of the said ambiguities, as appears by the said examination of the said Joseph Beaumont; and the said examinations, whereon the said order was made, do not, nor either of them does, contain legal evidence of the supposed binding of the said Joseph Beaumont. Thirdly, that assuming the said evidence to have been properly admitted by the said Justices, and that the said Joseph Beaumont did, at the time and in the manner in the said examination of the said Joseph Beaumont mentioned, sign, seal, and deliver as his deed, the document in the same examination described and set forth as an indenture, nevertheless the said examinations, whereon the said order was made, do not, nor either of them does, shew that the said Joseph Beaumont was ever bound apprentice to the said Joseph Roberts, in the said examination of the said Joseph Beaumont mentioned, the supposed mistake in the said examination of the said Joseph Beaumont mentioned being such as altogether to prevent the said supposed indenture from being or taking effect as the deed of the said Joseph Beaumont.

When the case came on to be heard, it was admitted by the respondents, that the said examination of the said Joseph Beaumont, so far as is material to the present case, and the said indenture, were as above set forth; and it was thereupon insisted, by the appellants, that the said order of removal ought to be quashed for the several reasons assigned in the above stated grounds of appeal.

The Court of Quarter Sessions, nevertheless, confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench.

If the Court of Queen's Bench should be of opinion that, on any of the objections stated in the forementioned grounds of appeal, the Sessions ought to have quashed the order, then that order and the order of Sessions confirming the same to be severally quashed, otherwise both the said orders to be affirmed.

Pickering and Hardy, in support of the order of Sessions.—The signature of the apprentice is in the right name, and it is admitted that the party mentioned in the indenture is the right party. The master might have sued Joseph Beaumont on the indenture—Mayelstone v. Lord Palmerston (1). The declaration has been properly framed to shew the identity of the parties. Hall v. Cazenove (2) is an analogous case. If it had been averred in a declaration that the partes were the same, it could not have been contended, that the deed was a nullity—Williams v. Bryant (3), where all the authorities are collected. Suppose, even, that the signature had been in a wrong name, the deed would not have been a nullity—Evans v. King (4). The covenant by the master is not necessary—The King v. St. Peter's on the Hill (5). In The King v. Exminster (6), the Court held that they might intend that one surname meant another in the assignment of a parish apprenticeship, under 32 Geo. 3. c. 57. s. 7. In Doe d. Westlake v. Westlake (7), parol evidence as to who was intended by a particular name was rejected, because there was enough on the face of the will to shew what party was intended. Morris's case (8), Gould v. Barnes (9), Maby v. Shepherd (10), Hyckman v. Shotbolt (11), all go to shew that Joseph might be sued by the name of John. Then as to the ambiguity whether the father or son were intended to be bound, that does not affect the instrument: parol evidence may be given to explain, and the ambiguity as to the term does not avoid it, as it would not be void if no term were mentioned—The King v. Woolstanton (12). The party binds himself, and it is not a binding by the parish officers. The deed would, therefore, at most be only voidable, not void—Bac. Abr. tit. 'Grant,' (H. 2.) Boraston's case (13), Lady Hewley's case (14), Doe d.

[COLERIDGE, J.—Would John or Joseph be liable on the covenant?]

The party bound, and who took the benefit of the covenant—The King v. Arnesby (19). This is not strictly a patent ambiguity—Colpoys v. Colpoys (20). Lastly, this objection could only be taken by the parties to the deed—The King v. Wickham (21), The King v. Cheadle (22), Evans v. King (23), Monkhouse v. Hutchison (24), Doctrina Placitandi, 'Pleading,' 'Misnomer,' The King v. St. Nicholas, Ipswich (25).

[WILLIAMS, J.—How does it appear that the apprentice served for forty days?]

It may be collected from the dates and the age of the pauper.

Hall and Pashley, contra.—First, the deed contains a patent ambiguity, and could not have been sued on as the deed of Joseph—Clarke v. Istead (26).

[WIGHTMAN, J.—That case goes no further than Maby v. Shepherd; suppose there was an action against Joseph by the name of John, with a suggestion that he was as well known by one name as the other?]

That was not the fact; besides, the deed is void if the party is misdescribed throughout.

[COLERIDGE, J.—You only get at the mistake by parol evidence.]

On the face of the instrument it would appear that there were two persons of the name of John. The case of The King v. Exminster does not apply. There the word "said" identified the party, and there being the right christian name, the surname might be rejected—The King v. Morris was a similar case—Com. Dig. 'Fait' (A) 2.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—In Evans v. King it was held a bad plea in abatement, that the name by which a party was sued was not his name of baptism.]

Williams v. Bryant was the case of a party who was commonly known by the name by which he executed the bond; and at p. 455 of the judgment that case is distinguished from Hyckman v. Shotbolt on that very ground. Williams v. Bryant only decided that a bond was not void, which is in the name, whether such name be the first or christian name or family name, by which the party is commonly called or known. In the case of warrants, whether civil or criminal, an officer is not justified in taking a party misnamed in the warrant, though he is the party meant—Hoye v. Bush (27).

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It appears to me that the Sessions have done right in this case. A deed is produced, under which Joseph Beaumont is said to have gained a settlement, and the first question is, whether he, Joseph Beaumont, has executed it; and there can be no question that he did. He signs, seals, and delivers it. The indenture certainly presents a difficulty; but, I think, there is really no ambiguity in it; the person who throughout the indenture is described as the apprentice, is the party to it; and though the name of John is introduced by mistake, in the first instance, I think the description of apprentice and person bound in effect removes all difficulty. I think, therefore, there is no ambiguity beyond that which may be said to exist as to who was the party who really executed it, and that is removed by the evidence. Then, as to the other point, it was not much insisted on. It certainly is an extraordinary mode of expression, but we cannot but see that the period exceeds forty days. A great deal of learning has been produced before us, and the authorities are collected in the case before the Court of Exchequer, and even there the defence set up could not, under any circumstances, have been made available since the New Rules. The question here is, whether there has been enough here to constitute a binding of the pauper; I think there was, and that a settlement was therefore gained by service under the indenture.

WILLIAMS, J.—The counsel for the appellants have rightly stated the question to be, who was the party actually bound? It is the binding himself to serve, that is the main ingredient in a party's gaining a settlement. The deed must be shewn to apply to somebody, and that was all that was done on the present occasion; and, I think, the parol evidence was rightly given to shew to whom it applied; the right party comes forward and says, I am the man; Joseph then was the person bound. As to the confusion between the names of John and Joseph, I concur with the rest of the Court that Joseph is sufficiently described as being the apprentice, and that it is not left uncertain whether it was John or Joseph. As to the curious wording of the indenture, if bad and doubtful English could avoid a deed, this deed would perhaps be void; but no man can doubt that the meaning was, that the party should be bound till he was twenty-one years of age, there is abundant evidence of a forty days' residence.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion.—There is here, strictly speaking, no ambiguity, but a difficulty of construction, which is a different thing. In all cases of proof of a deed some parol evidence must be given; if you wish to prove the execution of a deed by John Smith, you must give some evidence to apply the deed to the individual John Smith. In this case Joseph Beaumont is called, and he says I am the person; and moreover when you look into the deed you see that the master covenants with the said Joseph Beaumont, apprentice. Can there be any doubt that the said name John in the deed refers to Joseph? Then, as to the other point: you find bad English in the indenture, no doubt, and the question is, can you make out a meaning from it? I think you can; and from looking at the deed there can be no doubt that there was a binding for forty days, and the master covenants to pay yearly wages.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion.—On the face of the deed there are only two parties, Joseph Roberts and John Beaumont; and it also appears that the party who at the beginning of the deed is called John Beaumont is intended to be apprenticed. At the end of the deed there is:—"In witness whereof the parties above named to these indentures have set their hands and seals," and then comes the signature. I think the parties signing and sealing admit themselves thereby to be the parties named in the deed; and that if Joseph had been sued in the name of John he would have been estopped from saying that his name was not John, but Joseph—Hyckman v. Shotbolt, Maby v. Shepherd: or it might have been averred that the party was as well known by one name as the other, and the signing by the name of Joseph would be cogent evidence of the identity of the person. The mode of proceeding was referred to in Williams v. Bryant. The only remaining question is, for what time the apprentice was bound? and as to that the rule applies certum est quod certum reddi potest.

A warrant was issued by a Justice under this statute, reciting that it ap-

"To all and every the constables and other officers of the peace for the city of London and the liberties thereof, whom these may concern, and to the keeper of the Giltspur Street Prison in London.

"London, to wit.—These are in Her Majesty's name to command you and every of you forthwith safely to convey and deliver into the custody of the said keeper, the body of Jacques Besset, being charged before me, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, in and for the said city and liberties, posed offender shall be found, to examine upon oath any person or persons touching the truth of such charge, and, upon such evidence as according to the laws of that part of her Majesty's dominions would justify the apprehension and commitment for trial of the person so accused if the crime of which he or she shall be so accused had been there committed, it shall be lawful for such Justice of the Peace, or other person having power to commit as aforesaid, to issue his warrant for the apprehension of such person, and also to commit the person so accused to gaol, there to remain until delivered pursuant to such requisition as aforesaid."

Wm. Magnay, Mayor of London."

Montagu Chambers having moved for the discharge of the prisoner upon habeas corpus,—(2)

Section 3, "Provided always, that no Justice of the Peace or other person shall issue his warrant for the apprehension of any such supposed offender until it shall have been proved to him, upon oath or by affidavit, that the party applying for such warrant is the bearer of a warrant of arrest or other equivalent judicial document, issued by a Judge or competent Magistrate in France, authenticated in such manner as would justify the arrest of the supposed offender in France upon the same charge, or unless it shall appear to him that the acts charged against the supposed offender are clearly set forth in such warrant of arrest or other equivalent judicial documents."

(2) A writ of habeas corpus was granted by Wightman, J., at chambers, during the vacation, but in consequence of the importance of the matter,

E. James shewed cause.—First, the crime was committed in France, and the prisoner is a native of that country; the writ, therefore, does not lie.

[Montagu Chambers, contra.—This only appears by affidavit, and there is no precedent for allowing affidavits in explanation or addition to the return.]

In Hobhouse's case (3) the circumstances of the prisoner's detention were shewn on affidavit, and the Court saw enough to remand him. So in The Canadian Prisoners' case (4). That the prisoner is a native of France, and that the crime was committed there, can only be shewn in this manner; so also where the prisoner has been convicted of felony, the fact of such conviction would appear on affidavit. When a party applies for a writ, he himself uses an affidavit; therefore affidavits must be used in answer.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This warrant directs the gaoler to detain the prisoner until he shall be delivered by due course of law. The act of parliament, on which the commitment is founded, directs the commitment to be "till the prisoner is delivered, pur-

by consent, it stood over until the present term. The following were some of the material objections then raised to the commitment:—First, it does not shew that any requisition had been made to one of Her Majesty's Secretaries of State, upon the charge of fraudulent bankruptcy;—secondly, or that he had granted his warrant for such crime, or that such warrant was under his hand and seal;—thirdly, it does not state when the acts of fraudulent bankruptcy are charged to have been committed, or that they are charged to have been committed subsequently to the ratification of the convention;—fourthly, it does not state that a Judge in France was duly authorized to take cognizance of the offence.—fifthly, it does not state that the offence charged was committed "within the territories of the King of the French;"—sixthly, it does not state that the party was found within the jurisdiction of the Justice;—seventhly, it does not state that the Justice commits on such evidence as would justify him in committing, if the crime of which the party was accused had been committed in England;—eighthly, the offence is not stated in the warrant with sufficient distinctness and certainty, but is so loosely set forth that the Judge cannot understand it, or form a judgment whether the party is committed upon what appears to be fraudulent bankruptcy: the acts done, or the manner in which he became a fraudulent bankrupt, should be set forth;—ninthly, the conclusion is bad, as the commitment should be until "delivered pursuant to requisition, &c.;" for the commitment, being in pursuance of a special authority, must in terms pursue the authority.

suant to the requisition, in the name of the king of the French;" and it does not even appear that there has been any requisition.]

It appears from the affidavits.

[COLERIDGE, J.—Under what statute is the habeas applied for?]

It can only be under 31 Car. 2. c. 2. The statute 56 Geo. 3. c. 100. does not apply to a criminal or supposed criminal matter.

[Montagu Chambers.—The application is made at common law.]

If the prisoner is a criminal fugitive from a foreign country, he is not entitled to the writ. In The King v. M'Intosh (5) it was held, that a party committed for treason done in Scotland, was not entitled to the habeas on the ground that the prayer was only to be tried, and this Court could not try a treason committed in Scotland. If the application is made at common law, the Court will not interfere on behalf of a foreigner who has committed a crime against the laws of his own country.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—Our gaolers are not gaolers for foreign states.]

There is no fatal defect on the face of the warrant. It is contended for the prisoner, that the powers of the act have not been strictly pursued, but the delivery by due course of law may be taken to mean, a delivery according to the mode prescribed by the act of parliament. It is true that in Mash's case (6), it was held, that where a commitment is in pursuance of a special authority, the conclusion "till he be discharged by due course of law" is ill. On the other hand, such a conclusion was held good in Goff's case (7).

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—In that case there was a good adjudication at the commencement of the warrant; but you cannot contend that a discharge by due course of law means a delivery up in pursuance of a requisition in order to be tried in France.]

[WIGHTMAN, J.—There might be no requisition.]

Then the prisoner would be entitled to his discharge. At all events, the Court will remand him.

[WILLIAMS, J.—But on your own shewing he has committed no crime against the laws of this country, or triable here.]

(5) 1 Stra. 308.

(7) 3 Mau. & Selw. 203.

The Court will remand him, to be dealt with by the Magistrate before whom the requisition was in fact laid.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—That is to say, we are to discharge him from this warrant, and commit him under another.]

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It is unfortunate, and it must be a matter of regret that the first attempt to put this act of parliament in force should have been made in so defective a manner; but we have no power, and the gaoler has no power except that which the act confers. Looking at this warrant we cannot but see that the powers so given by the act are not strictly or properly pursued. This warrant then cannot be maintained, and the prisoner is consequently entitled to his discharge. We are called upon in such a case to remand the prisoner, as being a person accused of a crime; we, however, can only look at the warrant, which is defective; and if the statute is not complied with, which it is not, we have no power at all. It is very fit to be understood, that the application for a habeas is properly made to the power of this court at common law.

The examination stated a birth settlement of the pauper in the appellant parish, and also disclosed facts which shewed a subsequent settlement gained by the pauper in the respondent parish by apprenticeship under an indenture, a copy of which was sent with the examinations. The grounds of appeal were, that the examinations were insufficient, and also that the pauper was settled in the respondent parish by apprenticeship and service under the indenture, as stated in the examinations:—Held, first, that the respondents, at the trial of the appeal, were not estopped or precluded from going into evidence of the birth settlement, by reason of the statement of the subsequent settlement by apprenticeship.—Held, secondly, that the birth settlement having been proved, the binding of the pauper was not admitted, on the examinations and grounds of appeal, so as to render proof of it by the appellants unnecessary; but that the appellants, if they relied on such apprenticeship, were bound to prove the execution of the indenture.

On an appeal against an order of two Justices for the removal of Peter Carter, his wife, and two children, from the township of Warrington, in the county of Lancaster, to the township of Latchford, in Cheshire, the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court on the following in which the following, amongst other examinations, were set out:—

“Richard Carter, of the township of Latchford, in the county of Chester, on his oath, saith, I am sixty-seven years of age; I married my first and present wife Mary, at the parish church at Grappenhall, in the said county, forty-two years ago. I have, by my said wife, a son named Peter, who was born on the 24th day of December in the year 1816, in the township of Latchford aforesaid. When my said son was upwards of eighteen years of age, he was bound apprentice, under a legally stamped indenture, for the period, and until the full end and term of five years, to John Gregory, of the township of Warrington, in the county of Lancaster, shoemaker. I signed the indenture for the binding of my said son Peter Carter; and the mark or cross opposite the first seal, on the indenture now produced, is my mark, and was made at the time above mentioned for the binding of my said son Peter Carter to John Gregory aforesaid. My said son Peter Carter served the said John Gregory, under the said indenture, for upwards of two years and ten months; and in the summer months, my said son slept in the township of Latchford aforesaid, during such service, under the indenture aforesaid; and my said son slept in the township of Warrington in the winter months during his service with his said master, under the indenture aforesaid; my said son Peter served his said master in the township of Warrington, up to and on the 23rd day of December, in the year of our Lord 1837; and my son Peter Carter, on the evening of the said 23rd day of December, in the year of our Lord aforesaid, slept and resided in my house, in the township of Latchford aforesaid. My said son was twenty-one years of age on Sunday, the 24th day of December, in the year aforesaid, and he never served his said master afterwards. Peter Carter (the pauper, and the next person examined,) is my son, and he is now resident in and actually chargeable to the township of Warrington aforesaid."

"Peter Carter, on his oath, saith, I am twenty-seven years of age last birthday; I am the son of the last witness, Richard Carter. On the 16th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1835, being then upwards of eighteen years of age, I bound myself, with the consent and approbation of Richard Carter my father, to John Gregory, of the township of Warrington, cordwainer, for and until the full end and term of five years, under a legally stamped indenture, and which said indenture was duly signed by myself, my said father, and my master, in the presence of each other, and in the presence of Joseph Worrall, of Warrington, who witnessed the same. The indenture now produced is the one under which I was bound an apprentice as aforesaid. I served my said master under the said indenture, from the day of the date of the said indenture, on and until the evening of Saturday, the 23rd day of December in the year 1837, when I left my said master's house about eight o'clock in the evening of the said 23rd day of December last mentioned. During the time I so served my said master, under the indenture aforesaid, I resided and slept at the house of my said father in the township of Latchford, in the county of Chester, in the summer months, and, on the Saturday and Sunday evenings of the winter months, and during the remainder of the winter months, for five nights in each week I resided and slept in the township of Warrington, in the county of Lancaster aforesaid. I resided and slept in the township of Latchford, in the said county of Chester, for more than forty days, during which time I served my said master under the indenture aforesaid; and I resided and slept in the township of Warrington for more than forty days, during which time I served my said master under the indenture aforesaid. After I had served my said master under the said indenture, on the 23rd day of December in the year 1837, I went and slept at the house of my said father, in the township of Latchford aforesaid, on the evening of the said 23rd day of December, and I continued to live and sleep at the house of my said father for upwards of two years after the said 23rd day of December, until I was married to my present wife Margaret, which took place at St. Paul's Church, in the said township of Warrington, about three years ago. I was twenty-one years of age on the evening of the 24th day of December in the year 1837, and I never served my said master under the indenture aforesaid, after the 23rd day of December, in the year last mentioned. I never did any act to gain a settlement by rental, or in any other way, after leaving my said master, and I left him on my arriving at the age of twenty-one years. I never received my said indenture from my master aforesaid.

"Joseph Worrall, of Warrington, on his oath, saith, I have seen the indenture of apprenticeship now produced before the Justices; and the handwriting, 'Josh. Worrall,' as the subscribing witness to the handwriting of the several parties named in the said indenture for the binding of Peter Carter to John Gregory, is my own proper handwriting."

The examination of John Gregory, the master, stated, that Peter Carter was apprenticed to him, but that he could not tell at what period he quitted the service, and that he had delivered the indenture to the overseers of the poor of Warrington, shortly before the removal of the pauper.

A copy of the indenture, which was in the usual form, dated the 16th of February 1835, for apprenticing Peter Carter to John Gregory, and purported to be duly stamped and executed, was sent with the examinations.

The following were (amongst others) grounds of appeal:—first, that the order and examinations, of which copies are sent to us, are bad on the face thereof;—secondly, that the examination whereon the said order of removal was made, is insufficient, and does not contain legal evidence of any settlement having been gained by the paupers or any of them, in our said township of Latchford;—thirdly, that in fact the said paupers, or any of them, are not nor is, and never were or was, legally settled in our said township of Latchford;—fourthly, that the said paupers were at the time of the making the said order, and still are, legally settled in your said township of Warrington, by reason of the said pauper, Peter Carter, having been so apprenticed as in the said examination is stated, and having served under the said indenture of apprenticeship in the said township of Warrington, for more than forty days, and having slept in the said township of Warrington for more than forty days during such service, and on the last night thereof, and by reason of the said township of Warrington being the last place in which the said pauper (Peter Carter) completed the period of forty days' service and residence, under the said indenture of apprenticeship.

On the appeal coming on to be tried, the counsel for the appellants applied to the Court to quash the order, on the ground of insufficiency of the examinations to sustain it, or entitle the respondents to go into evidence in support of it, inasmuch as the examinations shewed that a settlement by apprenticeship had been gained by the pauper, Peter Carter, either in the township of Latchford, or else in the township of Warrington, whereby the birth settlement of the same pauper mentioned in the examinations was merged or destroyed; and that the examinations did not shew that the said settlement by apprenticeship had been gained in Latchford. The Court refused the application, and the counsel for the respondents having proved that the pauper, Peter Carter, was born in the township of Latchford, on the 24th of December, A.D. 1816, stated, he should rely on the birth settlement so proved, and closed the respondents' case, upon which the counsel for the appellants applied to the Court to quash the order, on the ground, that the respondents having in their examinations averred an apprenticeship of the pauper, Peter Carter, with a service under it, and residence during such service, sufficient to confer a settlement either in Latchford or else in Warrington, which apprenticeship was admitted, and which service and residence were not denied in the appellants' grounds of appeal, the birth settlement had been suppressed or destroyed by the settlement by apprenticeship, and that the respondents having relied on the birth settlement, had failed to support their order. The Court ruled against the application, and called on the counsel for the appellants to go into their case. The appellants' counsel then called the pauper (Peter Carter), who proved that he had served John Gregory, of Warrington, from the 16th of February 1835, until the evening of Saturday, the 23rd of December 1837. That during the time he so served, he resided and slept in Latchford, in the summer months, and in Warrington in the winter months; and that during such service he had slept more than forty days in each of those townships; that he slept in Warrington on the night of Friday, the 22nd of December 1837; that when he left his master's house, on the evening of Saturday, the 23rd of December 1837, he had resolved not to return to his service under his apprenticeship; and that for a year previously he had fully determined to vacate his apprenticeship, as soon as by law he should be able to do so. This being the appellants' case, the counsel for the respondents contended that it failed, inasmuch as no apprenticeship had been proved, the indenture not having been produced or accounted for. The appellants' counsel contended, that the valid binding of the pauper (Peter Carter) to the said John Gregory, by indenture of apprenticeship, of which a copy was set out in the examinations, having been averred in the examinations by the respondents, and having been admitted by the appellants in their fourth ground of appeal, was so admitted for all purposes at the trial; and that the appellants could not be required to prove such binding. The Court found that the said Peter Carter served his apprenticeship with the said John Gregory, from the 16th day of February 1835 till the 23rd day of December 1837, and had slept in Warrington on the night of the 22nd of December 1837, and had slept and inhabited in Warrington aforesaid more than forty days, while so serving the said John Gregory, under the said indentures, and had attained his majority, and avoided his apprenticeship on the 23rd day of December in the same year, and that Warrington was the place of his last legal settlement, acquired under the said indenture; but the Court ruled, that the fact that the said Peter Carter having been bound apprentice to the said John Gregory, was not admitted on the examinations and grounds of appeal, so as to render proof thereof by the appellants unnecessary, and therefore confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench, on the following points, that is to say: Firstly, whether the examinations were sufficient to entitle the respondents to go into their case; secondly, whether the fact of the said Peter Carter having been bound apprentice to the said John Gregory, was not admitted on the examinations and grounds of appeal, so as to render it unnecessary that the appellants should prove the binding. If the Court should be of opinion that the examinations were not sufficient to entitle the respondents to go into evidence in support of the order, or if the Court should be of opinion that the fact of the said Peter Carter's having been bound apprentice to the said John Gregory, was admitted by the examinations and grounds of appeal, so as to render proof of the fact by the appellants unnecessary, then the said order was to be quashed; otherwise confirmed.

Crompton, in support of the order of Sessions.—What objection can be made to the respondents going into their case? A good birth settlement is shewn. Then it is said, that they are to be estopped by the subsequent statement of an apprenticeship in the examination. That, however, would be most unreasonable, as they are bound to send all—The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Outwell (1). It may be, that the respondent parish does not mean to rely on some of the facts stated by the witnesses. Then, secondly, the appellants cannot adopt a part of what is stated in the examinations, and avail themselves of it without proof. It is a fallacy to say, that it is an admission of or statement by the party to the appeal; and even if it were, an admission by the party would not dispense with the proof of a deed in the regular manner—Cunliffe v. Sefton (2), Call v. Dunning (3). In Slatterie v. Pooley (4), the admission of a party was received in evidence, although that admission was also contained in a written instrument; but it is settled law, that neither the execution or validity of a deed can be established by a party's admission. The Justices may have relied on the birth settlement, for the very reason that they did not believe the attesting witness to the indenture, or because the indenture was void.

Pashley, contra.—The Court will compel a full statement of all the facts, in order to carry out the intention of the legislature; but these statements are of no use if the parties may depart from them at the trial; and all estoppels are mutual.

[COLERIDGE, J.—How can you narrow the appellants' proof by your grounds of appeal? According to your argument, the appellants might, by making out a case to admit to the other side, make a case for themselves. Suppose they had said, We deny your birth settlement, but admit your apprenticeship; then, when the respondents came to dispute the apprenticeship, could the appellants turn round and say, You cannot dispute that, for we have admitted it?]

In The Queen v. the Inhabitants of St. John, Margate (5), the appellants were precluded from disputing the signature of an indenture of apprenticeship, when they had in their notice disputed the validity only. Here the examinations themselves disclose a settlement in Warrington—The King v. Ribchester (6), and it would be very hard to put the appellants to prove the respondents' statements. In The King v. St. Mary, Beverley (7), the Court say, "To justify the confirmation of an order of removal, it ought to appear on the evidence adduced by the respondents, that the party is settled in the parish to which the removal is made." The same rule must now be taken to apply to examinations.

[COLERIDGE, J.—The respondent parish is bound to send all the examinations. They cannot help doing so. It is for the appellant parish to dispute or admit.]

The respondents, who send the examinations, are as much bound by them, as a party is by the contents of an affidavit, which he uses (8).

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I think there can be no doubt on the first point, that the respondents were entitled to go into their case. They are bound to give the whole of the facts proved before the Justices; and it is enough to shew that some one ground of settlement is good and requires an answer. Then secondly, as to the supposed admissions, I own I am not quite satisfied with what took place, as I think that the respondents should by some means or other, have informed the appellants that they did not mean to rely on the apprenticeship as a ground of removal, as it is likely that the other party may have been deceived. But though I should have liked the case better if they had so done, and it might have been, perhaps, accomplished by some communication between the attornies, yet I cannot say that in point of law, this was necessary. The act of parliament confines the evidence to be given at the sessions to the examinations and grounds of appeal. And I think that when the respondents have made out any settlement that appears in the examinations, that is sufficient. If the appellants rely on any other, stated in the examinations, they must take it as their own case, and prove it in the ordinary way. The order of Sessions must be confirmed.

WILLIAMS, J.—I think it is a perversion of terms to say that the examinations are in the nature of admissions. This Court has decided, that all the examinations must be sent, and the pauper's examination would of course be taken. If the party is not only to take the examinations, but also be bound by them, he would be estopped from setting up matter which he could prove, and called upon to prove that which he had no means of proving. As to the notice of appeal, you cannot take that to be in the nature of an admission by the respondent, and it can be none for the purpose of the cause; and as my Lord has said, the facts stated in it, be they what they may, must be proved in the ordinary way.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. The first question the Sessions ask, is whether the examinations are sufficient? The settlement first put forth is a birth settlement, and there is ample statement of a good birth settlement; but it is contended that the same examinations go on to disclose a good subsequent settlement by apprenticeship elsewhere. But what are the respondents to do? are they to be precluded from going into their case because a witness goes on to state something in addition to his first statement? It may be that the apprenticeship is imperfect, and not to be relied on as a settlement, by reason of the indenture not being properly stamped, or on other grounds. As to the second point, I certainly entertain no doubt whatever. Of course it is to be assumed that all the provisions of the statute are to be taken to be carried out with perfect good faith; but what in point of law are the provisions of the legislature? The removing parish is bound to hear the whole of the examinations, but by so doing they cannot be said to admit anything hostile to their own order. Then the appellants send their notice: no doubt they may admit as much as they please, but they cannot compel the respondents to admit any fact of their own case, and limit the ground of contest to anything they like, by merely saying so. It would lead to great injustice if it were so held. They might in such case admit an indenture which they knew to be invalid, and save themselves from some proof which they knew they could not give.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It is too clear for argument that respondents are not shut out from the birth settlement; but then it is said that by sending a statement of something which appears to be a subsequent settlement, they have admitted it. But it is to be observed that this matter is not an averment of theirs, but all that can be said is, that having set up a birth settlement, they send an examination which contains other matter.

Order of Sessions confirmed.

Pashley then applied to have the rule for quashing the order of Sessions discharged, without any judgment of the Court as to the confirmation of the order.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The rule having been obtained to quash the order, the effect of the discharge of that rule must be to confirm the order; and this will carry out the provisions of the statute 5 Geo. 2. c. 19. s. 2. It is right that parties who bring up orders of Sessions, for the purpose of quashing them, should know that they do it at the peril of paying costs.

1844. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS
Jan. 20.* } OF WHITWICK.

Examination—Statement in, of Subsequent Settlement in a third Parish.

Where an order of removal is made from parish A. to parish B, upon examinations which shew evidence of a settlement in the latter parish, the Sessions cannot refuse to go into such evidence, on the ground that the examinations disclose a subsequent settlement in parish C.

Upon an appeal against an order of two Justices, for the removal of Samuel Goacher, his wife, and children, from the parish of Whitwick, in the county of Leicester, to the parish of Shineton, in the county of Salop, the Sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court, upon a case which set out the following, amongst other examinations.

Samuel Goacher, the pauper, (after stating a hiring at a colliery, in Coleorton, when he was ten years of age,) said, "I am forty-two years of age; about fifteen years ago I was in distress, and applied to Coleorton parish for relief, and the parish officers of Coleorton relieved me; but I have never been relieved by the parish of Coleorton, whilst residing out of the parish except about eight years ago, when I was living in Whitwick parish, my wife was suffering from a miscarriage, and I applied to Mr. T. Ager, the parish officer of Coleorton, for assistance. He gave me a paper to go to a doctor, who thereupon attended my wife; but I received no money, or anything else but the doctor's free attendance upon my wife."

Mary Wardle, widow, said, "I am the mother of Samuel Goacher, the pauper. I married my first husband, John Goacher, the father of the pauper, at Coleorton Church. About forty-three years ago the pauper was born at Coleorton. My first husband was legally settled in Shineton. When he lay ill, about twenty-six years ago, I received relief from Shineton parish, whilst we were living in Coleorton. I received 2s. 6d. weekly, but that not being enough for our support I went to Shineton, and saw a person who said he was the parish officer. I asked him to give us more than 2s. 6d.; he refused to do so, but gave me 5s. to carry me home. I received this relief afterwards for a long time. My son, the pauper, was then a member of my family, and was not emancipated. He was about sixteen years of age."

The grounds of appeal (amongst others) were, secondly, that upon the facts stated in the examination of Samuel Goacher, the settlement of the paupers appears to be in Coleorton; thirdly, that as stated in the examination, the parish officers of Coleorton admitted the paupers to be settled in their parish, by employing a medical practitioner to attend the said Samuel Goacher's wife, during her illness, while she was residing in the parish of Whitwick.

On the hearing of the appeal, the counsel for the respondents proposed to call Mary Wardle, to prove the settlement of the paupers in Shineton.

The counsel for the appellants contended, that such evidence could not be received, on the ground, first, that the examination disclosed no settlement in Shineton; and that if such settlement were disclosed, still on the face of the examination a subsequent settlement appeared to have been gained by Samuel Goacher at Coleorton by service, and also by relief given to his wife, whilst residing in the parish of Whitwick.

The Court of Quarter Sessions rejected the evidence, on the ground that a subsequent settlement in Coleorton by relief was disclosed on the examinations, subject to the opinion of the Court as to whether they were right in quashing the order of removal on the above ground.

Macaulay, in support of the order of Sessions.—Here the examinations distinctly disclose a settlement in the third parish. The question is, whether, supposing all the facts proved, the pauper was rightly removed to Shineton.

Hildgard and White, contra, were not heard.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I think the Sessions were clearly wrong in this case. There was evidence of a settlement in the appellant parish, and they should have proceeded to hear it.

BAIL COURT. }
1844. } Re JOHN GRAY AND HUGH
Nov. 12, 13. } BLANEY.

Commitment—Statutes 6 Geo. 3. c. 25, and 4 Geo. 4. c. 34. s. 3.—Order—Conviction.

A warrant of commitment under 6 Geo. 3. c. 25, or 4 Geo. 4. c. 34. s. 3, which does not recite a separate conviction, is in effect a conviction, and must shew that on the hearing the evidence was given upon oath, in the presence of the defendant.

Therefore such a warrant, stating that the defendant was brought before the Justice, and the said Justice duly thereupon, then and there, in the presence as well of the said J. J. (the complainant) as of the said J. G. (the defendant), did examine and inquire into the proofs and allegations of the said parties, touching the said complaint, held bad.

Quære—Whether such a commitment is not in effect a conviction, and therefore ought to set out the evidence, and have the other requisite formalities of a conviction.

John Gray and Hugh Blaney, being imprisoned in the house of correction at Salford, in the county of Lancaster, writs of habeas corpus had been obtained to bring them up, in order that they might be discharged. The gaoler, as to John Gray, returned the following commitment, under the hand and seal of the Hon. Colin Lindsay, as the ground of his detention:—

“County of Lancaster.—To the constables of Aspull, in the said county, and to the keeper of the house of correction at Salford, in the said county, and each of them.—Whereas, information and complaint having been made unto me, the Hon. Colin Lindsay, one of Her Majesty’s Justices of the Peace in and for the said county, and residing within the same county, by John Johnson, of Aspull, in the said county, coal-master, upon the oath of the said John Johnson, that John Gray, of Aspull, in the said county, collier, did contract with the said John Johnson to serve him, as a collier, at his works in Aspull, aforesaid, for the term of twelve months from the 21st day of September last, and did afterwards, to wit, on the 22nd of September last, enter into the said service; and did afterwards, to wit, on the 2nd day of October, A.D. 1844, absent himself from his said service before the term of his said contract was completed, contrary to the form of the statute in that case made and provided. And whereas, in pursuance of the statute in that case made and provided, the said John Gray was, on this 11th day of October, at Wigan, in the said county, duly brought before me to answer the said complaint; and I, the said Justice, duly thereupon, then and there, in the presence as well of the said John Johnson as of the said John Gray, did examine and inquire into the proofs and allegations of the said parties touching the matter of the said complaint, and upon due consideration had thereof, I have adjudged and determined that the said John Gray did contract with the said John Johnson to serve him as a collier, for the said term of twelve months, and did afterwards, before the term of his said contract was completed, to wit, on the said 2nd day of October, in the year aforesaid, unlawfully absent himself from his said service, contrary to the form of the statute in that case made; and I do, therefore, convict him, the said John Gray, of the offence and misdemeanour aforesaid. These are, therefore, to command you, the said constables, forthwith to convey the said John Gray to the said house of correction, at Salford aforesaid, and to deliver him to the keeper thereof, together with this warrant; and you, the said keeper, to receive the said John Gray into your custody, in the house of correction, and him there safely to keep for the space of three months from the date hereof; and for your so doing this shall be your sufficient warrant. Given under my hand and seal, &c., in the year of our Lord 1844.”

The warrant of commitment in the case of Blaney was similar, with the exception that it stated an adjudication that he had entered into the service: he was not, however, brought up, it being agreed that his case should abide the result of Gray’s writ.

Bodkin and Huddleston now moved for the discharge of the prisoners, upon the ground that, in the first place, the warrant of commitment was, in fact, a conviction, In re Tordoff (1), and, therefore, was bad, inasmuch as it did not shew that the evidence at the time of the conviction was given upon oath, in the presence of the defendants — The King v. Crowther (2), Dalton, c. 6. s. 6, The Queen v. Lewis (3), Paley on Convictions, p. 42.

PATTERSON, J. then called upon—

Cowling, to support the commitment.—The Queen v. Lewis is not law, and is the only authority which can be cited in support of the objection. In re Tordoff has no bearing upon it, the only question raised in that case being as to the necessity for shewing that the defendant was present at the time the case was heard, which, beyond all doubt, appears on this warrant. Then, the commitment of Gray is an order, and not a conviction under 6 Geo. 3. c. 25. s. 4, and not a proceeding under 4 Geo. 4. c. 84. s. 3, inasmuch as it is not stated that he had entered into the service. There is this distinction between a conviction and an order and adjudication like the present, that the former requires the evidence to be set out, and it will be most strictly construed; whereas, the same strict formalities are not required in the latter, and intendment will be made in favour of it.

[PATTERSON, J.—I do not regard mere terms in the least, for, whether this be an order or commitment, or conviction, I wish to know whether a Magistrate can order a man to be imprisoned for an offence, without shewing that he has heard the evidence on oath? I do not know whether the omission to set out the evidence has ever been objected to, but it would take a great deal to convince me, that where a statute gives a power to imprison, an instrument like this must not possess the requisites of a conviction.]

This statute is not of a public but private nature: its object was to make regulations between the workmen and their masters, and it was passed for purposes of private discipline; an order therefore is the more appropriate document. The best mode of ascertaining its real nature is to look to the statute itself, which, in sect. 5, speaks of it as an order. That an instrument like this may be treated as such, is clear from The King v. Bissex (4), which was an adjudication under the statute 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. s. 4, inflicting penalties for fraudulently removing goods; yet that was held to be an order only, and the ruling was confirmed in The King v. the Justices of Cheshire (5). Lord Denman's judgment there is precisely in point. In The King v. the Justices of Staffordshire (6), it was held, under this very statute, that an instrument like the present was an order, and not a conviction; and that, consequently, the defendant was not entitled to appeal against it. In p. 576, Le Blanc, J. compares it to a proceeding under the Vagrant Act, 17 Geo. 2. c. 5, which is always by an order. The judgment, also, of Parke, B., in Johnson v. Reid (7), confirms that, and shews that there need be no conviction. Then, if it be an order, it is not necessary it should either set out the evidence, or state that the evidence was taken upon oath; for every intendment will be made in favour of it, and the statement that the evidence was taken, will be assumed to mean in the regular manner. Thus, in Munger Hunger v. Warden (8), an objection was taken to an order of removal (which must be made upon evidence taken on oath) that it was alleged to be made upon due examination, and not upon oath; yet the Court held it to be sufficient, and observed that due examination imported an examination on oath.

[PATTERSON, J.—That is a very different proceeding, being entirely ex parte; but here a party is to be deprived of his liberty, without the power of cross-examining the witnesses produced against him, under a statute of a highly penal character.]

If it were necessary to state this, it would also be necessary to set out the evidence; yet no case has ever decided that, and In re Tordoff gives no support to such a proposition. Neither, in truth, was it necessary to decide the point contended for in The Queen v. Lewis, for there the same objection existed as in In re Tordoff, and there were various other fatal objections apparent upon the face of the instrument. That case, therefore, was never fully argued, and cannot be treated as an authority. The King v. Bissex shews that every intendment will be made in favour of an order, and none against it; and this is confirmed by The King v. Davis (9).

[PATTESON, J.—I do not at all go along with you in your argument. The distinction you make is very ingenious, but it is quite contrary to common sense, and my mind is not capable of understanding it. The statute enables Magistrates to hear and determine the complaint, and to inflict a very severe punishment upon persons; and I say, that this is clearly a judgment and commitment in one and the same document. Then, that is to all intents and purposes the same as a conviction. In In re Tordoff the defect was, that it did not appear that the evidence had been taken in the presence of the defendant—but here that appears to have been done: whether it must be stated to have been taken on oath, requires more consideration.]

Bodkin and Huddleston then urged, among other objections, that there was no statement that the defendant had entered under the agreement, or in pursuance of it: that the terms of the contract were not set out, so that the Court might see whether it was a case within the statute; and cited Ex parte Johnson (10), Lancaster v. Greaves (11), Ex parte Fuller (12), Lowther v. Lord Radnor (13), Deybel's case (14), and Nash's case (15). That the evidence was not set out—In re Tordoff, and that the commitment did not shew where the defendant contracted. With respect to the objection which had been argued, they observed that it was quite consistent with the statement in the commitment, that the Magistrate might have read over to himself the information, and then called on the party to answer it; that it did not appear that a single witness had been sworn, and the whole proceeding might have been without the sanction of an oath; that where such penal consequences were to be the result, the Court would make no intendment against liberty; and even if this were not strictly a conviction, but a species of order, still it was an order of commitment in the nature of a conviction, which required greater particularity.

Cowling, in answer to the other objections, quoted Ex parte Ormerod (16), Com. Dig. tit. 'Pleader,' c. 18, and Bancks v. Camp (17).

PATTESON, J.—I was desirous of hearing the argument out, upon all the objections, because one or two of them struck me; but Mr. Cowling has satisfied me upon them, to this extent, that I do not think that any of them, independently of the principal objection first argued, are such as I should deem proper to act upon. I therefore express no decided opinion upon any of them, for the real question seems to depend upon the principal objection. Now, looking at these two convictions or commitments, the one relating to Blaney, the other to Gray, I confess I cannot bring my mind to believe that the Magistrate was proceeding upon the 6 Geo. 3. c. 25, in the latter case. It may be so; but I am not satisfied that it was so, because I find in the first of these convictions, he distinctly states that there was a complaint made that Blaney had contracted, and had entered upon the service, and that he absented himself from the service; and he goes on and adjudicates that he had so contracted, and had so entered the service, and that he had absented himself. In the second of these convictions, precisely the same complaint, that Gray had contracted, and had entered the service, and had absented himself, is stated; but the adjudication is only that he had contracted and had absented himself. I have no doubt the entering into the service was accidentally omitted by the clerk to the Magistrate; and now it suits the purpose to say the commitment was upon the earlier act. I do not, however, think it signifies at all, and I only mention it, because it is not quite right, or honest, or proper, to attempt to fall back on the 6 Geo. 3. c. 25, and make me believe it was purposely omitted. Let us have fair dealing in these matters, if we can, though it is not very often the case that we have it. But the real question seems to me to turn upon this, whether or not it was necessary that it should appear upon the conviction, that the examination of the witnesses before the Magistrate was upon oath. Now, looking at the two cases, The Queen v. Lewis, and In re Tordoff, they go the whole length of shewing that this is bad upon the face of it. I myself cannot understand, that, because an act of parliament is drawn, as, I am sorry to say, most of them are, imperfectly and loosely, and it is not stated, as it ought to have been, that the party might be brought before a Magistrate, and convicted by him, and that he should sentence him upon that conviction; that, because the act of parliament puts it altogether, and says, in general words, he may do this, therefore I am to be told it is not a conviction, but an order. That is not the right way of construing an act of parliament. If an act of parliament says an offence shall be committed by certain acts, and a Magistrate shall have power to commit and punish for that offence, then I say, that any instrument by which the Magistrate says the party was brought before him and convicted, is a conviction. I must confess I am at a loss to understand why the Magistrate, in this document, after saying, I find the man guilty, and do convict him of the offence, stops there, and does not go on, and say, I do adjudge that for such offence he shall suffer such and such punishment. That is the usual way; but instead of that, he says, I hereby direct the gaoler to keep him for a certain time; so that the adjudication of the punishment does not run in the form of an adjudication, but is merely a direction to the gaoler to keep him for a particular time. Whether that is done with a view of trying to make it an order, and not a conviction, I do not know, but it cannot have such an effect. I am not yet driven to determine the point whether it is necessary to set out the evidence; and I am unwilling to go further than the case renders it absolutely necessary: that is a point which will be raised some of these days, and perhaps it is fitting it should be; but, sitting here alone, I ought not to express an opinion upon it where the case does not require it. I think it does not arise here; for let us see what it is the Magistrate states. The commitment recites that complaint was made upon oath, that the party was brought before him to answer that complaint; and then he says, "and I, the said Justice, duly thereupon, in the presence as well of the said John Johnson as of the said John Gray, did examine and inquire into the proofs and allegations of the said parties touching the matter of the said complaints." Am I to infer that there were witnesses called and examined upon oath, in the presence of the party, or not? If I am, I must infer it from the word "proofs," for the word "allegations" may mean an allegation in writing, or by word of mouth, or an argument of law, or an assertion of fact; it is a very vague and uncertain word. If the word "proofs" means legal proof upon oath, then there is something in it; but I cannot infer that clearly, as it may be that the Magistrate may have thought it sufficient if he read over the complaint to the party, and did not examine the witness again; and it may be that the person who made the complaint would not be able to prove the facts. It ought to have appeared upon the face of the document that there had been witnesses examined upon oath, in the presence of the party; and the conviction is therefore bad. The objection in In re Tordoff was, that it did not appear that the examination was in the presence of the party. In The Queen v. Lewis, although the same objection might have been taken, the objection was, that the examination did not appear to have been on oath; here the parties have avoided the defect which was fatal in the first case, and stumbled on the defect in the last. Taking those cases together, I think I must consider the law to be, that, in convictions under this act of parliament, where there is a conviction and commitment in one document, it is necessary it should appear that the examination took place in the presence of the party; and that the examination was upon oath. I think, therefore, the party is entitled to be discharged; and as the same objection applies to both these convictions, I need not give any opinion as to whether the other objections can or cannot be supported. I have taken the opportunity since yesterday of mentioning the case to the other Judges, and they quite agree with me. I say this, in order that the matter may be considered to have been decided.

 1844. } In re NESBITT.
 Nov. 13. }

Warrant of Apprehension—Jurisdiction—Ireland—Riot—Rescue.

A warrant of the Court of Quarter Sessions for Tipperary, dated the 20th day of October 1804, stated, that A. B. stood indicted, in the peace office of that county, for a rescue and a riot, and commanded the police of that county to apprehend, "and him so apprehended in safe custody keep, so that you may have his body before her Majesty's Justices of the Peace at the next Sessions, at &c., to be held in the said county on the 13th of January next:"—Held, that it did not disclose jurisdiction, as the words "peace office" did not shew in what court the indictment was pending.—Held, also, that it was bad, as the Sessions had no power to authorize the police to keep the defendant in their custody till the next sessions.

Held also, that the Court would take judicial notice that the common law of England extended to Ireland, and that "a riot" was a sufficient statement of an offence: but semble that "a rescue" alone would not be sufficient.

The Rev. J. M. Nesbitt having been arrested by the police of the city of London, a writ of habeas corpus had been obtained, upon which he was now brought up, and to which the sergeant of police returned that he detained him under the following warrant:—

"County of Tipperary, to wit.—By the worshipful the Justices of the Peace at the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, held at Thurles, in and for the county of Tipperary, the 28th day of October 1844. Whereas James Meade Nesbitt, late of Borrisokane, in the county of Tipperary, stands indicted in the peace office of the county of Tipperary, for a rescue at the prosecution of Martin Corbon and John Morgan, and also for a riot, for which he has not as yet received his trial. These are, therefore, in her Majesty's name, strictly to charge and command the police of the county of Tipperary forthwith to apprehend the said James Meade Nesbitt, if he may be found in the said county of Tipperary, and him so apprehended in safe custody keep, so that you may have his body before her Majesty's Justices of the Peace at the next Sessions of Nenagh, to be held in said county, on the 13th day of January next, to answer for the said offence; and this shall be your warrant. Dated as above.

"John Ponsonby Pretty, clerk of the peace.

"To the police of the county of Tipperary."

This was indorsed "To all constables of the Metropolitan Police Office, and all others whom it may concern.—Metropolitan Police district, to wit.—Let this warrant be executed within the said district, proof, upon oath, having been made before me, one of the Magistrates of the Police Office, Bow Street, of the due signature and hand-writing of the above-named John Ponsonby Pretty. Given under my hand, at the Police Court, Bow Street, this 8th day of November 1844.

"D. Jardine."

Humfrey, Bodkin, and Sturgeon, on behalf of the prisoner, stated and urged the following objections to this warrant and indorsement. First, that the clerk of the peace for a county has no power to issue a warrant of apprehension; secondly, that the statute 44 Geo. 3. c. 92. s. 3, was intended to reach only those persons who escaped from some place in Ireland to England, and that it did not appear that the defendant was such a person; thirdly, that it did not appear that either of the offences committed was an offence against the law of Ireland; fourthly, that the Court could not put any construction upon the words "peace office," and that it did not shew that the defendant stood indicted in any court within the jurisdiction of the Sessions; fifthly, that the warrant ought to have stated that the defendant had not appeared and been admitted to bail, it being consistent with the warrant that he might be exempt from liability to apprehension at the time, on the ground of having found bail; sixthly, that the indorsement was made under the statute 24 Geo. 2. c. 55, which did not relate to offences committed in Ireland.

Dowdeswell, in support of the return.—This is not the warrant of the clerk of the peace, but the warrant of the Court of Quarter Sessions, of which that person is the officer, and merely certifies their act. The Court of Quarter Sessions is an ancient court of record, and the right to issue process necessary for the conduct of matters depending in it is incident to, and implied by the establishment of every such court, and hence the Sessions have authority to issue warrants to bring before them persons against whom indictments have been placed upon their records. These courts in Ireland differ in no respect as to jurisdiction from the same courts in England; the form of the commission to the Magistrates is the same; the time of holding them is prescribed by 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 31; and their power to issue process, and to deal with misdemeanours like the present, is recognized by 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 48. The clerk of the peace is the person who is to record their acts, and the proper organ to express their will. This brings the argument to the fourth objection, that the term "peace office" is not known to the law; but no one can doubt to what office that has reference—it evidently means the office of the clerk of the peace. It may not be the most accurate technical description, but it is perfectly intelligible, and that will suffice. The office of the clerk of the peace is well known; he is directed to be appointed by the Custos Rotulorum to keep the records of the sessions under 1 Geo. 4. c. 27, and he is thereby made their officer. His powers are pointed out and recognized in numerous subsequent statutes, which are collected in Oulton's Index. His office would therefore be the place of deposit for an indictment found at the Sessions; and it is doing no violence to the language to say, that as the word "indicted" imports the presentment of a grand jury, the expression "stands indicted in the peace office," means that an indictment against the party was lying in the office of the clerk of the peace. Then, as to the third objection, the term "riot" is a term and an offence known to the law, and is defined by Hawkins, book 1, c. 65. In a warrant of apprehension, which is mere process, strict technicality is never required, and it might be contended, that the term "rescue" would be sufficient. The form of warrants, in Wilkes's case (1), and The King v. Wyndham (2), was equally general with this, yet was held to be good; and it is laid down in 1 Hale

P.C. 583, 2 Hale, 123, Hawkins, bk. 1. c. 19. s. 24, Hawkins, bk. 2. c. 13, 2 Co. Inst. 52, that a warrant need not describe the offence with any technical nicety. The King v. Kendal (3) and Crofton's case (4) are instances of this nature. In The King v. Judd (5), "wilfully and maliciously setting fire to a parcel of unthreshed wheat" was considered enough to justify the Court in requiring the defendant to find bail. As to the suggestion that a riot is not an offence against the law of Ireland, the Court will not assume such an act not to be illegal in any civilized country; but even if it would, it cannot do so here, for the Court will take judicial notice of the law of Ireland in this respect. It is laid down in Co. Litt. 141, that the common law of England was introduced into Ireland by King John, and in 2 Co. Inst. p. 2, that, "by Poyning's laws, made anno 11 Hen. 7, all the laws and statutes of this realm were made to extend to Ireland." Then a riot was an offence against the common law of England, and consequently now is an offence against the law of Ireland. It was not necessary for the warrant to state that the defendant had not appeared and been bailed; as those facts would form a good cause to be shewn by him for his discharge, the Court will not assume them to have occurred. In the ordinary process of the superior courts, there are various matters which would entitle a party to his discharge, none of which are negatived in the writ. Prima facie, a person against whom such a charge as this is subsisting is liable to be arrested, and it is unnecessary for the Magistrate, issuing the warrant, to negative all possible means by which he may be lawfully at large. Those circumstances lie in the knowledge of the accused, and he must advance them. It never can be contended, that the warrant need negative that the defendant has been pardoned, or that he has been tried before for the same offence. The indorsement is also perfectly regular under the statutes 44 Geo. 3. c. 92, 45 Geo. 3. c. 92, 54 Geo. 3. c. 186, and 13 Geo. 3. c. 31. The first of those statutes, in the 3rd section, although in the recital it refers only to malefactors making their escape from Ireland into England, yet in the enacting part declares, that if any person, against whom a warrant shall have issued, shall "escape, go into, reside, or be" in any part of England, he shall be liable to be arrested under it when indorsed by a Magistrate in England. The enacting part is therefore larger than the recital; it includes every case; and certainly the present. By that statute no formal proof of the execution of, or signature to the warrant was necessary, and this appears to have been considered an objection, for in the next session 45 Geo. 3. c. 92. was passed, which by section 6. required that the person indorsing should not act until the seal, signet, and signature of the Court, Judge, or Justice, who issued the warrant, were proved upon oath. The necessity for this proof, however, seems soon to have been found inconvenient, and that section is expressly repealed by 54 Geo. 3. c. 186. s. 1; and by sect. 2. it is enacted, that all warrants issued in Ireland shall be acted upon in the same manner as warrants under 13 Geo. 3. c. 31, which related to the execution in England, of warrants made in Scotland, and vice versa. By that statute no formal proof is required, and the Magistrate, therefore, in the present instance, might satisfy himself in any way he pleased; and he acted judiciously in requiring and acting upon the proof mentioned in 24 Geo. 2. c. 55, if it could be afforded him. The circumstance of his having pursued the forms of that act will not vitiate his indorsement, the allegation as to proof being mere surplusage. By the statute 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71. s. 1, the Magistrates of the Metropolitan Police Courts are declared to be Justices of the Peace for Middlesex, and several other counties; and by the London Police Act, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 94. s. 23, their warrants may be executed in London without indorsement.

Humfrey, in reply.—The indorsement is altogether informal and improper, for there is no statement contained in it of any proof of the authority of the person whose name it bears to issue it, and this ought to be shewn to have been established by legal evidence before the Magistrate. It could not have been the intention of the legislature, that Magistrates should back warrants without some legal evidence before them, that the person professing to grant them had legal authority; but, at all events, it ought to be shewn affirmatively and expressly, that he was satisfied the defendant was a malefactor who had escaped from Ireland, of which there is not a particle of evidence. In the absence of any legislative declaration as to the proof of these facts, and the means by which they are to be established, the Court will imply that legal evidence of them should be adduced.

[PATTESON, J.—The warrant directs the police of the county of Tipperary forthwith to apprehend the defendant, and him so apprehended in safe custody to keep until the next session, on the 13th of January. What right could they have to keep him? They have no prison. What authority is there for saying that the police could exercise such a power? The usual form of our warrants directs the officer to take the person before a Magistrate in order that he may be bailed; but this could not be done under a warrant like this.]

Under this warrant he must, at all events, be detained till the next sessions, and could have no relief in the interval, and it is like the warrant in Doswell v. Impey (6), where a commitment under the Bankruptcy Act until dealt with in due course of law, or until the party should submit himself to the major part of the commissioners, was held bad.

Dowdeswell suggested, that upon the apprehension of an offender, it was the duty of the officer to carry him to the county prison, there to be confined until the time appointed for the hearing, and then to carry him before the Justices, and this was the custody meant by the warrant—Hawk. b. 2. s. 9; that the right of the party to be bailed need not be mentioned in a warrant, any more than in the body of civil process, it being an implied exception, and that, at all events, a mere inapt conclusion would not vitiate a warrant of apprehension—1 Hale, 595, 609.

PATTESON, J.—I certainly am bound to take judicial notice that the common law of England prevails in Ireland. Then this warrant further states that the party stands indicted for a rescue and a riot. With respect to the first, I cannot say that it is an offence, since it may be for the rescue of any criminal whatever; a riot, however, is more specific, and as that was an offence at common law, I think I must take it to be an offence against the law of Ireland. In that respect, therefore, the warrant may be right, but there are two objections to the warrant, which, it appears to me, must prevail in this country. The first is, that it states that the defendant stands indicted in the peace office for the county of Tipperary. The term "peace office" has no distinct and certain meaning; I am unable to say what it is, and I cannot therefore see that the indictment has been preferred so as to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessions. It is altogether a most extraordinary document, and unlike anything I have ever seen. If a warrant in this country issues for the apprehension of persons against whom indictments have been found, they are under the seal of the Court, and state that the defendants have not yet appeared or pleaded; and this is reasonable, for the warrant ought not to issue if he were out on bail; but here there is nothing to shew in what court he is indicted, or that he has not appeared and been bailed, and upon that ground has a perfect right to be at liberty. The last defect, however, is quite fatal. It directs the whole body of the police of Tipperary to apprehend the defendant, and keep him in custody, "so that you may have his body before Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, at the next sessions, to be held on the 13th of January." This is a proceeding quite contrary to law. No Magistrate can give such a power to the police, for they have no prison, and he cannot create a custody wholly unknown to the law. The sheriff is the person who ought to have the custody of offenders, and they must be either placed in his custody, or they must be let out on bail. This, therefore, is a custody which the law does not authorize, and being illegal the prisoner must be discharged.

Prisoner discharged.

BAIL COURT. }
1844. } THE QUEEN v. THE RECORDER
Nov. 20. } OF BOLTON.

Master and Servant—Statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 56—Appeal—Costs—Estreating Recognizances.

Under statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, ss. 8. & 20. the Court of Quarter Sessions has no power to enter and hear an appeal at the instance of the respondent, although the party convicted may have given notice of appeal, and entered into a recognizance, upon failure of the appellant to appear; nor has the Court any power to give costs to the respondents upon failure by the party convicted to enter and try. The only remedy for those costs is by estreating the recognizances.

NEW SERIES, XIV.—MAG. CAS.

Semble—where the defendant has not been imprisoned before an appeal under that statute, upon his failing to support the appeal, the convicting Justices may commit him to gaol to undergo his punishment.

A rule nisi had been obtained, calling upon the Recorder of Bolton to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, requiring him to enter continuances, and hear and determine an appeal against the conviction of one William Barlow, under the statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. s. 8, or to affirm the said conviction, or to award such costs to be paid by the said William Barlow, as may appear to be reasonable.

It appeared upon the affidavit, that W. Barlow having been convicted and sentenced to one month's imprisonment under that statute, on the 15th of July, entered into a recognizance and gave notice of appeal on the same day, and consequently was discharged at once. On the 22nd of October he gave notice of abandonment, and the Sessions were held on the 24th. By the practice of the Sessions three clear days' notice of abandonment ought to be given. The defendant did not appear, in the first instance, at the Sessions, whereupon a motion was made on behalf of the prosecutor, to enter the appeal and confirm the conviction, and obtain the costs. This application was opposed on behalf of Barlow, the defendant, and the Recorder thought he had no power to grant it, and therefore refused it.

Against this rule, on behalf of the Recorder,

Baines shewed cause.—The statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. s. 20. declares, "that if any person shall think himself or herself aggrieved by the order or judgment of any two Justices before whom he or she shall be convicted of any offence under that act, such person may appeal, and the Justices are to make known to him or her, his or her right to appeal to the next Quarter Sessions, such person, at the time of such conviction, giving to such Justices notice in writing of his or her intention to appeal, and also entering into a recognizance with sufficient sureties to try the appeal, and to abide the judgment of and pay such costs as shall be awarded by the Justices at such Sessions; and the Justices at such Sessions are required, upon due proof made of such notice of appeal, either by the acknowledgment of the Justices, to whom the same shall have been given, or otherwise, to hear and determine the matter of the appeal, and to award such costs as to them shall appear just and reasonable, to be paid by either party." The language of this clause in no material respect differs from that contained in the statute 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. s. 4, giving an appeal against a poor-rate, and is the same as is used in that which formerly regulated appeals in bastardy, 49 Geo. 3. c. 68. s. 5, and many other statutes. The right thus conferred is the right of the appellant alone, and it is not competent for the respondent to enter the appeal, though it be only for the purpose of getting costs. This was held in the case of The King v. the Justices of Essex (1), under the 17 Geo. 2. c. 38; and the subsequent cases, The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding (2) and The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Stoke Bliss (3), establish the principle fully. Neither is it necessary for the sake of justice that the respondents should have the power in a case like the present, for he may obtain the costs he has been put to by estreating the recognizance. If the Sessions could entertain the appeal at the instance of the respondent, the recognizance would be unnecessary. The proper motion in this instance was to estreat the recognizance, the default being a matter which happened before the Sessions — Haines v. Hayton (4), The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding (5). The power of giving costs is merely ancillary to the hearing of the appeal; and before the Sessions can give them, they must hear and determine. It is not an independent provision, but in order to justify an adjudication with respect to them, the appeal must have been properly entered. With respect to cases of removal, the statute 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 90. s. 3. provided a remedy, but that enactment would have been superfluous, if the respondent could have given the Court power over the appeal. The difficulty, however, which has been felt in the present case, arises from the decision in The King v. Twyford (6). The marginal note of that case is this:—"Under the statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. ss. 1, 2, 20, 22, two Justices may convict and sentence to imprisonment and hard labour; and the party convicted may appeal to the Sessions, giving notice to the Justices at the time of conviction, and at the same time entering into recognizance, with sufficient sureties to try the appeal, and abide the judgment of Sessions; but if he do not at such time enter into such recognizance, the convicting Justices are to commit him till the Sessions, unless such recognizance be sooner entered into, and are to transmit the conviction to the Sessions; and the Sessions, on proof of notice of appeal, and on receiving the conviction, are to hear the appeal: and if the conviction be affirmed, the party is to suffer the punishment originally adjudged, the time of imprisonment, if inflicted, being computed from the time of affirmance, unless the party has been imprisoned under the original conviction, in which case the time for which he has been so confined is to be included in the order of confirmation. A party convicted by two Justices, and sentenced to eleven weeks' imprisonment and hard labour, gave notice of appeal, and was committed for not entering into the recognizance. By the practice of Sessions, the appeal was to be entered, and the order for hearing it obtained, by the party disputing the conviction. The party not having entered the appeal, the Sessions discharged him. Semble, that the convicting Magistrate had no longer power to commit, in execution of the conviction. But held, that at any rate no mandamus should be granted to compel them to do so." It is therefore said, that according to this case the defendant by giving his notice of appeal would escape scot free, inasmuch as if the Sessions have no power to entertain the appeal, they would have no power to inflict the residue of the sentence, and this cannot be done by the original Magistrates. But really that argument is unfounded; the case of The King v. Twyford was extremely peculiar. The statute provides, that the defendant may appeal by giving notice; he is then to enter into recognizance, and if he cannot to do so he is to be imprisoned; and if, at the hearing of the appeal the conviction is affirmed, the period of imprisonment he has endured is to be taken as part endurance of the sentence. There, the defendant had not been able to find sureties, and had been consequently imprisoned; a portion of the punishment had been suffered, and Littledale, J. observes, "If the convicting Magistrates were now to issue their warrant to imprison for eleven weeks, it might turn out that half the imprisonment originally adjudged had been already suffered;" and in an earlier part, "Then have the convicting Justices power so to act upon their conviction? They have not, unless what has passed since the conviction amount to nothing." This is a clear indication of his opinion, that if nothing had been done the power of the original Justices would have continued, and that is the case in the present instance; no appeal has been entered, and the Magistrates may issue their warrants. It is precisely the same thing as if there had been no notice. But, after all, it does not appear, even from The King v. Twyford, that the Magistrates had no power to enforce the original judgment; all the Court said was, that it was too doubtful a matter to compel them by mandamus to proceed. The case is not within 6 & 7 Vict. c. 40. s. 29, as the punishment being imprisonment for a month simply, a lunar month was intended; and that section applies only to cases where the imprisonment is for a calendar month at least.

[PATTESON, J.—I think I must assume it was not a case within that act, the Magistrates having taken a recognizance, and permitted the appeal.]

Cowling, in support of the rule.—The prosecutor is in this dilemma—if he goes to the original Justices they refer him to The King v. Twyford, and say they have no jurisdiction; and when he goes to the Sessions he is told that the defendant having abstained from entering the appeal they cannot enforce the punishment; and so between the two the delinquent escapes altogether. But really, upon reference to the statute, it was the duty of the Recorder to allow the entry of the appeal, and to adjudicate upon it. The 20th section is not the only one which bears upon the question, for the 22nd proceeds to declare that the conviction shall be returned to the Sessions, and in case the person or persons so convicted shall appeal from the judgment of the said Justices to the said General or General Quarter Sessions, the Justices in such General or General Quarter Sessions are hereby required, upon receiving the said conviction drawn up in the form aforesaid, to proceed to the hearing and determination of the matter of the said appeal, according to the direction of the said act. The statute there referred to is the 22 Geo. 2. c. 27, and by the 6th section of that statute express power is given to award costs if the appellant does not prosecute his appeal. The meaning clearly is, that the Sessions may proceed, upon the default of the defendant, and hear and determine the case. The Sessions alone have power to carry the sentence into effect, and this is shewn by The King v. Twyford, where the Judges express their opinion that as soon as the recognizance is entered into the convicting Justices are functi officio. The estreating of the recognizance is not an effectual remedy; it does not ipso facto subject the party to the punishment awarded to him.

[PATTESON, J.—If it was the intention of the legislature that the appeal should be entered by the prosecutor, the provision respecting the recognizance would be superfluous.]

It is submitted, that such is not the case, because the object of the recognizance is to obtain security for the costs, which the prosecutor would otherwise have no means of obtaining. Upon the return of the conviction to the Sessions, the jurisdiction of the original Magistrates ceases, just as the power of this Court ceases after removal of a case by writ of error.

[PATTESON, J.—Suppose a man here enters into a recognizance, we do not go on and try, but we estreat.]

That is so, because there is no power to the Court, as in the present case. At all events, the application as to granting costs ought not to have been refused. The 6th section of 22 Geo. 2. c. 27. is incorporated by reference into the 22nd section of the 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, and the words of that section are quite as large, and sufficient to authorize the Court in granting costs, as the language of the statute 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 30. s. 3; and it was decided in that case, and stated by the Court, that the Sessions would have been warranted under that statute in giving costs.

Baines suggested, that section 6. only related to appeals against the sale or disposal of the goods, and not to an appeal upon a recognizance, which was provided for by the 3rd section, and that the latter was the section which was referred to in the 22nd section of the latter statute.

PATTESON, J.—This was an application for a mandamus to the Recorder of Bolton, requiring him to hear the subject-matter of an appeal, or at all events to give the costs of an appeal to the respondents: it arose out of a conviction under 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, and there certainly is considerable difficulty in the case. The party was convicted by two Magistrates; and he entered into a recognizance, under the terms of the act of parliament, which says, he may appeal to the Quarter Sessions, giving to the Justices notice in writing, at the time of the conviction, of his intention to appeal, and also entering into a recognizance with sufficient sureties to try such appeal, and to abide the judgment of, and pay such costs as shall be awarded by, the Sessions. That he did, and accordingly, he was not imprisoned under the succeeding portion of the section, which says, that, if he does not enter into a recognizance with sufficient sureties, he shall be sent to prison. Upon that part of the act the case of The King v. Twyford was decided; but the circumstances are not the same as in the present case, as there the party was in custody. The act of parliament then proceeds, "and the Justices, at such Sessions, are hereby authorized and required, upon due proof made of such notice of appeal, (which, I suppose, means the notice, at the time the commitment took place,) either by the acknowledgment of the Justices, to whom the same shall have been given, or otherwise, to hear and determine the matter of the said appeal, and to award such costs as to them shall appear just and reasonable to be paid by either party." Now the party here giving the recognizance, countermanded the notice of appeal before the Sessions arrived; he did not enter the appeal. Then, it is said, that, under the particular words of this act of parliament, the Magistrates, who convicted, had the right to enter that appeal for the appellant, and call upon the Recorder to hear the subject-matter of the appeal, and determine upon it. We have already said, in one or two cases, that we know of no instance in which a respondent has a right to enter an appeal. The liberty and power given by the act of parliament to appeal is certainly given not to the respondent, but to the appellant: and we have said, there is no remedy if the party does not appeal. That is the general rule, and I do not think Mr. Cowling controverted it as a general rule; but he says, that the words of this act of parliament authorize the Sessions to entertain it, though no appeal is entered by the appellant; and that argument he founds upon the words, "are hereby authorized and required, upon due proof of notice of appeal, &c., to hear and determine the matter of the said appeal, and to award such costs as to them shall appear just and reasonable to be paid by either party." These same words, which are to be found in other acts of parliament, are not found in the 17 Geo. 2; the words there are different; but I think the very same words are to be found in the 49 Geo. 3. c. 58. s. 5; and I have looked into other acts of parliament, and they are to be found there; and therefore, if I were to hold that these words in the present case authorized the Sessions to hear and determine the matter of the said appeal, without its being entered by the appellant, that meaning would attach to them in a great variety of statutes. No other decisions, than those cited, have been come to upon this subject by the Courts that I am aware of; but it seems to me impossible to contend that the act of parliament meant, that, where the party who gave notice of the appeal did not enter it, the Sessions, nevertheless, should have jurisdiction to hear and determine it. What is meant by the words, upon due proof made of such notice of appeal, is a condition thrown upon the appellant that he is to satisfy the Sessions of such notice having been given before they can enter upon it; but a prior step must be taken to enter it, and make it matter cognizable by them. I think, therefore, it is not possible to construe the act of parliament in any other way than to say, that where notice of appeal is given, and the appeal is entered, then they may enter into it, but not otherwise. This appeal, however, has not been entered at all; and I am clear that the Recorder had no authority to hear the subject-matter of it. Then, it is said, an inconvenience might result, if he had not such power, because it is difficult to see what is to be done with the party. There is the remedy of estreating the recognizance, and making the parties, who have entered into the security, pay the penalty; but that may be an insufficient remedy. There is that remedy, however. But, it is said, that it is not clear that the original conviction can then be proceeded upon by the Magistrates. For my own part, I think, when there has been a recognizance and notice of appeal, and a party to it has suffered no imprisonment, I should entertain no doubt that the not entering of the appeal, according to the recognizance, came to the same thing as if there had been no notice of appeal at all, and no recognizance had been entered into; in which case, although the party was not committed immediately by the Magistrates upon conviction, I have no doubt they might issue a warrant and imprison him. I entertain no doubt, the Magistrates might do so now. The difficulty in The King v. Twyford does not arise here, because there the party was in custody under a warrant, and the difficulty arose upon the extraordinary provision in the act of parliament. The Court did not say the Magistrates might not issue their warrant, but, as it was doubtful, they would not put the Magistrates in jeopardy. It does not follow thence that the Magistrates might not have done it even then, but where the party had suffered no imprisonment, it appears to me, they may do it. Still, whether they can or cannot, it is clear the Recorder has no power. Then, Mr. Cowling contends, he is entitled to have a mandamus to the Recorder, for him to give the parties such costs as they ought to have, because, he says, this very act of the 17 Geo. 3. directs the Sessions to award such costs as to them should appear just and reasonable to be paid by either party. But so far as that act of parliament goes, it is clear these costs are ancillary always to the hearing of the appeal. It is clear, no express authority is given to award the costs to the party on whom the notice of appeal was served, where the appeal was not followed up. Mr. Cowling, in moving for this rule, referred to the 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 30, which does give authority in express terms, though no appeal is entered; but I do not suppose he meant to say that it applied to this case, as it relates only to cases of removal. There was a case cited of The Queen v. Stoke Bliss, which was decided upon it, where the Court held, even in the case of settlements, although the Sessions had the power to have given the costs, under 8 & 9 Will. 3, yet, inasmuch as they had taken upon themselves to determine the appeal, which they had no right to do, because it was not entered, and had given costs by the very words of their order, confirming the order of Justices, they had exceeded their jurisdiction, and quashed the order. I only mention it that there may be no misunderstanding as to the extent of that case, but it does not apply to the present. It seems to me to be clear that the Recorder acted perfectly right; that the mandamus ought not to go for the sake of a return, because, when the point is clear, such expense ought not to be incurred. The Recorder very properly determined that he had no authority either to hear the appeal or give costs. The rule, therefore, must be discharged, and the Recorder is entitled to have his costs.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS OF HEANOR.
Jan. 14. }

Highway, Indictment for Non-repair of—Power of Judge to award Costs to Prosecutor under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 95.

The provision in the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 95, as to the Judge's certificate for the costs of the prosecution of an indictment for the non-repair of a highway, only extends to cases where the liability to repair is disputed; and, therefore, where on an indictment for the non-repair of a public carriage-way, the defendants were acquitted, on the ground that the way was not a public highway for carriages, and the Judge certified for the costs of the prosecution,—Held, that he had no jurisdiction to make this certificate, and this Court set it aside.

Whitehurst, in Trinity term, had obtained a rule calling on the prosecutor to shew cause why the certificate for costs in this prosecution, granted by the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, should not be set aside. It appeared from the affidavits that this indictment charged the defendants with the non-repair of a public carriage highway. The defendants pleaded, not guilty; and at the trial, before Tindal, C.J., at the Spring Assizes for the county of Derby, the defendants did not contest their liability to repair the road in question as a bridle-way; but the only matter in dispute, and the only question eventually left by his Lordship to the jury, was, whether it was a public highway for carriages; and the jury found that it was not: a verdict of not guilty was, consequently, entered (1).

(1) Gale, in Easter term (April 19), moved for a rule calling on the defendants to shew cause why a verdict should not be entered for the Crown; and also why the costs should not be paid by the defendants, whatever might be the verdict. On the first point, he contended, that the defendants, after the proceedings before the Justices at Petty Sessions, could not set up that the road was not a highway, those proceedings having been put in at the trial, and being conclusive evidence of the fact; the Magistrates only having power to direct the indictment to be preferred where there was a highway in point of fact.

[PATTERSON, J.—The proceedings before the Magistrates might amount to an admission that the road was a highway for all purposes, but we cannot confine the issue on the record.]

In Trinity term a summons was taken out, calling on the defendants' attorney to shew cause why the Lord Chief Justice should not certify for the prosecutor's costs, pursuant to the statute. This summons was attended on the 27th of May, when his Lordship, after hearing counsel on both sides, made an order that the associate should attend, with the Nisi Prius record, for the purpose of his Lordship's certificate for costs being indorsed thereon; and such indorsement was subsequently made.

It further appeared, that, previous to the indictment being preferred, the Magistrates, at petty sessions, upon information given to them, under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 94, had summoned the surveyor, and had directed the indictment to be preferred.

Humfrey and Gale shewed cause.—It does not appear but that this was a highway for every purpose, except for carriages; it was out of repair, and an indictment was directed by the Justices at petty sessions.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—It was not disputed that it was a bridle-way; but the prosecutor failed, on the ground that he could not make it out to be a carriage-way.]

The circumstance of the verdict having passed for the defendants does not affect the Judge's right to order the costs to be paid to the prosecutor. In The Queen v. Yarkhill (2) the statute was held imperative. In The Queen v. Chedworth (3) the Judge refused to make any certificate: here the Judge who tried the cause, after argument and deliberation, has made the certificate. What took place before the Lord Chief Justice may be collected from the report of this very case, The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Heanor (4). There Tindal, C.J. expressly decided, that he was of opinion that the act extended to every road considered as a highway. The

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This point may be considered as already decided, in a case tried before my Brother Patteson.*]

Then as to the costs—

Per Curiam.—This Court has no power to direct the costs to be paid to the prosecutor; it is a matter for the Judge who tried the cause.—Rule refused.

Court will not now review his decision. In directing the indictment to be preferred the Magistrates acted judicially—The Queen v. Lord Radnor (5);—and whether the road turned out to be a highway or not, the prosecutor was not a volunteer, but bound to proceed upon the order of the Justices; and the investigation was as necessary on the question of the road being a highway, as on that of repair.

[PATTESON, J.—It is quite clear to me that the legislature, in the 95th section, contemplated the case of an actual highway, and only meant to deal with cases in which the duty or obligation to repair is disputed.]

The Court will not assume that the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas did not make the order on the right ground. It may be doubted, indeed, whether the Court can now look to anything besides the indictment, the finding of the jury, and the certificate: they cannot inquire into the ground on which the jury returned their verdict.

Whitehurst, contra, was not called upon.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It does not appear that the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, at the time he made the order for costs, was fully aware of what had passed in this court. The question now raised has been brought under my consideration in a case where a similar application was made to myself; and the particular circumstances of that case induced me to pause before I granted it; and I then found, on inquiry, that my Brother Patteson had already actually held that the clause referred to only applied to cases where the obligation to repair is disputed. I think, therefore, we must hold that the Lord Chief Justice, in making the order, acted without jurisdiction.

Rule absolute.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. THE JUSTICES
Jan. 14. } OF WARWICKSHIRE.

Quarter Sessions, Practice of—Intendment to be made in favour of—Entry of Appeal—Mandamus.

This Court will not presume that a Court of Quarter Sessions were wrong in refusing to enter and try an appeal, where, for anything that appears, a rule of practice of the Sessions might alone have well justified such refusal.

An order of removal was made and appealed against; and, on the non-appearance of the appellants at the Sessions for which notice was given, an order was made for costs against them, and the paupers were afterwards removed to the appellant parish. A fresh notice of appeal for the then next Sessions was, thereupon, served; and these Sessions being held on the 16th of October, the attorney for the appellants attended on the 17th, and applied to the Court of Quarter Sessions to be allowed to enter and try the appeal, but that Court refused the application:—Held, that this Court would not interfere by mandamus to compel the Sessions to enter and try the appeal, as it was quite consistent with the facts stated that the application was not made in time, according to the practice of the Sessions.

In Michaelmas term a rule had been obtained, calling on the Justices of the county of Warwick to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue, directed to them, commanding them to enter or cause to be entered, as of the three last General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, held in and for the said county, the appeal of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Coleshill, in the said county, against an order under the hands and seals of two of the said Justices, for the removal of Edward Sheffield, Hannah his wife, and their six children, from the parish of Kingsbury, in the said county, to the said parish of Coleshill, and to enter or cause to be entered continuances upon the said appeal, from Sessions to Sessions, to their then next General Quarter Sessions of the Peace in and for the said county, and at such next general Quarter Sessions, to hear and determine the merits of the said appeal.

The rule had been granted on an affidavit which stated, that, in May 1844, an order, under the hands and seals of two Justices for the county of Warwick, for the removal of Edward Sheffield, his wife and children, from Kingsbury to Coleshill, was, together with the examinations, sent to and served on the parish officers of the parish of Coleshill.

Notice of appeal was given against this order; and on the 12th of June the appellant parish sent the respondent parish a statement of grounds of appeal, and also a notice of their intention to prosecute and try the appeal at the next Quarter Sessions, to be holden at Coventry, for the Coventry division of the county of Warwick. Those Sessions were held at Coventry on the 4th of July. At those Sessions the appellants did not appear (the notice of trial, however, not having been countermanded), nor was the appeal entered; and an order for costs to be paid by the appellants to the respondents was made by the Court on the application of the respondents, under the statute 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 30. s. 3, and the paupers were on the 19th of August actually removed to the parish of Coleshill. On the 28th of September the appellants sent and served a fresh notice and statement of grounds of appeal against the said order of removal, and of their intention to prosecute and try an appeal at the next Quarter Sessions for the Coventry division of the county. Such next Sessions were held at Coventry on the 16th of October. On the 17th the attorney for the appellants attended at the office of the clerk of the peace for the county of Warwick to enter the said appeal, and the clerk of the peace refused to enter the same; and the attorney afterwards, on the 17th of October, applied, on behalf of the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Coleshill, to the Quarter Sessions, by his counsel, to have the appeal against the said order entered for the purpose of trying the same. The respondents, however, appeared by their counsel and opposed the entry of the appeal; and the Court of Quarter Sessions refused to enter the same, or to permit the same to be tried.

Hayes and Mellor shewed cause.—First, there is nothing to shew that the application to enter the appeal was made in time, according to the practice of the Sessions.

[COLERIDGE, J.—It is stated that the Court was actually sitting.]

The application was not to enter and re-spite, but to enter and try. The Court will not presume that the Sessions did not adhere to their usual practice; and no reason is assigned for the refusal of the Sessions, so as to enable the Court to see whether they were right or not. But, secondly, (if the Court will go into that question), the Sessions, on the facts stated, were right in refusing to try the appeal. It is true that a party may either appeal against the order, or against the actual removal—The Queen v. the Justices of Salop (1); but that case and the observations of Patteson, J., in The Queen v. Shipston-upon-Stour (2) shew, that the party cannot do both. Here, the appellants have made their election to treat the order of removal as the grievance, under the statute 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. s. 2, and cannot appeal again upon the actual removal. This is consistent with the judgment of Wightman, J., in The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire (Stanley v. Alverthorpe) (3).

J. Spooner, contra.—As to the first objection, it is for the respondents to shew grounds for the Sessions refusing to hear the appeal. Prima facie a party has a right to enter his appeal at any time during the Sessions. (He was then proceeding to argue the second point, but was stopped.)

LORD DENMAN, C.J. — Upon the first point, I think this rule ought to be discharged. It is not stated in the affidavit on which the rule was granted, nor does it anywhere appear, that the appellants applied to enter the appeal within the proper time, according to the practice of the particular Sessions. No presumption can be made as against the Sessions, that they did not act right according to their own practice.

COLERIDGE, J. — It is quite consistent with everything that appears here, that the Sessions were right, and that you were wrong in coming too late, according to their practice.

PATTESON, J. and WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

BAIL COURT. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS OF THE TOWNSHIP OF DARTON.

Certiorari—Notice—Statute 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 5.—Affidavit.

An affidavit upon motion for a certiorari to remove an order of Quarter Sessions, stating that the notice of motion under 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 5. was served upon A. B. and C. D., two of the Justices for the county, "and that the said A. B. and C. D. were two of the Justices present at the Sessions" at which the order was made, is insufficient, though it appears that the order was made on an appeal against an order of removal, subject to a special case.

The notice of motion stated it to be given on behalf of the overseers of the poor of the township of Darton, and was signed "G. K., attorney for the overseers of the poor of the said township of Darton, appellants," after describing the appeal. The affidavit of service was made by a person who described himself as clerk to G. K., attorney at law. Semble, that this was sufficient proof that G. K. was the attorney of the appellants, and that the notice was served on their behalf.

A writ of certiorari had been obtained on the 25th of November 1843, to bring up an order of the Court of Quarter Sessions for the West Riding of Yorkshire, held on the 3rd of July 1843, confirming an order of removal of several paupers from the township of Bretton West to the township of Darton, in the West Riding, subject as therein stated to a special case for the opinion of this Court. The affidavit, on which the writ had issued, was that of Thomas Green, "of Barnsley, in the county of York, clerk to George Keir, of the same place, attorney at law," sworn on the 18th of November, which stated that he did, on the 18th of November instant, personally serve John Thorneley, Esq. and the Rev. Henry Watkins, clerk, two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, in and for the West Riding of the county of York, each of them, with a duplicate of the notice hereunto annexed; "and that the said John Thorneley and Henry Watkins were two of the Justices of the Peace present at the Midsummer General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, held, by adjournment, at Rotherham, on the 3rd of July last past, at which Sessions the appeal mentioned or referred to in the notice hereunto annexed, came on for hearing, and was heard accordingly; and the order appealed against was confirmed, subject to a case." The notice annexed was directed to the same two Magistrates, and merely gave them notice that a writ of certiorari would be applied for to remove the order of Sessions. It then purported to be signed "George Keir, attorney for the said overseers of the poor of the said township of Darton, appellants."

In Easter term last, a rule nisi had been obtained to quash the writ of certiorari. The affidavits in answer stated the granting of the special case by the Sessions; that Mr. Keir, the attorney for the appellants, forwarded the case, as settled by his counsel, on the 14th of November, with a letter, in which he asked the respondents' attorney to give a consent brief to counsel for issuing the certiorari; that not receiving an answer he prepared a notice to two of the Justices present at the said Sessions, and caused them to be served therewith, and on the 19th of November received an answer to his letter of the 14th, in which the respondents' attorney stated, that, as it was for his convenience, if he would pay the fee, he would give the brief. The expense of service having been incurred, this was declined. The case was not returned, and, consequently, he wrote to the respondents' attorney on the 11th of May requesting its return; to which the reply was, that the present rule was about to be moved for. The rule having been enlarged,—

Hall now shewed cause. — Two objections are insisted upon: the first being that the affidavit, on which the certiorari was obtained, does not shew that the Magistrates served were two of the Magistrates who made the order; and, the second, that it is not shewn by the affidavit that the notice was served, or the application for the writ was made on behalf of the appellants. With respect to the last objection The King v. Abergyle (1) shews, that a notice signed by the attorney for the parish is sufficient, and that case was confirmed in The Queen v. the Justices of Wilts (2), where the notice was signed by A. B. "attorney for the respondents." The case also of The Queen v. the Justices of Lancashire (3) is precisely in point in that respect. There the notice was signed by "Crossley & Sudlow, solicitors for Mr. Richard Gould, a ratepayer of the township of Manchester, within and part of the said borough," and that was held a sufficient statement of the notice being served on his behalf. That case is also directly in point as to the statement in this affidavit being sufficient; for the notice, so signed, was held to be a compliance with the statute, though there was no affidavit that the notice was, in fact, served at the instance of Mr. Gould, and the Court said, that if it was not so served the Magistrates should have produced affidavits to the contrary. But there is another answer to this, and also to the other objection, namely, that this application is too late. The applicants had notice of this defect in last Michaelmas term; and being an irregularity, they were bound to come within a reasonable time, and not to lie by, and suffer the other parties to incur considerable expense. The cases relied upon by the appellants, are The King v. Rattislaw (4), The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Cartworth (5), and The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Gildersome (6); but this case is distinguishable from them on two grounds, first, because it appears on the face of the affidavit that a special case was granted; and, secondly, because it is here sworn that the Magistrates served were present at the Sessions. With respect to the first of these points, the statute was intended to afford the Magistrates an opportunity of resisting the certiorari, in the first instance, where it was to be sued out hostilely, and was never intended to apply where a special case has been granted: the very granting of which, is, in itself, a consent to its issuing; and it would be a strange inconsistency if two Magistrates could shew cause against the act of the whole Court of Quarter Sessions. This was evidently the opinion of Coleridge, J., in The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Cartworth; and that is borne out by the practice of the Crown Office. In cases where a special case has been granted, it is the constant course for the other party to give a consent, and the writ issues thereupon. If the argument of the respondents is right in the present case, that practice is improper, and every writ so issued may be set aside: to put such a construction on the statute would be unreasonable, and, therefore, when there is a consent, the notice is unnecessary; and the granting a case is equivalent to such consent.

(1) 5 Ad. & El. 795.

(2) 10 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 25.

[PATTESON, J.—In The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Cartworth, a special case had been granted, and it was actually set down for argument.]

That may be so; yet it does not appear that the affidavit on which the certiorari was obtained, stated that to have been so, and that was relied upon as defective.

[Pashley, in support of the rule, referred to The King v. the Justices of Sussex (7), as shewing that the statute applied to a writ where a special case had been granted.]

That was a very different case, for the question there was, whether the party could issue the writ after the expiration of the six months: that would not be affected by the consent, which is only to issue it within the prescribed period. That is a term reasonably and properly implied. As to the statement in the affidavit, of the presence of the Magistrates, it is also sufficient. The Court will not infer that the Sessions extended over more than one day, and it is sufficient if they were present at the Sessions. The entry on the sessions-book is only of the names of those who are present at the commencement, and it would be a great hardship to compel a person to ascertain who were the individuals actually present, and who made the order, for it might be impossible for him to do so. Some might dissent or take no part. All that the party can learn is, who were present at the Sessions generally.

Pashley, in support of the rule.—The affidavit does not shew that the two Magistrates served were two of those "by and before" whom, to use the words of the statute, the order in question was made. The reason for requiring that the notice should be served on two such parties is obvious, as they would know the ground on which the case was granted, and would possess the best means of forming a judgment as to the expediency of allowing it to be argued. At the Sessions, when they granted the case, they might think there was something in the point raised which, upon its coming to be settled, might appear to be quite frivolous and vain; and, therefore, they might desire that the writ should not issue. Then the affidavit does not state that they were present at the time of making it, which Lord Denman, C.J., in The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Gilbertsome, declares to be absolutely necessary. To say, that they were present at the Sessions, cannot be intended to mean that they were present when the order was made, for the Sessions are held by adjournment, at three different places, and held several days at each place. A person could not be indicted for perjury on this affidavit, if these Magistrates had been present at any one place on any one day; and how can the Court say, that such a statement satisfies them, that they were actually present when the order was made? Consistently, too, with this statement, they may have been present, yet no parties to the making of the order, for they may have attended as witnesses or as parties. In every case a liberal construction has been put upon the act, both in The King v. Rattislaw and The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Cartworth, and as declared by the Court of Exchequer in the case of Potter v. Nicholson (8), and various other cases under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. s. 9, it is far better, where a statute has prescribed a particular form of words, that that form should be strictly adhered to. With respect to the time of this application, The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Cartworth was a stronger case than the present, for a greater period had elapsed, and the case was actually coming on for argument; here it has never been settled. There is no force in the observation, that the statute does not apply to cases of consent. The King v. the Justices of Sussex is precisely in point in that respect; for there the mere question of time was not alone debated; but the question as to the necessity of serving notices was raised and decided. The affidavit is also defective, in not shewing that Mr. Keir was the attorney for the appellants; all that it states is, that the deponent served a paper; it does not allege it to have been signed by Mr. Keir. An oath ought to be pledged to the fact, that it was served on behalf of the appellants; and that nowhere appears. An attorney, in making any application, ought to shew that he is authorized—Lewis v. Lord Tankerville (9), by the proper party. Mr. Keir might have been the attorney at the Sessions, and his authority would have ceased with that judgment. The point was not raised in The Queen v. the Justices of Lancashire, and the other cases.

PATTESON, J.—In this case several objections were raised to the writ of certiorari, which had been issued; and the first question is, whether, under the circumstances, there was any necessity to serve the Magistrates with notice. In answer to the rule to quash the writ, it was urged, that as this appeared to be a case in which a special case had been granted by the Court of Quarter Sessions, the necessity of serving two Magistrates with notice was dispensed with. Upon looking, however, at the case of The King v. the Justices of Sussex, it is quite clear that the Court has decided that it is necessary to serve the Magistrates with notice under such circumstances; and, as I cannot take upon myself to overrule that decision, I must hold that they ought to have been served, although the Sessions granted a case. The question then arises, whether sufficient service of notice has been effected under the statute 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 5. There was another point raised, whether the notice, which has been served sufficiently appeared to have been given by the party suing forth the same, inasmuch as it was served by a person who describes himself as a clerk to Mr. Keir, and Mr. Keir's name is signed to the notice as attorney for the overseers. This is merely part of his description, and no positive statement to that effect is contained in the affidavits. In The Queen v. the Justices of Lancashire, however, a notice, subscribed by "Crossley & Sudlow, solicitors for Mr. Richard Gould, of the township of Manchester, within and part of the borough," was held to shew sufficiently that it was given on behalf of the party. The affidavit there certainly was made by Mr. Sudlow, one of the partners, but it did not verify the signature, nor did it state that it was served on behalf of Mr. Gould. In all essential respects, therefore, that case does not differ from the present. The act, indeed, does not even require that it should be signed by the party giving it, but only that it should be given by the party. Under the circumstances of the present case, it is not required that I should decide the point; but I must confess that the bias of my mind is, that the notice in these respects was valid. I then come to the main question, whether the affidavit shews that the right Magistrates have been served. Now the act of parliament directs that the writ shall not issue, "unless it be duly proved, upon oath, that the said party or parties suing for the same, hath or have given six days' notice thereof, in writing, to the Justice or Justices, or to two of them, (if so many there be) by and before whom such conviction, judgment, order, or other proceeding, shall be so had or made, to the end that such Justice or Justices, or the parties therein concerned, may shew cause against the issuing or granting of such certiorari." The order in question is an order of the Court of Quarter Sessions, and the affidavit, on which the writ was obtained, states, that the deponent did personally serve J. Thorneley, Esq. and the Rev. H. Watkins, clerk, two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, in and for the West Riding of the County of York, each of them, with a duplicate of the notice hereunto annexed; and that the said J. Thorneley and H. Watkins were "two of the Justices of the Peace present at the Midsummer General Quarter Sessions, held, by adjournment, at Rotherham, on the 3rd of July last past, at which the appeal came on to be heard." I believe there is no affidavit on the part of the persons obtaining the present rule, that these gentlemen were not present, but Mr. Pashley relies simply upon the insufficiency of the original affidavit; and the question, therefore, rests entirely upon that.

Now it states that they were two of the Justices present at the Midsummer General Quarter Sessions, at which the appeal in question came on to be heard, and it is certainly quite consistent with this affidavit that these Magistrates may not have been present at the hearing, and still have been present at the Sessions; for although the Sessions, in contemplation of law, are but one day, yet we know in fact that they might and do last several days. The statement, therefore, in this affidavit may be perfectly true, and yet they may not have been present at the time. The Sessions may have lasted several days, and they may have only attended upon one day, or they may have been present in court during part of the day, and have been absent when it was heard. It is nowhere said that they were present at the hearing, and this, it appears to me, the affidavit ought to have done. The omission is certainly unfortunate; but, I think, I must hold parties strictly to the terms of the statute, and that an affidavit for such a purpose should shew that the Magistrates were on the Bench when the appeal was tried. In the present instance, there is not even an affidavit in answer to the rule, stating that they were in court. Therefore I think this rule must be made absolute, and that the writ ought to be quashed.

(11) In The Queen v. the Justices of Herefordshire, in this term (Nov. 20).—

Cooke moved for a certiorari to remove an order of the Court of Quarter Sessions for Herefordshire upon an affidavit which stated that the deponent served J. B., Esq. and J. F., Esq., two Magistrates of the county of Hereford, who were present in Court at the time of making the order.

Skinner shewed cause upon an affidavit of J. F., which stated that he was in court when the appeal was called on; that upon an observation being made that there was a large rate-payer, of the respondent parish, on the bench, he immediately stated he had not taken any part in the proceedings of the Court as regarded the appeal, and that he did not intend to vote or act, and that he did not act or interfere in the determination of the appeal. He objected that the statement in the affidavit in support of the motion was insufficient, inasmuch as it did not shew that J. F. was a Magistrate by whom the order was made, and that the facts stated in his affidavit shewed that it

Bastard—7 & 8 Vict. c. 101.—Evidence—Statement of, upon Oath.

An order of affiliation, made under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, must shew upon the face of it that all the evidence was taken upon oath, though the statute does not so expressly direct.

Therefore, such an order stating, that it being proved to the Justices in the presence and hearing of the said T. E. (the putative father), that the said child was within six calendar months before the passing of the act born a bastard of the body of the said M. S. (the mother), and that the Justices having in the presence and hearing of the said T. E. heard the evidence of such woman upon oath, and such other evidence as she had produced, and the evidence of the said M. S. (the mother) having been corroborated in some material particular by other testimony to their satisfaction, did adjudge, &c., was held bad.

This was a rule, calling upon the Justices of the Peace for the county of Buckingham to shew cause, why a certiorari should not issue to bring up the following order of affiliation made under the hands and seals of the Rev. John Rich, clerk, and the Rev. William Bruton Wroth, clerk, two of the said Justices:—"Bucks, to wit. At a petty session of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the county of Buckingham, holden in and for the Ivinghoe division of the three hundreds of Cottesloe, in the county of Buckingham, at the Town Hall in Ivinghoe, in the said division and county, on the 4th day of November 1844, before us, the Rev. W. B. W, clerk, and the Rev. J. R, clerk, two of Her Majesty's Justices might be quite consistent with the original affidavit, that he might have never been a party to the order, and consequently, that the statute had not been complied with.

PATTESON, J. granted time to Cooke to answer the affidavit; but said, that if the fact was that public intimation had been given by Mr. F. that he did not intend to interfere, he thought he was not a Justice within the meaning of the statute, and the service would be nugatory.

of the Peace for the said county. Whereas one Mary Stilton, single woman, residing at the parish of Wingrove, within this division and county, did, on the 7th of October in the year of our Lord 1844, having been delivered of a male bastard child within twelve calendar months prior thereto, make application to William Jenney, Esq., one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace usually acting for this division and county, for a summons to be served upon one Thurston Earthrowl, of 13, Elizabeth Terrace, Liverpool Road, Islington, in the county of Middlesex, carpenter and joiner, whom she alleged to be the father of the said child, and the said Justice thereupon issued his summons to the said T. Earthrowl to appear at a petty session to be holden on this day for this division and county, to answer her complaint touching the premises. And whereas the said T. Earthrowl having been duly served with the said summons within forty days from the present time, and being now present, and the said Mary Stilton having now applied to us, the Justices in petty sessions assembled, for an order upon the said T. Earthrowl, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided. And it being now proved to us, in the presence and hearing of the said T. Earthrowl, that the said child was within six calendar months before the passing of an act, passed in the eighth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled, 'An Act for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England,' that is to say, on the 31st day of March 1844, born a bastard of the body of the said M. Stilton. And we having, in the presence and hearing of the said T. Earthrowl, heard the evidence of such woman upon oath, and such other evidence as she hath produced, and having also heard the said T. Earthrowl, by his attorney, and the evidence of the said M. Stilton, the mother of the said child, having been corroborated in some material particular by other testimony to our satisfaction, do hereby adjudge the said T. Earthrowl to be the putative father of the said bastard child; and having regard to all the circumstances of this case, we do hereby order that the said T. Earthrowl do pay unto the said M. Stilton, the mother of the said bastard child, so long as she shall live, and shall be of sound mind, and shall not be in any gaol or prison, or under sentence of transportation, or to the person who may be appointed to have the custody of such child, under the provisions of the said statute, the sum of 2s. per week from the said 7th day of October last, being the day upon which such application was made, until the said child shall attain the age of thirteen years, or shall die, or the said M. Stilton shall marry. And we do hereby further order the said T. Earthrowl to pay to the said Mary Stilton the sum of 2l. 1s. 6d., being the costs incurred in obtaining this order, and 10s. for the midwife. Given under our hands and seals at the session aforesaid.—John Rich, W. B. Wroth."

The main objection to the order was, that it did not shew upon the face of it that the evidence upon which the order was made was given upon oath. There were numerous other objections, upon which no decision was given by the Court.

Keane now shewed cause.—This objection arises upon section 2. of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, which enacts, "that any single woman who has been delivered of a bastard child within the period of six calendar months before the passing of this act, may, at any time within twelve months from the birth of such child, make application to any one Justice of the Peace acting for the petty sessional division of the county, or for the city, borough, or place in which she may reside, for a summons to be served on the man alleged to be the father of such child." And by section 3. "on the appearance of the person so summoned, or on proof that the summons was duly served on such person, or left at his last place of abode, six days at least before the petty session, the Justices in such petty session shall hear the evidence of such woman, and such other evidence as she may produce, and shall also hear any evidence tendered by or on behalf of the person alleged to be the father; and if the evidence of the mother be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, to the satisfaction of the said Justices, they may adjudge the man to be the putative father of such bastard child." There is nothing in the words of the act which requires any of the evidence to be given upon oath, and it does not even direct proof to be given before the Justices that the child was born within the six months before the passing of the act; but in this order the words of the statute are followed, and that is sufficient: moreover the evidence of the mother is distinctly stated to be upon oath.

Archbold, in support of the rule.—This objection is fatal. The mere use of the words of the statute is not sufficient; it should appear distinctly that all the evidence upon which the order was made was taken upon oath. Paley on Convictions, p. 42. The Queen v. Lewis (1), In re Gray (2), are direct authorities to shew that even if the statute is silent as to the evidence being given upon oath, still it must be so.

WIGHTMAN, J. — The order certainly adopts the words of the statute, which does not use the word oath, but speaks merely of evidence and testimony. It does, indeed, appear, that the Justices heard the evidence of the mother upon oath, but that is the only part of the evidence which is stated to have been so taken. It seems to me that all the evidence which was given to the Magistrates, and upon which the order was made, ought to appear on the face of the order to have been taken on oath, even though the statute does not expressly direct such to be the case. The cases which have been cited of The Queen v. Lewis and In re Gray are direct authorities upon this point. They were convictions on the Master and Servants' Act, which does not direct the evidence to be taken upon oath, but such a mode of proceeding was held to be necessary there. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the order is bad upon this ground.

Pauper Lunatic—9 Geo. 4. c. 40. ss. 38. & 41—Jurisdiction.

Justices of the Peace for a borough have no power to send a pauper lunatic, who is chargeable to the borough, to the county lunatic asylum, under 9 Geo. 4. c. 40. s. 38.

An order adjudicating as to the settlement of an insane person confined in a county lunatic asylum, and ordering the payment of expenses under s. 42, can only be made when such insane person is confined there under an order of two Justices of the county.

An order of two Justices, adjudging the settlement of a pauper lunatic to be in P, and ordering the overseers of P. to pay 5s. 6d. weekly to the treasurer of the county lunatic asylum (where the pauper was confined), or such other sum as should be thereafter fixed on by the visitors of the said county lunatic asylum, is bad, for not shewing that 5s. 6d. was the sum which had been fixed on by the visitors of the lunatic asylum.

A rule had been obtained calling upon the Justices of the Peace of the county of Cornwall, to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue to bring up the following order of Justices, adjudicating as to the settlement of a pauper lunatic under 9 Geo. 4. c. 40; and an order of Sessions confirming the said order.

"Cornwall, to wit. To the overseers of the poor of the borough of Penryn, in the county of Cornwall.

"Whereas, heretofore, to wit, on the 3rd day of March 1843, at the borough of Falmouth, in the said county, by a certain order of Joseph Fox, mayor of the said borough, and John Hill, Esq., two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the said last-mentioned borough, reciting, that it appeared to them, having called to their aid one Frederick Charles Bullmore, a surgeon, that one Elizabeth Deacon, otherwise called Elizabeth Worsdale, chargeable to the town of Falmouth aforesaid, was insane, and they, therefore, thereby ordered and directed the said overseers to cause the said E. D, otherwise called E. W, to be conveyed to the county lunatic asylum, established at Bodmin, in the said county. And whereas, in pursuance of the said order, the said E. D, otherwise called E. W, was thereupon afterwards, on the day and year last aforesaid, conveyed to the said lunatic asylum, and was then and there delivered to the proper officer thereof, who then and there accepted and received the said E. D, otherwise called E. W, into the said asylum, and the said E. D, otherwise called E. W, was then and hath been from thence hitherto kept and detained, and is still kept and detained in the said asylum as insane, where she hath ever since been and still is maintained. And whereas, at the time of the making of the order aforesaid, the place of the last legal settlement of the said E. D, otherwise called E. W, had not been ascertained, and it is necessary now to inquire into and ascertain the same according to the exigency of the statute in such case made and provided, in order that the reasonable charges of the removing, maintenance, medicine, clothing, and care of the said E. D, otherwise called E. W, (incurred within twelve calendar months previous to the date of this order,) may be repaid, and the future expenses necessary for the maintenance, medicine, clothing, and care of the said E. D, otherwise called E. W, whilst she remains insane, may be provided for; therefore we, John Samuel Enys and George Croker Fox, being two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, in and for the said county of Cornwall, having accordingly inquired into the place of the last legal settlement of the said E. D, otherwise called E. W, and it being now satisfactorily proved before us, as well by the oaths of Benjamin Deakin, Richard Ockleshrow, James George Julyan, Thomas Small Skinner, Francis Mitchell, and Thomas Mitchell, as otherwise, that the said borough of Penryn, in the said county, is the place of the last legal settlement of the said E. D, otherwise called E. W: we do therefore hereby adjudge the place of the last legal settlement of the said E. D, otherwise called E. W, to be in the said last-mentioned borough; and we do hereby order the overseers of the said last-mentioned borough to pay unto the overseers of the town of Falmouth aforesaid, the sum of 3*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, being the reasonable charges of conveying the said E. D, otherwise called E. W, to the said county lunatic asylum; and also the further sum of 2*l.* 10*s.* to the treasurer of the said county, being the amount of the several sums which by him have been hitherto paid for the reasonable charges of the maintenance, medicine, clothing, and care of the said E. D, otherwise called E. W, in the said lunatic asylum; and also the sum of 5s. 6d. weekly and every week, to the treasurer of the said county lunatic asylum, or such other sum weekly, as shall be from time to time hereafter fixed on in that behalf, by the visitors of the said county lunatic asylum.

"Given under our hands and seals the 21st day of October, in the year of our Lord 1843.

"John S. Enys.

"G. Croker Fox."

The objections to the above order, were, first, that the payment of the charges of conveying the pauper to the lunatic asylum was ordered to be made to the overseers of the town of Falmouth, whereas it ought to have been to the treasurer of the county. Secondly, that the Justices had no jurisdiction to order the payment of a fixed sum, but only such sum as the visitors should fix upon. Thirdly, that the Justices of the borough of Falmouth had no jurisdiction to send the pauper lunatic to the county lunatic asylum.

Merivale now shewed cause.—This first objection only goes to part of the order, and even if it prevail, the order will be good as to the remainder, and cannot be quashed on that ground. As to the second objection, which also goes to part of the order only, the order is to pay 5s. 6d., or such other sum weekly, as shall be from time to time hereafter fixed on by the visitors of the said county lunatic asylum. The plain inference to be drawn from these words is, that 5s. 6d. was a sum which had been so fixed on, otherwise the words "such other sum" would have no meaning at all.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—I can hardly understand them so; it cannot, I think, be inferred from the order that the sum of 5s. 6d. had been fixed on by the visitors.]

Then, it is objected, that the Justices of the borough of Falmouth had no jurisdiction to make the first order for conveying the lunatic to the county lunatic asylum. This objection is too late. If the first order was bad, it might have been appealed against, under section 46. But it is not necessary, in order to make the order of adjudication valid, that the order for sending the lunatic to the asylum should have been made by two Justices of the county. Sect. 42. says, "that where the legal settlement of any person confined under any order of two Justices at any county lunatic asylum has not been ascertained," and not under any order "made as aforesaid." The probable intention of this clause was, that, when a pauper lunatic was confined in the asylum, under an order of any two Justices, good or bad, and no objection was made to that order, then two Justices of the county might proceed to adjudicate as to the settlement.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—I think that is not the true construction of the 42nd section; it must refer to an order made by two Justices of the county. Sect. 41, under which the order in question ought to have been made, gives power to "the said Justices," which must be the Justices of the county mentioned in sect. 38.]

But if that is so, it does not appear from this order that the Justices of Falmouth had not power to send to the county lunatic asylum. Section 50. provides that the county lunatic asylum shall not be liable to the reception of insane persons chargeable to, or apprehended in any town or place situate within the limits of the county, but claiming exemption, and being exempt from contributing to the county rate. The borough of Falmouth is stated to be in the county, and is not, necessarily, exempt from contributing to the county rate: many boroughs are not so; and on the face of the order no such exemption appears.

M. Smith, in support of the rule.—The Justices removing the lunatic are stated to be Justices of the borough of Falmouth; the act gives the power of removing to a county lunatic asylum only to two Justices acting for the county or district of counties for which such asylum is established—sect. 38. If the removal under the first order was bad, for want of jurisdiction in the Justices, all subsequent proceedings, which rest upon the original sending, are bad also. The borough Justices had no right to send to an asylum out of their own jurisdiction.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I think this objection is fatal.

Conviction—Indictment, Certainty in—Game—9 Geo. 4. c. 69.

It is necessary, in a conviction under 9 Geo. 4. c. 69. s. 1, to aver that the party entered the land, by night, for the purpose of destroying game "there," or "therein," (or some equivalent language); and it is not sufficient merely to pursue the words of the statute. Therefore, where in an action of trespass against two Magistrates they pleaded a conviction of the plaintiff, which conviction stated that the plaintiff "did, by night, unlawfully enter a certain inclosed land, in the occupation, &c., with a net, for the purpose of taking game, &c., contrary to the form of the statute,"—Held, on demurrer, that such conviction was no answer to the action, though it was expressly averred, in the plea, that the plaintiff unlawfully entered the inclosed land, by night, for the purpose of taking game, by night, in the said inclosed land.

Semble—that the conviction should also allege the purpose to be to take game "by night."

Quære—if the same strictness is necessary in indictments for misdemeanour, under the 9th section of the act.

Trespass, for assaulting the plaintiff, and apprehending him, and seizing, &c. and compelling him to go from Chippenham, in the county of Cambridge, to a certain gaol in the parish of Chesterton, and there imprisoning him, and compelling him to work on a certain treadmill and treadmill, for twelve hours each day, and until the plaintiff, in order to procure his release, was obliged to issue a writ of habeas corpus, and cause himself to be carried and conveyed, under the said writ, from the said gaol to Horsemonger Lane Gaol, and from thence to Westminster, where the plaintiff was, by the consent of our Lady the Queen, discharged from his imprisonment.

Plea—That after the making and passing of a certain act of parliament, made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, being an act, "for the more effectual prevention of persons going armed, by night, for the destruction of game," (1) and before the said time when, &c., in the declaration mentioned, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the 24th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1843, at the parish of S., in the county of Cambridge, the said plaintiff, with three other persons, to the defendants unknown, did by night, that is to say, after the expiration of the first hour after sunset, on Monday the 23rd day of October 1843, and before the beginning of the last hour before sunrise, on Tuesday the 24th day of October, in the same year, to wit, about the hour of one o'clock in the morning of the said 24th day of October, unlawfully enter certain inclosed land, in the occupation of W. C., and situate in the said parish of S., in the county aforesaid, with a net, for the purpose of taking game, to wit, partridges and pheasants, by night, that is to say, between the expiration of the first hour after sunset on the said 23rd day of October, and the beginning of the last hour before sunrise on the said 24th day of October, in the said inclosed land, contrary to the provisions of the said act of parliament in this plea mentioned, and thereby the said plaintiff then and there, and within the county aforesaid, became and was guilty of an offence against the provisions of the said act of parliament.

(1) The 9 Geo. 4. c. 69. s. 1, after reciting the passing of the 57 Geo. 3. c. 90, and that the practice of going out by night, for the purpose of destroying game, had, nevertheless, very much increased of late years, and had, in very many instances, led to the commission of murder and of other grievous offences; and it was expedient to repeal the said recited act, and to make more effectual provisions for repressing such practice, enacted, that, "if any person shall, after the passing of this act, by night, unlawfully take or destroy any game or rabbits, in any land, whether open or inclosed, or shall, by night, unlawfully enter or be in any land, whether open or inclosed, with any gun, net, engine, or other instrument, for the purpose of taking or destroying game, such offender shall, upon conviction thereof before two Justices of the Peace, be committed, for the first offence, to the common gaol or house of correction for any period not exceeding three calendar months, there to be kept to hard labour."

H

And the said defendants further say, that, before the commission of the said offence, by the plaintiff, and before the said time when, &c., in the declaration mentioned, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the 24th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1843, they, the said defendants, respectively, were, and from thence hitherto have been, and still are, Justices of our Lady the Queen, assigned to keep the peace of our said Lady the Queen in and for the said county of Cambridge, and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and other misdemeanours, done and committed within the said county. And the defendants further say, that, afterwards, and before the said time when &c., and before the commencement of this suit, and within six calendar months of the commission of the said offence, to wit, on the said 24th day of October, A. D. 1843, at the parish of Isleham, in the said county of Cambridge, the said plaintiff was charged before the said defendant John Calthorp, so there being such Justice as aforesaid, upon the oath of one James Cowel, a credible witness in that behalf, with the said offence in this plea mentioned, the same being an offence punishable upon summary conviction, by virtue of the said act of parliament. And the defendants further say, that, afterwards, and just before the said time when &c., and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the 26th day of October, A. D. 1843, at the parish of Chippenham, in the said county, the said plaintiff was brought before the said defendants, so there being such Justices as aforesaid, upon the said charge; and the said charge was then and there, in his the said plaintiff's presence, proved by the said James Cowel and one John Nicholls, being credible witnesses in that behalf, upon oath; and the said plaintiff was then and there convicted by and before the said defendants, then being such Justices as aforesaid, he, the said plaintiff, being then and there present before the said defendants, of his said offence, in this plea mentioned, which said conviction was afterwards, to wit, on the 26th day of October, A. D. 1843, written on parchment, and signed by the said defendants, and afterwards, to wit, on the 5th day of January, A. D. 1844, was returned by the said defendants, then being such Justices as aforesaid, to the Quarter Sessions, then holden in and for the said county, in pursuance of the said statute in that case made and provided, the same being the Quarter Sessions for the said county next after the said plaintiff was so convicted as aforesaid, and which said conviction was and is in the words following:— “Be it remembered, that on the 26th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1843, in the parish of Chippenham, in the county of Cambridge, Robert Fletcher the younger, late of the parish of Soham, in the said county, labourer, is convicted before us, the Rev. John Calthorp, clerk, and Joseph Sidney Tharp, Esq., two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said county, for that he, the said Robert Fletcher the younger, on the 24th day of October, A. D. 1843, at the said parish of Soham, in the said county, with three other persons, to us, the said Justices, unknown, did, by night, after the expiration of the first hour after sunset on Monday the 23rd day of October, A. D. 1843, and before the beginning of the last hour before sunrise on Tuesday the 24th day of October, in the same year, that is to say, about the hour of one of the clock in the morning of the said 24th day of October, unlawfully enter certain inclosed land, in the occupation of William Cornwell, and situate in the said parish of Soham, in the county aforesaid, with a net for the purpose of taking game, to wit, partridges and pheasants, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided. And we, the said Justices, adjudge the said Robert Fletcher the younger, for his said offence, to be imprisoned in the common county gaol at Cambridge, in and for the said county of Cambridge, and there kept to hard labour for the period of three calendar months, and at the expiration of such period to find sureties by recognizance, himself in the sum of 10*l.* and two sureties in the sum of 5*l.* each, or one surety in the sum of 10*l.*, conditioned that he, the said Robert Fletcher the younger, shall not so offend again for the space of one year next following; and we further adjudge the said Robert Fletcher the younger, in case he shall not find such sureties as aforesaid, to be further imprisoned, and kept to hard labour for the space of six calendar months, unless such sureties shall be sooner found. Given under our hands the day and year first above mentioned.

“(Signed) John Calthorp, Joseph Sidney Tharp.”

As by the record of the said conviction, remaining among the records of the Court of Quarter Sessions for the said county, will more fully and at large appear. And the defendants further say, that the conviction of the said plaintiff of his said offence, hath not, at any time since the said plaintiff was so convicted as aforesaid, in any way, been quashed, reversed, or annulled, but that the same, from thence hitherto, hath been and is in full force and effect. And the defendants further say, that afterwards, and after the said plaintiff was so convicted by and before the said defendants as aforesaid, to wit, on the said 26th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1843, the said defendants, as such Justices as aforesaid, in pursuance of the said conviction of the plaintiff of his said offence, made and issued under their hands and seals a certain warrant of commitment, which said warrant of commitment was and is in the words following:—“County of Cambridge, to wit. To the constable of Soham, in the county of Cambridge, and to the keeper of the common gaol at Cambridge, in the said county. Whereas Robert Fletcher the younger, of Soham, in the said county, labourer, is convicted, by and before us, the Rev. John Calthorp, clerk, and Joseph Sidney Tharp, two of her Majesty’s Justices of the Peace in and for the said county, upon the oath of James Cowel, for that he, the said Robert Fletcher the younger, at the parish of Soham, in the said county, with three other persons unknown, in certain land there situate, in the occupation of William Cornwell, did, by night, to wit, after the expiration of the first hour after sunset on Monday the 23rd day of October, in the year of our Lord 1843, and before the beginning of the first hour before sunrise on the 24th day of October, in the same year, that is to say, about the hour of one of the night of the said 23rd day of October, unlawfully enter upon certain inclosed land, with a net for the purpose of taking game, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided. And thereupon, we, the said Justices, adjudged the said Robert Fletcher the younger, for his said offence, to be imprisoned in the common gaol at Cambridge, in and for the said county of Cambridge, and there to be kept to hard labour for the period of three calendar months, and that at the expiration of such period he, the said Robert Fletcher the younger, find sureties by recognizance, as hereafter mentioned. These are, therefore, to require you, the said constable, to apprehend and forthwith convey the said Robert Fletcher the younger to the said common gaol at Cambridge aforesaid, and deliver him to the said keeper thereof, together with this precept; and you, the said keeper, are hereby commanded to receive the said Robert Fletcher the younger into your custody in the said common gaol, there to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for the period of three calendar months; and if, at the expiration of such period, the said Robert Fletcher the younger shall not find sureties, by recognizance, himself in the sum of 10*l.* and two sureties in the sum of 5*l.* each, or one surety in the sum of 10*l.*, conditioned that he, the said Robert Fletcher the younger, shall not so offend again for the space of one year next following, then that you, the said keeper, further imprison the said Robert Fletcher the younger, in your custody, at Cambridge aforesaid, and there to be kept to hard labour for the space of six calendar months, unless such sureties shall be sooner found. Given under our hands and seals, the day of October, in the year of our Lord 1843.

And the defendants further say, that the said Robert Fletcher the younger, in the said conviction and in the said warrant of commitment mentioned, is the plaintiff in this suit; and that the said Justices, in the said conviction and in the said warrant of commitment mentioned, are the defendants in this suit; and that the said conviction of the plaintiff, recited in the said warrant of commitment, is the same conviction as in this plea mentioned, and set forth according to the words thereof, and not another and different conviction; and that the said offence, of which the said plaintiff was so convicted as aforesaid, was and is the same offence as is mentioned in the said warrant of commitment, and not another and different offence; and that the said common gaol in this plea and in the said conviction of the said plaintiff, and in the said warrant of commitment respectively mentioned, was and is in the parish of Chesterton aforesaid, and was and is the same common gaol as in the said declaration mentioned, and not another and different common gaol. And the defendants further say, that afterwards and just before the said time when, &c., to wit, on the 26th day of October, A.D. 1843, the said defendants, as such Justices as aforesaid, delivered the said warrant of commitment to one S. L, then being the constable of Soham, in the said county of Cambridge, to be executed in due form of law, and that the said S. L, so being such constable there, and at the said time when, &c., under and by virtue and in pursuance of the said warrant apprehended, &c. the said plaintiff, and delivered him to Charles Orridge, the governor and keeper of the gaol in the declaration mentioned, as he lawfully might, &c., and the said Charles Orridge received the plaintiff into his custody, under and in pursuance of the said warrant, and imprisoned him, &c., and forced and compelled him to go and work and labour on the said treadmill and treadwheel, being the hard labour in the said conviction and in the said warrant of commitment mentioned, for the space of time in the declaration mentioned, and kept and detained the said plaintiff in custody, until, &c., as he lawfully might, &c., which are the same alleged trespasses, &c. And the defendants further say, that, at the time when the said Charles Orridge, so being such gaoler, received the said plaintiff into his custody, under and by virtue of the said warrant, he, the said Charles Orridge, and also the said plaintiff, well knew the day and time when the said warrant was made and issued by the said defendants as aforesaid. And the defendants further say, that the said plaintiff was discharged from his said imprisonment, to wit, on the said 22nd day of November, A.D. 1843, and within three calendar months next after he was so convicted; and this, &c.

Demurrer, on the ground (amongst others) that the conviction set out in the plea contained no statement of any offence for summary conviction within 9 Geo. 3. c. 69, and that it did not appear that the plaintiff entered or was in the close for the purpose of taking or destroying game therein, or that he entered or was therein by night, for the purpose of taking game by night.

Gunning, in support of the demurrer.—The defendants have set out the conviction and warrant specially, and must stand or fall by it; though they might have given the special matter in evidence under the general issue, yet nothing is to be intended in their favour on a special plea.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—There can be no doubt that the privilege of pleading the general issue, and giving the special matter in evidence, is not to be understood as a privilege of pleading badly.]

Then the conviction is insufficient; it does not state that the plaintiff was armed by night for the purpose of taking game "by night," or that he was in the inclosed land for the purpose of taking game "there" or "therein;" he may have been crossing the land for the purpose of taking game at a distance—In re Fletcher (2), where Patteson, J. discharged the plaintiff who was imprisoned under this very conviction.

[PATTESON, J.—I discharged the prisoner on the ground that the warrant of commitment had no date. The conviction was not before me.]

In The King v. Ganier (3), it was held by Coleridge, J., that to sustain an indictment under this statute, it must be proved that the parties were in the place charged in the indictment, with the intent to destroy game "there."

[COLERIDGE, J.—In that case there was no question made as to whether the prisoners might not be in the act of transit from one place to another, and no other plantation was suggested.]

[PATTESON, J.—In that case the word "there" does occur.]

The same is to be found in all the precedents. In Davies v. the King (4), (in error) it was held, that an indictment, which contained no distinct statement that the prisoners were armed, by night, in the close, for the purpose of killing game, was bad: that case is not so strong as the present, as the words "then and there" do occur in it. This conviction neither shews that the plaintiff entered the inclosed land for the purpose of taking game there, or for the purpose of taking it by night.

[COLERIDGE, J.—In Davies v. the King the words “then and there” did not refer to the killing and taking; but would not the statement that a party was armed by night for the purpose of killing game, be sufficient, whether it were in the particular close or not?]

The keepers would be less likely to enter into conflict with a person who did not intend to take game on the covers where they met with him.—He then proceeded to argue on the objections to the warrant itself, and other objections to the plea. This part of the argument is omitted, as the points raised in it were not noticed in the judgment of the Court (5).

Worlledge, contra.—The conviction is good. It follows the words of the statute; and if anything more be wanting, it is stated distinctly in the plea, that in fact the

M.C. 229.—Thirdly, that it was not stated that the plaintiff was called on for his defence, or that he made any, and what it was.—Lastly, that the plea set out unnecessary matter—Hembro v. Bailey, 1 Cr. & Mee. 205; s.c. 2 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Exch. 55; Bishton v. Evans, 2 Cr. M. & R. 17; s.c. 4 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Exch. 142; Shearm v. Burnard, 10 Ad. & El. 598; s.c. 8 Law J. Rep. plaintiff was in the inclosed land for the purpose of taking game there by night; and those facts must be taken to be admitted by the demurrer. The gist of the offence is the entry by night; and the form of conviction agrees with that given in the act of parliament, as far as it goes, and also with the form of conviction given in Dickenson's Guide to the Quarter Sessions, p. 891, 5th edition.

[PATTESON, J.—The earlier paragraph of 9 Geo. 4. c. 69. s. 1. alludes to the taking of game “by night.” It would be singular if the legislature should not have meant that the entry was to kill game “by night.” It is no offence, under the act, to kill game in the day-time.]

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—Would a party who entered between nine in the evening and six in the morning, for the purpose of taking game at seven or eight, be punishable under the act?]

It is submitted that he would, as the question is not what evidence is necessary to bring the charge home to the party, if the charge itself be, as is the case here, set out in the very words of the act.

[PATTESON, J.—It seems to me that you are in this dilemma: either it is necessary that the entry should be by night for the purpose of taking game in the close, or for the purpose of taking game by night; otherwise, an entry might well be by night, for the purpose of traversing the ground to get at game, at a distant spot, at a lawful time.]

The question is, how much is necessary to be stated in the conviction; all the evidence need not be set out.

[COLERIDGE, J.—But how are we to know that the necessary evidence was given?]

It is to be presumed that the Justices knew the law, and what was the evidence necessary to constitute the offence. Besides, if the words alone of the conviction be looked at, they are sufficient. If it were said that A. B. went into Norfolk to kill game, that could hardly be true, if his purpose was to kill game not in Norfolk but in Suffolk. In Mann v. Davers (6) and The King v. Marsh (7), convictions were held good, which pursued the language of the particular statutes on which they were founded. In The Queen v. Ashe (8), before Wightman, J., at Taunton, at the Summer Assizes, an indictment worded as the present conviction, it was held good on demurrer.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—I do not think that that case can be considered an authority. The demurrer was ultimately withdrawn with a view to having the point reserved, and the prisoner was acquitted on the merits.]

In The King v. Stevens (9) Lord Ellenborough observed, with respect to indictments and informations, that "if the sense be clear, nice exceptions ought not to be regarded." In The King v. Chandler (10) Lord Holt observes, "That in convictions it is sufficient for the Justices to pursue the words of the statute in the description of the offence, and they are not confined to the legal forms requisite by indictments for offences by the common law. For though all acts which subject men to new and other trials than those by which they ought to be tried by the common law ought to be strictly construed, yet, when such a statute is made, one ought to pursue the intent of the makers, and expound it in so reasonable a manner as that it may be executed." So, in The King v. Speed (11), the same Chief Justice observes, "If there is a pretence of right, we ought to suppose that the Justice would acquit the defendant, because he is intrusted with the execution of the law . . . it is enough to lay the fact in the words of the act of parliament." In The King v. Barham (12), it was held necessary to prove the intent to be to kill game in the particular close specified in the indictment, but not that it was necessary to allege it. In Paley on Convictions, p. 108, 3rd edition, authorities are cited to shew that, "in all cases where the quality of the offence is not of a complicated nature, but consists of a simple fact, it is sufficient to use the words of the statute."

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—But no authority is given for the broad position as to complicated cases. What are complicated cases for this purpose?]

Davies v. the King is, if applicable, in the defendants' favour, as it was not decided, or even objected, there, that the indictment should state that the defendant's intent was to take game in the particular closes. In The King v. Capewell (13), the prisoner was convicted on a count which did not state the intent to kill game in the particular close.

Gunning, in reply.

The judgment of the Court was now delivered by—

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—In this case many important matters were discussed in the argument; but there is only one point to which we find it necessary to advert—the defendants' plea cannot be supported, unless the conviction is good in point of law. The plaintiff contends, that it is invalid for want of setting forth that he entered the close with intent to kill game there. The defendants' learned counsel admitted, that the conviction as laid could only have been proved by evidence of the intent shewn to kill game there; but he argued, that the statement in the conviction of the offence in the terms of the act creating it was sufficient, although more might be necessary to be proved by the evidence. This proposition is undoubtedly too extensive. The rule laid down in Paley on Convictions, that it is sufficient to follow the words of the act, unless the offence be of a complicated nature, is open to two objections: it does not rest upon any authority, nor does it furnish any criterion by which Justices of the Peace or this Court can discover what cases are thus comprehended. In favour of the defendants' general proposition, The King v. Marsh was cited, where Littledale, J. in the course of his judgment observes, that, "generally speaking, it is sufficient in an indictment or a declaration founded upon a statute to pursue the words of the statute," which is undoubtedly true, but imports that there are cases in which it would not be sufficient. The decision there, which dispenses thus with the word "knowingly," and the statement of the want of qualification in the defendant, in a conviction for the possession of game, appears to be founded on the defendant's trade, and the duty imposed on him by the act as a carrier.

(13) 5 Car. & Pay. 549.

In James v. Phelps (14), which was an action on the case for a malicious prosecution, where the defendant had indicted the plaintiff for felony, in obstructing the working of a mine, some members of the Court expressed an opinion, that an obstruction not wilful or with knowledge could not amount to a felony on general principles; and I well remember, although the words are not reported, that it was not stated that The King v. Corden (15) was a distinct and pointed authority, for the purpose of shewing that the words of the act are not universally all that must appear on the conviction. There, the charge was for fishing in a brook. It was held bad for want of negation of the owner's consent; and the same argument here resorted to would have supplied that defect, and was pressed on the Court, who said, however, "the offence intended in the conviction is fishing in the fishery of Mr. Hayne, being private property. But all this might be done, for aught that appears upon this conviction, with the consent of the owner. The fact ought to appear, so that the Court may be able to judge whether the conviction be agreeable to law. If the owner had been the complainer, that would have shewn his dissent: but this conviction is upon the complaint of Martha Buxton; and it does not appear that the defendant had been guilty of fishing in any water being private property, without consent of the owner." As in that case, the consent of the owner was required to be negated in the conviction, so in the present, the necessity of its alleging an intent to kill game there, is deduced from the enormous consequences which would otherwise follow; for it cannot be disputed, the omission would leave any man open to a summary conviction as an offender against the 9 Geo. 4. c. 69. s. 1, who shall enter the land of another, at an early hour during that period which the statute defines as the night-time, with the intent to pass over such land, in order to arrive at preserves of his own, and there shoot his own pheasants. The conviction states, in the terms of the act, that the plaintiff entered the close unlawfully; but we do not know in what sense that word is used. The Justices of the Peace may have thought it unlawful to enter into the close with the remotest purpose of killing game, or they may possibly mean that the entry was unlawful as a trespass on the land of another. If such was their meaning, the fact ought to have been averred; and if that ground of illegality was held essential to the offence, the decision in Corden's case would prove the absence of the owner's acquiescence ought also to be averred. Two cases which occurred at the assizes, before two of my learned Brothers, were cited—The King v. Gainer and The Queen v. Davis. In the former, the indictment, framed on section 9. of the same act, alleged, that the defendants entered a wood, armed, with intent to kill game there. My Brother Coleridge held that strict proof of that precise intent was requisite, observing, that although they intended to kill game in every other cover in the country, that indictment could not be proved without shewing the other intent also. It was not holden, or even argued, that the word there would be rejected as surplusage. The other case occurred before my Brother Patteson, who held, in the first place, the arming of one of the party was not the arming of all, so as to satisfy an indictment on the same section. This, alone, secured the defendant's acquittal; and there was no absolute necessity for inquiring whether the intent must be to kill game in the place entered; but the learned Judge pointed out the deficiency of such proof, as fatal to the prosecution. There are, however, strong reasons for dispensing with such allegation of intent in the description of the offence, in misdemeanours which do not apply to an offence made the subject of summary conviction. In the former case, the mischief, against which the act appears to be directed, is danger to the public peace, produced by the assemblage, in the night, of armed numbers, in pursuit of game: the place where the game is to be killed is wholly immaterial; and it is not impossible that the cases now stated may deserve more consideration. But when the thing denounced by law is the entry of a close for the purpose of killing game, the words in themselves carry, in an ordinary sense, the impression, although they do not necessarily purport, that the intention is to kill the game there; and the probable result of not so restricting the sense of the clause has been already pointed out as too monstrous to have been contemplated. The learned counsel, indeed, admitted on the argument the sense ought to be so restricted, and that it is in fact so restricted by the very words employed in the statute; and hence the omission objected to makes no difference. A doubt was felt on the Bench whether that admission was not too large. On reflection, it seems to us to be no more than the principle of former cases requires, that principle being when a certain act is made punishable by summary conviction, which act may be lawful, if performed under certain circumstances, these circumstances ought to be negatived in the conviction. None of us doubt that when the proof must negative such circumstance, the allegation in the instrument of conviction ought to do the same. This principle is well expressed on a similar, although not exactly the same, occasion in The Queen v. Baines (16). Proceedings in cases of this nature, which are to deprive a man of his freedom in a summary way, without letting him be tried by his peers, are always construed strictly, and never supplied by intendment of matter which does not appear on the face of them. Our judgment must, therefore, be in favour of the plaintiff.

Tenement, Settlement by—Joint Occupation—6 Geo. 4. c. 57.

A renting and occupation of a house and land by two joint tenants, the rent paid for the land alone being 20l. a year, gives each of the joint tenants a settlement under the 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 2.

On an appeal against an order of two Justices, for the removal of Mary Liddle, widow of George Liddle, and her five children, from Pollard's Lands, in the county of Durham, to St. Lawrence, Appleby, in the county of Westmoreland, the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court upon a case, which stated, that George Liddle (the husband of the pauper,) and Robert Spence had, in February 1829, taken a lease from J. S. of a farm, in the appellant parish, consisting of a separate and distinct dwelling-house, and seventy acres of land, for three years, at the annual rent of 76l., and that they continued jointly to rent and occupy the same for three years, and paid the rent for the same. George Liddle, during the said three years, resided and slept in the house, which was worth about 16l. a year. The land, independently of the house, was worth 60l. a year. The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether George Liddle gained a settlement in the appellant parish by such renting and occupation. If so, the order of Sessions was to be confirmed; if not, to be quashed.

Watson, in support of the order of Sessions, was stopped by the Court.

Archbold, contra.—By the stat. 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 2, it is enacted, that "no person shall acquire a settlement, by reason of renting any tenement, unless such tenement shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bond fide rented by such person, for the sum of 10l. a year at the least," &c. The words "separate and distinct" apply as well to land as to a dwelling-house or building. Here, George Liddle occupied both the house and the land jointly with Spence. No joint occupation of land, or of a house and land, will confer a settlement under this statute.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The point does not admit of doubt. The act of parliament has studiously avoided doing the very thing which the appellant argues it has done. To gain a settlement under the statute, by renting a dwelling-house, the dwelling-house must be separate and distinct. The land need not be so.

1845. } In re JENNINGS AND ANOTHER.
Jan. 25. }Criminal Information—Overseers.

The Court refused a criminal information against overseers for endeavouring to induce paupers fraudulently to remove to another parish, the ordinary remedy being by indictment.

Pashley moved for a rule, calling upon Robert Jennings and William Pexton, overseers of the poor for the township of Storwood, in the East Riding of the county of York, to shew cause why a criminal information should not issue against them for alleged misconduct towards certain paupers, Wilson Alison, his wife, and four children. He applied, upon affidavits, stating that the paupers were chargeable to Storwood, which was a township maintaining its own poor, and that an order of removal had been obtained by the overseers of Storwood, removing the pauper, W. A. and his family, to the parish of Sutton-upon-Derwent, in the East Riding of the same county, which was quashed upon appeal to the Quarter Sessions, in July 1844. A subsequent order, removing the paupers to the same parish, was made on the 14th of September 1844, but no copy was ever served upon the parish of Sutton-upon-Derwent. That the pauper Alison being thereupon turned out of a house which he had previously occupied, applied to the overseers, Jennings and Pexton, for relief, which they refused to give. The affidavits then stated various attempts on the part of the overseers to drive the paupers out of Storwood, and to induce them fraudulently to remove themselves to the parish of Sutton-upon-Derwent, for the purpose of fixing that parish with their support; that Pexton, who was also a publican, had refused the pauper and his family admittance and shelter in his house, alleging that he had nothing to do with them; that various inhabitants of Storwood had driven them away from their houses, on the ground that they did not dare to offend Jennings, who, besides being overseer, was the principal person in the township; and that one Padget, who was then in Jennings's service, had turned the pauper's wife and family out of his house at night, by his master's orders.

NEW SERIES, XIV.—MAG. CAS.

[WILLIAMS, J.—Is there any instance of the Court having granted a criminal information against overseers, for misconduct in their office? The offence is notoriously the subject of an indictment.]

In The King v. Herbert (1), an information was granted against overseers for procuring the marriage of a woman, in order to change her settlement. So, in The King v. Tarrant (2), for procuring a pauper to marry another pauper, who was with child of a bastard. Where overseers procured a soldier to marry a pauper idiot, who was chargeable to their parish, an information was granted—The King v. Watson (3). In 2 Nolan's Poor Law, p. 371, it is stated, "Overseers may be punished for most breaches of their duty, by information or indictment." The principle which was laid down in The King v. Barrat (4) is applicable to the present case, and the overseers may come and shew what their motives were in acting as they did; besides, it is much more convenient, and productive of less expense, that this matter should be settled by this Court, than by a Court of gaol delivery. He also referred to 1 Russell on Crimes, p. 52. (Greaves' edit.)

WILLIAMS, J.—If these overseers have persuaded themselves that they are beyond the reach of the law, they may chance to find themselves mistaken, provided the facts make out such a case against them as has been stated. But the single question which I have to decide is, whether there is any sufficient reason shewn for my interfering in the unusual mode suggested, namely, by granting a criminal information. I pronounce no opinion upon the facts of this case, appearing as they do before me merely upon an ex parte statement; but supposing that statement to be correct, the conduct of these persons is certainly punishable by indictment. That is the ordinary course of proceeding, and an information is only granted where an extraordinary remedy is required; and I have always understood that one at least of the chief ingredients in an application of this nature ought to be, the necessity of a prompt interference, in order to prevent a breach of the peace. I cannot see anything which seems to call for this extraordinary interference here. If, indeed, Mr. Pashley had made out that if this application were granted the proceedings would have been lighter or less expensive to the pauper, that might have been a strong argument with me for granting it; but it seems to me that the expense will be identically the same, even supposing an indictment found at the assizes were removed, as it probably would be, into this court, when it would be sent down as a Nisi Prius record for trial. I see no reason, therefore, for taking this case out of the ordinary course of proceeding by indictment, and must therefore refuse the rule.

By a local act, 8 & 9 Geo. 3. c. xlv. trustees therein appointed were empowered to purchase certain land, and to convert it into a place for holding a market in the town of T, and for erecting a market-house; and it was provided that the trustees should stand seised of the land, buildings, &c. in trust, first, to pay the expenses of obtaining the act; secondly, to pay off all debts incurred in the purchase of the ground and erecting the market, and also all expenses incurred in providing and lighting lamps in certain streets in the said town, and purchasing the stalls, &c., and certain mortgages authorized by the act, and the interest thereof; and after the discharge of the same the market and the rents and profits thereof should be and remain an estate for the use and benefit of the parish of M, in the said town of T. for ever, and should and might be applied by the said trustees to the clothing, educating, and placing out apprentices of the children of the poor inhabitants of M.

Section 26. of this act provided, that the share and proportion which these premises contributed to the poor-rate in 1768, should be for ever paid by the trustees in respect thereof. Under this act a market was erected in the parish of M.

By a subsequent local act, 57 Geo. 3, the trustees were empowered to purchase other lands for the purpose of enlarging the market, and it was provided that the act first mentioned, and all and every the authorities, powers, &c. matters and things therein contained, except such as should be thereby varied, altered, or repealed, or as were repugnant to or otherwise provided for by that act, should be in full force and effect as effectually as if they had been repeated and re-enacted in the body of that act.

Held, first, that the trustees were liable to be rated to parish B. for the market-building, stalls, &c. in that parish.

Secondly, that the clause 25. of the former act was not incorporated into the latter, so as to limit the proportion of rate in the buildings in the parish B.

On an appeal against a rate made for the relief of the poor of Bishop's Hull, in the county of Somerset, whereby the appellants were rated as owners and occupiers of a certain building called a market-place, and certain butchers' stalls in the parish of Bishop's Hull, the Sessions confirmed the rate subject to the opinion of the Court, on a case, which stated, that by an act of parliament, 8 & 9 Geo. 3. c. xlv., intituled 'An act for erecting a market-house and holding a market in the town of Taunton, in the county of Somerset, and for preventing the holding of any market in the streets of the said town, and for cleansing the streets and preventing nuisances and obstructions therein, and for lighting certain streets in the said town,' the trustees therein appointed were empowered to purchase certain ground and buildings therein described, situate within the said town of Taunton, and to convert the said ground into a place for holding the said market, and for erecting a market-house. And it was thereby enacted (sect. 21.) "that all lands, tenements, and hereditaments to be purchased by virtue and under the authority of that act for the site of the said market as aforesaid, and all buildings, houses, sheds, stalls, standings, and other erections to be built or set up thereupon, and the rents and profits arising from the same, should be and were thereby vested in the said trustees and their successors for ever, and that they should stand seised thereof in trust for the several uses, intents, and purposes thereafter mentioned and declared concerning the same; that is to say, that the said trustees should out of the first monies to be borrowed or raised by any ways and means under the authority of the act, pay and discharge the costs and expenses of obtaining and passing that act; and should, in the next place, pay off and discharge all debts that should be incurred by the purchase of the said lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and the ground whereon to erect the said market and buildings; and all such charges and expenses as should necessarily attend the erecting and constituting the same; and also the expenses of erecting, maintaining, and lighting of lamps in certain streets in the said town therein particularly mentioned; and also the expenses of purchasing the stalls and standings erected in the then present market on market days, thereinbefore directed to be purchased by the said trustees; and also certain mortgages by the said act authorized to be made by the said trustees as thereinbefore mentioned, and the interest thereof, so long as any of them should remain unpaid; and after the discharge of the same, and of all debts accrued on account of the said market and buildings, the said market and buildings, and the tolls, rents, and profits thereof or arising thereby, should be and remain in the said trustees in trust as an estate for the use and benefit of the parish of St. Mary Magdalene, in the said town of Taunton, for ever; and should and might be applied by the said trustees to the clothing, education, and placing out apprentices of so many of the children of the poor inhabitants of the said parish of St. Mary Magdalene, as the said trustees should from time to time direct or appoint."

Section 25. provided, "that the share and proportion which the several grounds, houses, and buildings which should be vested in the said trustees by virtue of that act, did contribute or pay, or was or were charged with towards the land-tax, church, and poor-rates in the year 1768, according to the rents of the same as they were then rated, should be for ever paid to the collector or collectors, and other proper officer or officers authorized to receive the same, by the said trustees; and the said trustees should for ever thereafter be charged with and liable to the payment thereof; and such payments as aforesaid should be in lieu of all taxes, rates, or any impositions of what kind or nature soever to be paid in respect of the said market-house and other houses and buildings to be erected by virtue of the said act."

In pursuance of the said act the trustees of Taunton market, in the year 1768, purchased the grounds and buildings mentioned in the said act, and erected a market and market-house on the said ground, all in the parish of St. Mary Magdalene, Taunton.

In the year 1817, the trustees, finding the market was not sufficiently large, obtained an act, 57 Geo. 3. c. lxxv., intituled 'An act for enlarging the market-place, and regulating the market in the town of Taunton, in the county of Somerset, and for better lighting, cleansing, and otherwise improving the said town; and for amending an act of his present Majesty relative thereto,' by which it was enacted (sect. 1), that it should be lawful for the trustees to treat, contract, and agree with any person or persons who should be willing to sell the same, for the purchase of any messuages, houses, buildings, gardens, and other ground within 1,000 yards of the site of the said then present market; and, after purchasing the same, to appropriate a competent part thereof for enlarging the market for the sale of cattle, swine, and any other beasts, articles, and things, and for any other purposes of the said market; and that from and after the said additional ground should be so set out for the purposes of the said market, the same should be deemed and taken as part of the then present market-place to all intents and purposes."

It was further enacted (sect. 24), "that the said recited act, 8 & 9 Geo. 3. c. xlv., and all and every the authorities, powers, provisions, regulations, clauses, matters and things therein contained, except such of them as were thereby varied, altered or repealed, or as were repugnant to, or otherwise provided for by that act, should be in full force and effect, and should extend to, and be practised, applied, and put in execution for effecting the purposes of that act as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if all such authorities, powers, provisions, regulations, clauses, matters, and things therein contained were repeated and re-enacted in the body of that act with relation thereto."

The trustees, under the authority of the last act, purchased land and buildings situate within the parish of Bishop's Hull, within 1,000 yards of the site of the old market, and within the town of Taunton, and converted the same into a butchery or butcher market, being the premises in question.

The trustees are occupiers of the premises, and collect by means of their clerk and agents the tolls and money paid by those who frequent the market in respect of the butchery, and the stalls therein.

There is a debt of 18,000*l.* charged by way of mortgage on the tolls of the market at 4*l.* 10*s.* per cent. interest upon certain instruments or deeds-poll (a copy of one of which accompanied the case). Some of these securities are held by three of the trustees rated, and the latest date of any of them is 1833.

At Christmas 1843, there was a balance of 359*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* due to the treasurer of the trustees upon the balance of account, which balance has been in some years greater, and in some less, and has become due by reason of monies having been from time to time advanced by him to defray the current expenses of the market, but the same is not charged by mortgage upon the tolls of the market. The revenue of the market is in most years sufficient to meet the annual expenses of the market, together with the interest of the debts above mentioned, but no surplus has ever existed after payment of the said expenses and interest, and no part of the mortgage debt above mentioned has yet been paid off.

Part of the houses and buildings standing on so much of the site of the market as is in the parish of Bishop's Hull, was, in the year 1817, rated to the relief of the poor of the said parish, thus: "Messrs. Brigdale & Co.—Bank 15*s.*" The remaining part of the said houses and buildings was not rated in the said year.

No evidence was given of any rate charged upon the said premises in the year 1768, nor of the rateable value of the property, nor of any part thereof, nor of any rent paid for the same in that year.

The two acts above mentioned of 8 & 9 Geo. 3. c. xliv. and 57 Geo. 3. c. lxxv. were to be taken as forming part of the case.

The rateable value of the premises in question was correct, supposing the trustees to be rateable for the same, according to the 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 96.

At the trial of the appeal the trustees contended, first, that they were not rateable at all, inasmuch as they had no beneficial occupation of the property rated, the tolls and monies arising therefrom being entirely devoted to the purposes specified in the said acts for the regulation of the market; secondly, that if rateable at all in respect of the said buildings, they were rateable only in one of the following ways: first, according to the share and proportion which the land and buildings taken by them under the act 57 Geo. 3. c. 65. did contribute or pay, or were charged with towards the poor-rate in the year 1768, according to the rents of the same as they were then rated, or, secondly, according to the share and proportion which the said land and buildings did contribute or pay, or were charged with towards the poor-rate in the year 1817, according to the rents of the same as they were then rated.

If the Court should be of opinion that the trustees were not liable to be rated, or were rateable only in the proportion which the land and buildings taken by them under the said act, 57 Geo. 3. c. lxxv., did contribute or pay, or were charged with towards the poor-rate in the year 1768, according to the rents of the same as they were then rated, the order of Sessions was to be quashed, and the rate amended by striking out the names of the trustees. If the Court should be of opinion that the said trustees were rateable only in the proportion which the land and buildings taken by them under the said act, 57 Geo. 3. c. 65, did contribute or pay, or were charged with towards the poor-rate in the year 1817, according to the rents of the same as they were then rated, the rate was to be amended by substituting 15*l.* as the rateable value of the market-house and buildings, and 6*s.* 3*d.* as the rate thereon. If the Court should be of opinion that the trustees were rateable for the said premises according to the 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 96, the order of Sessions was to be confirmed.

Moody (with whom was Phinn), in support of the order of Sessions.—Two points are raised by the appellants in this case. With respect to the first, it can hardly be contended that the trustees are not liable to be rated at all, when the 25th section of the act expressly recognizes such liability. Besides, it is clear that there is a pecuniary benefit and return in the hands of the trustees. The distinction between public and charitable purposes, in the application of the funds, as affecting the question of rateability, is now fully established—The King v. St. Giles, York (1), The Queen v. Sterry (2). Then it appears from the case that the premises, if let, would produce a rent, and the application cannot be treated as one for a charitable purpose, as it is a trust for the benefit of another parish—The Governors of the Poor of Bristol v. Wait (3), The Queen v. the Wallingford Union (4). Those cases are not distinguishable in principle from the present. Here the original mode of occupation was by letting the stalls, &c. to butchers, in which case the butchers would have been rateable if the letting was by the month or year. If the whole market were let to a tenant, such tenant would be rateable. It may, perhaps, be contended, that the premises being encumbered by the debt, no profit is at present derived from them, but The Queen v. the Blackfriars Bridge Company (5) is an answer to this objection. All that can be said is, that the profit is received by the mortgagees. This is not an occupation for the benefit of the public, as in The King v. the Inhabitants of Liverpool (6), and The King v. the Trustees of the Weaver Navigation (7). In the first of those cases there was a distinct enactment that the dock duties should be applied only in repairing and maintaining the docks, and "to no other use or purpose whatever." Secondly, as to the amount of the rate. The clause 25. of the first act cannot be considered as re-enacted in the second. It is ambiguous and "repugnant" to the former act.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—It might raise a difficult question of fact, but I do not see how it is termed ambiguous, or that it is repugnant to the latter act.]

The Court will put such a construction on it as is most consistent with the other provisions and with the law—The Queen v. the Monmouthshire Canal Company (8), The Queen v. the Leeds and Liverpool Canal Company (9), The King v. the Birmingham Canal Company (10). This is the act procured by the trustees, and will be construed most strongly against them.

Cockburn (Kinglake, Serj., Carey, and Carrow were with him), contra.—There is here no beneficial occupation by the trustees, and the tolls are appropriated by the act to public purposes; the case, therefore, falls within the principle of The King v. Terrott (11). In that case Lord Ellenborough says, "If the party rated have the use of the building, or other subject of the rate, as a mere servant of the Crown, or of any public body, or in any other respect for the mere exercise of a public duty therein, and have no beneficial occupation of or emolument resulting from it in any personal or private respect, then he is not rateable." Another leading case is The King v. the Commissioners of Salter's Load Sluice (12). Here the trustees have no power beyond that which is given by the act, and cannot apply the tolls to purposes of their own. Where then is the beneficial occupation? The whole amount raised is disposed of under the act of parliament—The King v. the Commissioners for Lighting Beverley (13).

[COLERIDGE, J.—If the act of parliament had authorized the trustees to put the money into their own pockets, it would hardly be said that they were not rateable, and yet they would dispose of the money under the act. It is not uncommon to provide that a portion shall be devoted to a public purpose, and the rest to the private benefit of particular parties.]

In The Queen v. the Justices of Worcestershire (14) the Justices were held not rateable as occupiers of the Judges' lodgings; and Lord Denman, C.J. there says, "The only profit which the whole body derives is applicable to a public purpose, and for such profit they are not rateable." The same distinction was also taken in The Queen v. the Mayor of Liverpool (15), where all the authorities are reviewed; that case was followed by The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Exminster (16), where the corporation of Exeter was held not to be rateable, though the property was situate without the borough. In The Queen v. the Blackfriars Bridge Company there were shareholders who were empowered to take tolls to reimburse themselves. Are those purposes to which the tolls are to be applied in this case public purposes? It cannot be disputed that the erecting of the market, lighting lamps, and paying the expenses and debts, are public purposes within the cases already referred to; but it is said that the ulterior object is the benefit of the poor of St. Mary Magdalene. As to that, there is no surplus applicable to this purpose at present. Suppose there had been a similar ulterior object in The King v. the Commissioners for Lighting Beverley, would the decision have been different? This provision brings the case within The King v. the Inhabitants of Liverpool, and The King v. Waldo (17).

[COLERIDGE, J.—Where there is a trust for poor persons not receiving parish relief, are not the trustees rated?]

In The Queen v. Wilson (18), a rate on the treasurer of the London Missionary Society was held bad by reason of there being no beneficial occupation by him.

[PATTESON, J.—According to your argument trustees who managed a farm for the benefit of infant cestui que trusts would not be rateable.]

pose, as it is not strictly within the duty of the parish officers. That distinguishes this case from that of The Governors of the Poor of Bristol v. Wait. But, secondly, the trustees are only rateable according to proportions charged on the premises in the year 1768. It is contended that the enactment is ambiguous, and the case of The King v. the Birmingham Canal Company is referred to, to shew the difficulty and hardship resulting from the proposed construction. This Court, however, will not go into the question of the difficulty there may be in rating in any particular manner; that is a question for the Sessions. The parish officer may always refer to the old rates; they are public documents, and the overseers are bound to keep them. Besides, with respect to part of the property, namely, that taken under the earlier act, it is clear that it must be done; and why can it not be done just as well with respect to that which is taken under the second?

Moody, in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court was afterwards delivered by—

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—One point to be decided in this case is, whether a clause in the 9 Geo. 3. c. xlv. is to be considered as re-enacted by, and introduced into the 57 Geo. 3. c. lxx.; and if that should be determined in the affirmative, it will not only settle the question of rateability, so largely discussed at the bar, but will also determine the principle on which the rating is to proceed. It will be convenient, therefore, to consider that question first.

The latter act provides that all clauses in the former, which are not, by the latter, varied, altered, or repealed, nor repugnant to, nor otherwise provided for, shall be in full force and effect, and shall extend to and be applied for effecting the purposes of the latter, as fully as if they had been repeated and re-enacted in the body of the latter with relation thereto.

Except, therefore, in the excepted cases, the clauses of the former act not only remain in force, but are extended and applied to carrying the latter into effect, as fully as if expressly repeated in it. The clause in question does not fall within any of the exceptions, unless it is repugnant to something in the latter statute, and it is difficult to contend this; it relates to the rating of property taken under the powers of the act in which it is found; but in the latter statute there is no rating clause provided in any form, nor any clause from which it can be directly inferred that the trustees are not to be rateable at all; and there can, therefore, be no repugnance between the two statutes in this respect in any strict sense of the term; nor does it amount to repugnance, that there may be some difficulty in the application, or some inconvenience and hardship resulting to the respondent parish from its being so applied, although these considerations will have their weight in the argument that it was never intended to be so applied. This remark, however, does not entirely conclude the matter. Upon general principle and authority it may be still open to the respondents to contend that large as those words are, and the exception being excluded, still the clause in question is not within the operation of the re-enacting clause. The clause itself is of a peculiar kind: passing over some minor difficulties which the language might present, it provides, that the property to be vested in trustees under the act shall for ever pay the same share or proportion towards the land-tax, church and poor-rates, which it paid in 1768, according to the rents of the same as it was then rated. In terms, this fixes not the amount of the assessment, but the share and proportion which it is to contribute and pay towards the general rate. And this is neither an unusual nor an inequitable provision. The land was about to be devoted to purposes which it was conceived would be greatly beneficial to the parish, and if its own value should be thereby increased beyond that of the surrounding property, as a consideration of that benefit, the former proportion in rating it was still to be preserved. The occupiers, generally, must be taken to have agreed that the then existing proportion was a fair one in the then state of things, and to agree to its continuing for ever under any alterations which the statute might occasion: still it is obvious that the provision is in its nature of a special and limited kind, difficult to extend in its application beyond the time and place; for what was fair with reference to the same parish, and at the time of the act passing, may be most unjust when applied in another parish fifty years later, as some change of circumstances may, and, in the present case, must unquestionably prevent its application with any tolerable accuracy.

Who can now tell whether the land taken by trustees, in the year 1817, was fairly rated in the year 1768?—Who can tell or how can it be ascertained what was the amount of the assessment on it then, or what proportion it bore to the general rate on the parish. See the observation of the Judges on a similar clause, in the Monmouthshire Canal case. These considerations make it almost impossible to suppose that the framers of the latter statute intended to incorporate the clause in its terms. They probably intended to do the same with regard to the rates of 1817, which the former act had done with regard to those of 1768; but there are no words sufficient to carry into effect this intention. It is a sound rule of construction, laid down in the Second Institute, p. 287, applicable to modern as well as to ancient statutes, perhaps more so, of necessity, in consequence of the looseness of expression which now prevails—that, in the construction of one act of parliament, with reference to another, we must give to the general words of reference such a meaning only as will stand with reason and with right; and when a provision is, in its original and natural application, limited in respect to time and place, it is to give to general words of incorporation a meaning contrary to reason, and it may be, as it is in this case, contrary to right, to hold they apply to it. There is an authority for a more restrained construction in The King v. the Justices of Surrey (20), not cited in this argument; the question was, whether an appeal lay against a conviction, by two Justices, under the 25 Geo. 3. c. 72. s. 9, and that depended on the construction to be given the 33rd section of the act, which in the largest terms incorporated all the clauses, matters, and things provided by the 12 Car. 2. c. 24. “or any other law then in force, for securing, managing, &c., mitigating, recovering, adjudging, or ascertaining the duties or penalties thereby granted.” There is no doubt those words were large enough to incorporate a former appeal clause, but upon a review of all the statutes, the Court thought it was not intended to give an appeal against the decision of two Justices; and, in delivering the judgment, Ashurst, J. laid down something like a general rule. He said, "The fair construction of the clause of reference seems to be this, that all the general powers and provisions given and made in an act in pari materid, shall be virtually incorporated into this; but that such provisions as are always considered as special provisions shall not. The power of appealing from the judgment of Justices seems to be of this kind, and does not attach without its being expressly given." This is certainly a much more special provision, as it appeared in the earlier act, and which it was more unreasonable to apply generally; and we think, therefore, we are justified in putting such a limitation on the very general words of the clause of reference, as shall prevent them from applying to this provision.

It becomes, therefore, necessary to consider the general question of the rateability of land, and this, although largely debated at the bar, does not require a very long discussion, for the principles upon which it is to be determined are well settled. Whatever difficulty exists in coming to a conclusion, turns upon the application of the facts; and in this case we think there are one or two circumstances of a decisive character. The principles are these:—To make rateability, there must be occupation beneficial in its nature, that is, of a subject-matter producing a valuable return, although not necessarily profitable in any given year, on a balance sheet of profit and loss. When such an occupation is established, the occupier is rateable in respect of it, unless he is merely a trustee for the public, receiving no individual benefit, except in common with and as one of the public; in such a case the law does not regard him as occupier, but the public whom he represents. These principles are so well settled, that it is unnecessary to cite the authorities which have established them; and they are unambiguous and certain in their application, except for one question, and that is what is the meaning of the word "public"? Upon this, as might be expected, the cases are many, and the dividing line not always easy to be preserved. On the one hand, the trustees of dock estates, who receive large rates and duties wholly applicable to the construction and maintenance of docks and basins in a great public harbour, according to the case of The King v. Liverpool,—the trustees of a river navigation, where all the surplus of the rates and duties after making and maintenance was applicable only to the repairs of public bridges of the county, and such other charges as the county Magistrates in Quarter Sessions should order,—the municipal corporation of a borough, receiving town and anchorage dues, payable to the treasurer, and applicable under the 5 & 6 Will. 4. to certain specified public purposes, with a provision as to any surplus, that it should be applied under the direction of the town council, for the public benefit of the inhabitants and the improvement of the borough; as in The Queen v. the Mayor of Liverpool,—these have been held not rateable, and it was considered to be no ground for distinction in the last of the decisions, that the property in respect of which the rate was imposed, was locally situate in a parish out of the borough—as was held in The Queen v. Exminster. On the other hand, the governors of the poor of the city of Bristol, occupying land in a parish out of the city, and there lodging and employing their paupers, (5 Ad. & El. 1.) and the guardians of the union comprising many parishes, who built and occupied a workhouse in one of them, in which were lodged and employed the paupers of all the parishes—(10 Ad. & El. 259)—were held respectively liable for their occupation, and the latter case was considered not distinguishable from the former, by the circumstance that the land was in one of the parishes comprising the union. It is unnecessary to advert to more cases, our business now is rather to see within which class the facts of this case bring it, than to justify the distinctions taken between them. At the same time we may remark, that in all the first class, the public as such, unlimited by the bounds of the county, borough, or parish, had a substantial and direct interest in the benefit which the application of the fund produced; in the latter, the rate-payers, or at most the inhabitants of certain parishes, were alone concerned in the benefit, direct or indirect.

It seems to us clear, that the facts here shew that the case falls within the latter class. It appears that the proceeds of the property occupied are applicable, after payment of the purchase-money, the expense of the market, and the lighting of certain streets, as an estate to the use and benefit of the parish of St. Mary Magdalene, in the town of Taunton, and that the mode of benefiting it is to be by clothing, educating, and placing out as apprentices the children of the poor inhabitants. Whether the term "poor inhabitants" is limited to such as receive relief or not, we are unable to distinguish this in principle from the Bristol case. To the public, properly so called, it matters not by whom the poor children of this parish are clothed, educated and apprenticed; that they should receive anything beyond what the parish poor-rate is bound to afford them concerns the public so indirectly, that its interest cannot be considered as tangible and substantial enough to be regarded at all in this question.

We are, therefore, of opinion, that the order of Sessions should be confirmed. As in the Wallingford case, so here, we think it not necessary to make any observation on the intermediate cases of property voluntarily appropriated to religious and charitable purposes, for we decide this case as we did that, on the ground of this property being beneficially occupied, and not devoted to a public purpose, and that the occupiers are therefore subject in respect of it to the poor-rate. The order of Sessions will, therefore, be confirmed.

Jan. 24. } BARNES v. WHITE AND ANOTHER.

Highway—Turnpike Roads—Conviction—Warrant—Statutes 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, and 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 10.

"An Act for amending the Roads and Highways in the Isle of Wight," 53 Geo. 3. c. xcii, local and personal, gave to the commissioners powers, not only over the turnpike roads, but all other highways in the island, and contained provisions as to various other matters besides the turnpike roads. The commissioners were empowered to borrow money on the tolls, but it was declared that the act should have continuance during the term of twenty-one years:—Held, that the statute was continued by 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 10, and the subsequent statutes, so far as the turnpike roads were concerned.

A conviction, under 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 41, adjudged that "the said B. hath forfeited for the said offence the sum of 2l. 2s.:"—Held, that it was not necessary that payment of the penalty should be adjudged.

The first-mentioned act empowered the commissioners to erect gates, bars, or turnpikes, and side-bars or side-gates in, upon, or across the several roads or highways in the island, and to demand and take tolls at the turnpikes, or toll-gates, or toll-houses, or side-bars or side-gates, which should be erected in, upon, across, or on the sides of the said roads, or any of them, by virtue of that act. By 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. it is declared, that if any person shall fraudulently or forcibly pass through any such toll-gate with any horse, &c., by reason whereof the payment of any toll shall be avoided, he shall forfeit any sum not exceeding 5l. A warrant of distress recited a conviction, which on inspection proved to be valid, and stated, that B. on &c., at &c., with a certain carriage did unlawfully, &c. pass through a certain toll-gate, by means whereof payment of a certain toll, to wit, &c., then and there legally due and payable by the said B, &c., in respect of the said carriage, was avoided, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided:—Held, that the word "toll-gate" was used in the statute as synonymous with "turnpike-gate," and that the warrant was sufficient.

The warrant stated the forfeiture, and the adjudication that the said B. should forfeit and pay the sum of 2l. 2s., and directed a distress to be made, and one moiety of the penalty to be paid to the informer, and the other moiety to the treasurer of the Commissioners for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight:—Held, that a demand of the penalty was not necessary under 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, previously to issuing a distress warrant, and that the commissioners having jurisdiction over the whole of the roads in the island, the penalty was properly apportioned.

This was an action of trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close, in the parish of Carisbrooke, in the Isle of Wight, and taking his goods, to which the defendants pleaded not guilty by statute.

The cause came on for trial at the last Summer Assizes, at Winchester, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the Court upon the following

CASE.

The defendants, at the time of making the conviction, and signing by them of the warrant of distress, and of the committing of the trespass complained of, were two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the county of Southampton, acting in and for the division of the Isle of Wight.

On the 3rd of June 1843, the plaintiff having been duly summoned to answer an information in respect of the subject-matter of the conviction hereinafter mentioned, appeared before the defendants with his attorney, and objected that the local act, hereinafter mentioned, had expired, and that therefore the defendants had no jurisdiction to hear the complaint. The defendants overruled the objection, and proceeded to hear the case as set out in the conviction, and thereupon the plaintiff was convicted by the defendants, acting as such Justices, and of such conviction under the hands and seals of the defendants, the following is a copy:—

"Be it remembered, that on the 3rd day of June, in the sixth year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, and A.D. 1843, James Barnes, of the parish of Carisbrooke, in the Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton, builder, is convicted on the oath of Charles Newnham, a credible witness, before us, two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, acting in and for the said county of Southampton, and for the division of the Isle of Wight, in the said county, for that he, the said James Barnes, on the 30th day of May now last, in the parish of Carisbrooke aforesaid, in the isle and county aforesaid, on the turnpike road, before then made, and then being under the authority of an act of parliament made and passed in the 53rd year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, 'for amending the Roads and Highways in the Isle of Wight,' with a certain carriage, to wit, a cart drawn by one horse, did unlawfully, fraudulently and forcibly pass through a certain toll-gate, then and there legally situate and being under the authority of the said act, by reason whereof the payment of a certain toll, to wit, the sum of 3d., then and there legally due, demanded, and payable under the authority of the said act, by and from the said James Barnes, for and in respect of the said carriage, so drawn as aforesaid, was avoided, contrary to the form of a statute made in the 3rd year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act to amend the general laws now in being for regulating turnpike roads in that part of Great Britain called England.' And we do hereby declare and adjudge that the said James Barnes hath forfeited, for the said offence, the sum of 2l. 2s.

"Given under our hands and seals the day and year first-above written."

(Signed and sealed by the defendants.)

The case then set out a written refusal by the plaintiff to pay this fine, whereupon the following warrant was issued:—

"Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton.—To the constables of the Hundred of the West Medene, in the Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton, and all other constables whom it doth or may concern, and specially to Thomas Hayter Case.

"Whereas James Barnes, of the parish of Carisbrooke, in the Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton, builder, was, on the 3rd day of June now instant, convicted before and by us the undersigned, two of the Justices of our Lady the Queen, assigned to keep the peace of our said Lady the Queen, within the same county; and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and other misdeeds within the same county done and committed, on the oath of Charles Newnham, a credible witness, for that he, the said James Barnes, on the 30th day of May now last past, at the parish of Carisbrooke aforesaid, in the isle and county aforesaid, with a certain carriage, to wit, a cart drawn by one horse, the said cart then and there having two wheels, and the fellies of such wheels being then and there of less breadth than three inches, to wit, of the width of two inches, did unlawfully, fraudulently, and forcibly pass through a certain toll-gate, then and there situate and being, by means whereof the payment of a certain toll, to wit, the sum of three pence, then and there legally due and payable by and from the said James Barnes, for and in respect of the said carriage, so drawn as aforesaid, was avoided, contrary to the statutes in such case made and provided; by reason whereof the said James Barnes hath forfeited and become liable to pay, and we adjudged that he, the said James Barnes, shall forfeit and pay the sum of two pounds and two shillings, to be distributed as hereinafter mentioned, which said sum he, the said James Barnes, hath refused to pay. These are, therefore, in Her Majesty's name, to charge and command you to levy the said sum of 2*l.* 2*s.* by distress of the goods and chattels of the said James Barnes; and if within four days after such distress by you taken, the said sum, together with the reasonable costs and charges of taking and keeping the same, is not paid, then, that you do sell the goods and chattels, so by you distrained, and out of the money arising by and from such sale, you do pay one moiety of the said sum of 2*l.* 2*s.* to Mark Morgan, of Newport, in the same isle, who informed us of the said offence, and the other moiety thereof to the treasurer of the commissioners for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight, being the place where the said offence was committed, returning the overplus, on demand, to him the said James Barnes, the reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling the said distress being deducted, and if sufficient distress cannot be found of the goods and chattels of the said James Barnes, whereupon to levy the said sum of 2*l.* 2*s.*, then that you certify the same to us, together with this our warrant. Given under our hands and seals, at the Guildhall, in Newport, in the Isle of Wight, this 10th day of June 1843.

"R. W. White, (L.S.)"

"T. Cooke, (L.S.)"

The case then stated, that in pursuance and under the authority of this warrant, the trespass complained of was committed by the defendants; that, thereupon, the plaintiff served a notice of action on the defendants, and that it had been agreed between the parties that an act of parliament, 53 Geo. 3. c. xcii. (local and personal) entitled, 'An Act for amending the Roads and Highways in the Isle of Wight,' might be referred to. That statute provided that the commissioners appointed by it should have general jurisdiction over all the roads of the Isle of Wight, both turnpike and highway; it authorized the commissioners, by section 20, to erect "such number of gates, bars or turnpikes, and side-bars or side-gates in, upon, or across the said several roads or highways, or any of them, within the parishes and places aforesaid, and in, upon, or across any roads, lanes or ways leading, or that may hereafter lead into or out of the same," as they might deem proper; and by section 22, they or the collectors appointed by the act were empowered "to demand and take the several duties following at each and every of the several and respective turnpikes, or toll-gates, or toll-houses, or turnpike, or toll-gate, or toll-house, or side-bar, or side-gate, which shall be erected in, upon, across, or on the sides of the said roads, or any of them, by virtue of this act, and on every day, such day to be computed from twelve of the clock at night, to twelve of the clock on the succeeding night." The clause then set forth a table of tolls. By section 39, the commissioners were authorized to borrow money on mortgage of the tolls; and, by section 86, all fines were to be paid "to the treasurer of the commissioners." By the 87th section a short form of conviction was given, which required only the offence, and time and place when and where the same was committed, to be specified; and by the concluding section it was declared that the act should (so far as respects the turnpikes and tolls and monies advanced or to be borrowed on the credit thereof,) commence and take place on the 11th of October 1813, and should be in force and have continuance for and during the term of twenty-one years, and from thence to the end of the then next session of parliament. There were also provisions in the act for making rates on the parishes, to pay for land purchased to widen the roads or highways, pursuant to 13 Geo. 3. c. 78, and also in lieu of statute duty; for the appointment of parish surveyors, and for fixing the amount to be paid for cartage of materials. The statute also directed that all bridges, drains, and sewers, theretofore repaired by the parishes, should be repaired in the same manner as county bridges; and that the commissioners might compound with persons liable to repair such erections ratione tenuræ.

Channell, Serj. (Butt with him), for the plaintiff.—The main question which is raised on this case is, whether the local statute has been continued by the stat. 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 10. and the subsequent acts. The latter statute, after reciting that it is expedient that the several acts for making, amending and repairing the turnpike roads in Great Britain, which will expire during the current year should be continued, provides, "that all and every act and acts of parliament for making, amending and repairing any turnpike roads in Great Britain which will expire before the ensuing session of parliament, shall be, and the same are hereby continued." This is a statute which imposes a burden on the public, since the tolls derive their origin and continuance solely from the local acts, and not from the general Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, and it, therefore, must be construed strictly, and no statute can be deemed to be continued by it, unless it clearly falls within the class named. The object of the statute merely related to turnpike roads, and it was intended to apply only to those acts which regulated them. But the local statute in question was not one which comes either within its words or within its object, for it was not an act relating to the making, amending and repairing of turnpike roads, but to that among other purposes, and to give to the subsequent statute the effect of continuing it would be to give validity and force to the whole act, and consequently to powers and burdens, the prevalence of which the legislature clearly never contemplated. Upon looking at the preamble and the enacting part it is clear that the legislature only contemplated the continuance of acts relating exclusively to turnpike roads.

[TINDAL, C.J.—Are the commissioners authorized by the local act to borrow money? That may be a very important ingredient in the consideration of the question whether it was the intention of the legislature to continue that act.]

They had that power, but it was expressly limited by the last section during the term for which the act was passed, and therefore no argument can be founded upon that power. But supposing the Court should be of opinion that the act was continued, still the plaintiff is entitled to judgment, the conviction and warrant being defective in form. In the first place the conviction is bad, for not adjudicating that the plaintiff was to pay the fine, and also for not stating, even if that were unnecessary, to whom the payment was to be made. The statute, under which it is stated to have been made is the 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, which by sect. 141. declares that the penalties may be levied by distress, but that in case such fines, penalties, or forfeitures shall not be forthwith paid upon conviction, the Justices may order the detention of the defendant. Thence it is evident that the adjudication of payment is most material, and the defendant ought not to be left in doubt as to the party to whom he ought to pay, for it may be the means of preventing him from obtaining his liberty. It is clear that no information was afforded him by the conviction, for the name of the informer is not mentioned. The conviction is in the nature of a judgment, and ought to have the requisites at least which the Courts would deem necessary in a quæ tam proceeding. In such a proceeding the name of the party must be specified, and in The King v. Seale (1) the Court held a conviction under the Lottery Act was void, on the ground that it omitted to mention the person to whom the penalty was to be paid.

[TINDAL, C.J.]—A form of conviction is here given by the statute, which has been followed. I do not think any form was given by the statute upon which The King v. Seale arose.]

This is an objection in point of substance, and not one of mere form.

[CRESSWELL, J.—The statute says that the warrant is to issue unless the penalty is paid at once. The informer might not be present, and therefore it is clear the party might discharge himself by a payment on the spot to the Magistrates or their clerk. Do you mean to contend that such a payment would not be good?]

It is not necessary to contend that such a payment would not be valid, but this conviction does not state that the present plaintiff was to pay at all; it merely says, he has forfeited a sum. The next objection is, that there is a variance between the conviction and the warrant, and the latter is void. The conviction states that the plaintiff, with a cart, "did unlawfully, fraudulently, and forcibly pass through a certain toll-gate then and there legally situate and being, under the authority of the said act," whereby the payment of toll was avoided. The warrant states, that he "did unlawfully, fraudulently, and forcibly pass through a certain toll-gate then and there situate and being, by means whereof the payment of a certain toll, to wit, the sum of 3*d.*, then and there legally due and payable," was avoided, "contrary to the statutes in such case made and provided." The warrant omits all mention of the gate being a toll-gate erected by authority of the act of parliament, and it is quite consistent with the warrant that the defendant may have passed through a gate, at which toll was demandable under some private act, or by some private individual. It is not even called a turnpike-gate, but simply a toll-gate, and the warrant is wholly bad, because upon the face of it there is an utter want of jurisdiction. Then a good conviction does not supply defects in the warrant—Wickes v. Clutterbuck (2). The words "by means whereof the payment of a certain toll, to wit, the sum of 3*d.*, then and there legally due and payable, was avoided," cannot be prayed in aid, inasmuch as they are merely stated as a consequence of the preceding act, or rather a conclusion from the premises, and unless that is shewn to have been an act forbidden by some statute, and which the Justices had power thus to punish, the warrant is void.

[ERLE, J.—The word, "toll-gate," seems to have been treated by the legislature, as importing a thing with known incidents throughout the whole of the statute 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, and as describing a class of gates, at which the tolls due on turnpike roads are to be taken. The offence then is described in the terms of the statute, and surely that is sufficient.]

The word, "toll-gate," does not necessarily mean a gate erected under the provisions of the statute 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, or the local statute, but it may be a toll-gate on a bridge, or a toll-gate erected for the purpose of collecting a toll thorough or a toll traverse. The statute 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. refers to toll-gates erected under the different local turnpike acts, and its operation by the preamble is restricted to them, and if this warrant stated it to have been such a gate, it would have been good. The general term "toll-gate" is restricted in its operation by the tenor of the act, but there is nothing to restrain its meaning in this warrant. Suppose this description had been contained in an indictment for destroying the gate, surely it would not have been supported? The right to take toll is only given by the local act, and unless it were shewn that it was a gate at which a toll was demandable under that statute the warrant is bad. The mode in which the appropriation of the penalty is stated is also erroneous. One moiety of the penalty is directed to be paid to the informer, the other moiety "to the treasurer of the commissioners for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight, being the place where the said offence was committed." The statute, however, 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, by the form of warrant directs the moiety to be paid "to the surveyor of the turnpike road [describing it] where the said offence happened," and by section 141. "to the treasurer or treasurers of the trustees or commissioners for repairing and maintaining the road, on which such offence shall have been committed, and applied and disposed of for the purposes of such road." The appropriation of the moiety of the penalty to "the treasurer of the commissioners for the roads in the Isle of Wight" generally, without specifying the particular road on which the offence occurred, and which was entitled to the benefit, is void.

[Byles, Serj.—The roads in the whole island are subject to one body of commissioners by the statute 53 Geo. 3. c. xcii, and they have but one treasurer.]

At all events, the warrant is bad for want of any statement that the penalty has been demanded. As a general rule, it is quite clear, that powers of distress should never be put in force till payment has been requested.

[CRESSWELL, J.—The words of the statute are conclusive against you, for the 141st section says, that the penalty shall be levied by distress "upon conviction," and also, in case such fines, &c. shall not be forthwith paid upon conviction, that the Magistrates may order the offender to be kept in custody. There is no mention of any demand.]

TINDAL, C.J. then called upon Byles, Serj. to argue the point only as to the stances, I think the objections have not been supported, and that the defendants are entitled to judgment.

CRESSWELL, J.—With respect to the main question which has been raised, I am surprised that a doubt should ever have existed as to whether the local act was continued by the recent statute. The local act was not the less an act for making, amending, and repairing turnpike roads, because it also related to other matters. As to those matters it would expire, whilst its operation would be continued so far as the regulation of the turnpike roads was concerned. Several objections, however, independently of this question, have been taken to the form of the proceedings, and I may observe that these may be all answered, by saying that the forms given by the statute have been substantially pursued, and all defects of form are expressly remedied by the statute. But then a suggestion is made that there is no conviction to support the warrant, the one varying from the other; but it appears to me there is no sufficient variance, the one is only more full than the other. The objection of variance was made in Daniell v. Phillips (4), with far more reason, for the trespass of which the party was convicted there appeared to have been committed against personal property by the conviction, whereas the warrant set forth a trespass to the realty, with the cutting of the rushes alleged as a mere matter of aggravation, yet the Court upheld the warrant. Upon the point, whether the allegation that the plaintiff “fraudulently and forcibly passed through a certain toll-gate then and there situate,” by reason whereof payment of a toll was evaded, was sufficient, I must confess I did entertain some doubt, but upon looking at the act I am satisfied that a punishable offence is disclosed. The penalty is imposed by the statute upon any person who shall fraudulently or forcibly pass through any such toll-gate with any horse, &c., by reason whereof the payment of any tolls or duties shall be avoided, and the warrant states that the plaintiff did with a certain carriage “unlawfully, fraudulently, and forcibly pass through a certain toll-gate then and there situate, by means whereof the payment of a certain toll” due in respect of his carriage was avoided, contrary to the statutes. The road is shewn to be in the Isle of Wight, and the power of the commissioners extends over the whole of the roads in the island. The toll, I think, must be taken to be a toll on the carriage, due from the plaintiff in respect of his travelling there with it on a turnpike road, and the forms appear to me to have been as closely adhered to as the case will admit.

ERLE, J.—I think, too, that the defendants are entitled to judgment. The first question is, whether the local act containing other provisions than those relating to turnpike roads can be deemed to be continued by an act, which declares that “all acts for making, amending and repairing any turnpike roads shall be continued.” So far as the part of the local act is concerned which relates to turnpike roads, I think it is continued; for the most serious injustice would be otherwise perpetrated, inasmuch as the whole of the money advanced upon the security of the tolls would be lost. The other objections may be disposed of by reference to the forms given by the statute, which have been substantially pursued, but with respect to the principal objection that no legal offence is disclosed in the warrant, it struck me, in the first instance, that when it stated that the plaintiff passed through a toll-gate whereby the toll was avoided, it stated enough. Upon further reference to the statute this appears to be so, for the warrant uses the very words of the 41st section, with the exception of the word “such.” Then, if that word has no meaning, there can be no question that the warrant is sufficient; and having therefore looked through the preceding and subsequent sections, I cannot find that it has any meaning. Indeed, upon examination, it is clear that the term “toll-gate” is used throughout as synonymous with turnpike-gate, and the effect of the language used, I think, is, that the plaintiff forcibly passed through a toll-gate erected over a turnpike road. Then the 148th section guards against the effect of any objection of a mere formal character, and although if the warrant were wholly void and shewed no jurisdiction it could not avail, yet if it affords the party the means of knowing that the distress is taken under this act, which, I think, it does, it is sufficient.

(4) 1 Cr. M. & R. 662; s. c. 4 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 67.

statute, that it was continued. The object of the legislature in passing that statute was, that persons who had advanced their money upon the tolls of turnpike roads, should not be left without any security. Now, the local act in the present case, by section 89, enables the commissioners to raise money to a certain amount by way of mortgage on the turnpike tolls, and not of the parish rates, and is just one of those statutes which the legislature intended to continue. We should be putting a most mischievous construction upon the words of the latter act, if we did not hold this act to be included. It is entitled 'An act for continuing until the 1st day of June 1836, the several acts for regulating the turnpike roads in Great Britain, which will expire with the present or next session of parliament;' and after reciting that it is expedient that the several acts for making, amending, and repairing the turnpike roads in Great Britain, which would expire in either of those sessions, should be continued, enacts, "That all and every act and acts of parliament, for making, amending, and repairing any turnpike roads in Great Britain, which will expire with the present or the next session of parliament, shall be, and the same is and are hereby continued." "An act for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight," may well be deemed to be included within those terms. It is, however, suggested, that the local act does not fall within this class, because it is not merely a statute for making, amending, and repairing any turnpike roads, but for something more. There would be a lamentable defect in the statute, if it did not continue such an act; but if we look to the second clause, it appears that the legislature could not have contemplated such an omission, for that clause proceeds to except three statutes relating to improvements in London, evidently supposing that, although they might not strictly be within the terms used, yet that a wide construction and operation would be given to the statute, and even they might thus be deemed to be included. The second objection urged is, that the conviction contains no adjudication that Barnes shall pay the fine. The answer to it is, that the statute 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. gives a precise form which has been followed; and section 148. declares, that no objection for want of form in the proceedings shall be raised. Then, another objection is, that a variance exists between the conviction and the warrant; but upon reading them it is clear to my apprehension, that really no variance exists, and that the one is only a little more full and explicit than the other. So far as the warrant goes, it agrees with the conviction. The fourth objection is, that the warrant is void, because it does not shew on the face of it any legal cause for issuing it, and if it be void, it affords no justification to the persons who put it in force. I think, however, that there is no ground for the objection, for although it is not stated that the gate through which the plaintiff passed was a toll-gate erected on a turnpike-road, yet the language used is equivalent to saying so. I quite concur in the observation, that the local act is to be regarded as incorporated in the General Act, 3 Geo. 4. c. 126; but by the 41st section of that statute, it is declared, that if any person shall fraudulently or forcibly pass through any such toll-gate with any horses, &c., whereby a toll is avoided, he shall be liable to a penalty. The first answer to the objection is, that the warrant follows the words of the act. But the local act being incorporated, upon reference to it, the term "toll-gate" evidently means the same thing as turnpike-gate; and it is obvious that the words were considered to be equivalent, and if the word "turnpike-gate" had been used, it is admitted there would be no difficulty. The objection, with respect to the appropriation of the penalty is answered, by observing that a form of the warrant is given, and that the warrant in the present case states the appropriation of the penalty, though not precisely in the same manner as there set forth, yet substantially in the same manner. The only variance is with respect to the treasurer of the particular road, and in that respect it would be impossible to follow the form, because there is only one treasurer, and he is the treasurer for all the roads in the island. This variance is then rendered immaterial by the 148th section, which allows such variations as the necessity of the case requires. With respect to the objection, that no demand is stated to have been made, I think a demand was not necessary, for the act directs the enforcing of the penalty, if it be not "forthwith paid upon conviction." Under these circum-

a party to the judgment. Mr. Fitzjohn's interest was clear: the money payable by the order appealed against was payable to the turnpike trust of which he was a creditor. Mr. Fordham was a party to the order made at special sessions, the confirmation of which was in question, and the Court of Quarter Sessions might have quashed the order, and awarded costs against him. His interest, therefore, is equally apparent. It is true he did not vote, but the circumstances alleged in the affidavits were sufficient to call upon him to state distinctly upon his oath that he had abstained altogether from taking part in the discussion. He gives no answer to the statements made of his having, during the progress of the hearing of the appeal, been in conversation with his brother Magistrates respecting the case. I dare say he never thought that in so doing he was overstepping the line of his duty: but this Court is bound to be extremely jealous upon all subjects connected with the administration of justice; and it is impossible not to view his conduct with regret. The prima facie case against him required to be answered by a distinct assertion on his part that he had had no conversation with any other Magistrate on the subject. It is quite consistent with his having left the court before the determination of the appeal, that what he said to his brother Magistrates during the discussion might have had considerable influence on their decision. I am clearly of opinion, that the Court was improperly constituted; that this rule must be made absolute; and that the order of Sessions must be quashed.

PATTESON, J.—In the case of The Queen v. the Cheltenham Commissioners, I suppose I was not satisfied that the vote of an interested person is sufficient to vitiate the proceedings of a Court; and as, in that case, the interested parties who voted did make up the majority, I put my judgment on that ground. But I think, now, that was an unsound and dangerous ground to put it on. The question whether a court of justice be rightly constituted, cannot depend upon how many of those who form members of it are interested in the decision they may come to: nor can it depend upon whether they vote or not. If some of them are interested, and they are present and join in the discussion of the matter, it is impossible to say what the effect of such discussion may be upon the minds and judgment of the Court at large. The real question is, whether any party interested has taken any part in the discussion of the matter. If he has, I think the decision of the Court is bad. Here one of the Magistrates was a respondent in the appeal; clearly, therefore, he ought not to have taken any part at the hearing of it. I agree, that mere surmise of his interference will not do; but here the affidavits state, that while the appeal was being heard he was on the bench, engaged in conversation with the other Magistrates: it may be fairly presumed that he was speaking about the matter then before them, nor has he denied that he did so. As to Mr. Fitzjohn, certainly his interest was rather remote; but still, there was an interest; for, although the act says, that the money awarded to be paid by the parish surveyors shall be wholly laid out in the repairs of the turnpike road, yet, if it be so applied, it saves the general fund pro tanto from the outlay otherwise necessary to repair the road.

COLERIDGE, J.—I should content myself with simply stating my concurrence with the rest of the Court, but as I was not present when The Queen v. the Cheltenham Commissioners was decided, I am desirous of stating, that I entirely assent to the decision in that case, and to the principle upon which my Lord rests that decision. It seems to me that the question whether a Court be rightly constituted, is an à priori question, and that we cannot look to what they may afterwards do in order to determine it. And so the parties seem to have thought it in the present case, for it appears that they objected to Lord Salisbury's taking part in the hearing of the appeal, as an interested person, before the commencement of the hearing. That was the proper time to make the objection. If the judgment of my Brother Patteson in The Queen v. the Cheltenham Commissioners be looked at, it will be seen that he says,—“I do not, however, feel, that where a Magistrate knows that he is interested, and still takes a part in the discussion, he is justified in saying that because so many other Magistrates were present he could not have influenced the decision: it is clear that great effect may be produced by the party being present, and merely joining in the discussion." My Brother Patteson, therefore, waiving the question of numbers, where a single person taking part in the discussion is aware of his interest, does not seem to me to have differed in principle from the rest of the Court. I think it cannot be too distinctly stated, that no Court can be well constituted in which one of the Judges has an interest in the subject-matter of dispute; and we ought not to enter into the question of the amount of interest.

At a special sessions of the highways holden in and for the division of the hundred of Odsey in the county of Hertford, the following order was made under the hands and seals of Henry Morice and John George Fordham, two of the Justices of the Peace for the said county of Hertford:—"Hertfordshire, to wit. At a special sessions of the highways, holden at the Bull Inn at Royston, in and for the division of the hundred of Odsey, in the county of Hertford, on the 21st day of June 1843 by Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the county of Hertford acting in and for the said division. Whereas William Hollick Nash, clerk of the turnpike trust, called the Baldock and Bournbridge Trust, hath this day exhibited an information before us, the said Justices, at the said special sessions, giving us, the said Justices, to understand and be informed that the funds of the said turnpike road, after payment of the principal and interest monies due to the commissioners, are wholly insufficient for the repair of the turnpike road called the Baldock and Bournbridge Trust, situate within the parish of Bygrave, in the county of Hertford, and hath prayed us, the said Justices, to make such judgment and order in the premises as upon examination shall appear to us meet, and as to law doth appertain. And whereas it hath been duly proved before us, that due notice of such intended information hath been given on the part of the said William Hollick Nash, and we, the said Justices did proceed to examine at such special sessions the state of the revenues and debts of the said turnpike trust, and to inquire into the state and condition of the repairs of the roads within the same, and also to ascertain the length of the roads, including turnpike road, within such parish of Bygrave, and how much of such road is turnpike road; and after such examination it appearing to us, the said Justices, necessary and expedient for the purposes of the said turnpike road in the said parish of Bygrave so to do: We do hereby adjudge and order that the sum of 9l. 5s., being a portion of the rate or assessment levied or to be levied by virtue of the statute passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, 'An act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to highways in that part of Great Britain called England,' shall be paid by the surveyor or surveyors of the highways of the said parish of Bygrave, on or before the 1st day of August 1843, to the commissioners of the said turnpike trust, or to Mr. James Piggot, of Royston, in the county of Hertford, their treasurer, such sum of 9*l.* 5*s.* to be wholly laid out in the actual repair of such part of the said turnpike road as lies within the said parish of Bygrave, from which the same is to be received. Given under our hands and seals at the special sessions aforesaid.

"Henry Morice, (L.s.)

"John George Fordham, (L.s.)

"To the surveyors of the highways of the said parish of Bygrave."

An appeal against the above order was entered at the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions for the county of Hertford, which was adjourned until the Epiphany Sessions, and again adjourned to the Easter Sessions, held on the 8th of April 1844, when the order of special sessions was confirmed. A rule had been obtained calling upon the Justices of the Peace for the county of Hertford to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue to remove the order of Quarter Sessions, and all proceedings relating thereto, which rule was made absolute in Hilary term last (1). While that rule was pending (on June 12, 1844),—

Hawkins applied for a rule, calling upon the said H. Morice and John George Fordham to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue requiring them to return the above order of special sessions into this court, in order that it might be quashed. The objections to the order were: first, that it did not appear that the road in question was within the division of the county for which the special sessions were held, and The Queen v. Martin (2) was cited; secondly, that the order was bad for not stating what proportion of the rate was to be paid; thirdly, that the order was uncertain in not shewing out of which rate the sum of 9*l.* 5*s.* was to be paid. A rule nisi having been granted,—

(2) 2 Q.B. Rep. 1037, n.; s. c. 13 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 46.

Wordsworth now shewed cause.—There are two preliminary objections to this rule: first, it is unnecessary, as the effect of the rule for a certiorari to the Quarter Sessions granted last term ought to be to bring up the original order as well as the order of Quarter Sessions—The Queen v. the Justices of Cornwall (3). No ground was stated, upon moving for this rule, why it was necessary that a separate certiorari should issue to these two Justices, who ought not to be harassed with two writs upon the same subject. But, if it is considered that a substantive application for a certiorari may be made to remove this order of the special sessions, then it is too late, not having been moved for within six months from the date of the order. Undoubtedly, where there is an appeal against an order, a certiorari to bring up the order of Quarter Sessions, together with the original order, is in time if issued more than six months after the date of the latter, but within six months from the Quarter Sessions. But here the original order alone is sought to be removed. Then, as to the objections which are made to the order itself, The Queen v. Martin does not apply: that was a proceeding under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 94, which only gives authority to the Justices acting at a special sessions held within the division in which the highway is situate; whereas the words of this act are clearly different, giving the power to the Justices "at any special sessions for the highways." Secondly, it is argued that the Justices ought to have stated in the order, what proportion of the rate was to be paid to the surveyor; but the words of the act are "what portion," and this order does express that the sum directed to be paid is a portion of the rate. Lastly, the words "the rate or assessment" levied or to be levied by virtue of the statute 5 & 6 Will. 4. sufficiently shew out of what rate the money is to be paid.

Hawkins, contra.—As to the preliminary points: the first rule required the Justices to return the order of Quarter Sessions, and all proceedings relating thereto; and no return of the original order having been made, it must be presumed that the Sessions have returned all that is in their custody. This rule was moved, as it was suspected that the original order had never been returned to the Sessions.

(3) 1 New Sess. Cas. 414; s. c. ante, p. 46.

[COLERIDGE, J.—Surely, as there was an appeal against this order, it must have been returned to the Quarter Sessions. But supposing you can treat this as a distinct rule, are you not out of time?]

The time for moving for a certiorari runs from the time of confirmation by the Quarter Sessions, and not from the time of making the original order. There is a rule of court, made 1 Ann. (4), that no certiorari should be granted to remove orders of Justices, from which the law has given an appeal to the Sessions before the matter be determined on this appeal, because it hinders the privilege of appealing, and this rule was cited and recognized in The King v. Sparrow (5). If that be so, and the Justices neglect their duty by not returning the original order to the Quarter Sessions, great injustice would occur if a certiorari to remove the original order could not issue more than six months from the date of it. He also cited The King v. the Justices of Middlesex (6). Then as to the objections on the face of the order; first, the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 45. empowers "the Justices within their respective divisions to hold not less than eight nor more than twelve special sessions for the highways," and the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59. s. 1. gives the power "to the Justices at any special sessions for the highways." Now reading these two acts together, it is clear that none but the Justices for the division in which the highway is situated, can make this order, and the principle of The Queen v. Martin applies, notwithstanding the difference in the words—Peerless's case (7). The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 59. evidently refers to special sessions provided for by some other act.

[COLERIDGE, J.—Do you mean that an application of this kind can only be made at a special sessions appointed under the General Highway Act?]

Even if it may be made at other special sessions than those appointed to be held in the General Highway Act, yet such other special sessions must be held within the particular division in which the highway is situated, in accordance with the general object of that act. Secondly, the Justices are to examine into the length of the roads in question, and, if necessary, to order a certain portion of the rate to be paid to the surveyor. The act only authorizes three rates a year, the whole of which are not to exceed 2s. 6d. in the pound. If then they can order a gross sum to be paid, non constat that the whole rate will be sufficient to satisfy it. Lastly, it does not appear out of which of the three rates this is to be paid.

COLERIDGE, J.—It seems to me that there is nothing in either of the last two grounds of objection taken to the order. The first is, that the Justices are bound to find and state the sum directed to be paid to be a certain proportion of the rate: but the word used by the act is "portion," and there ought, therefore, to be some strong implication shewn to arise from the wording of the act in order to make me think that it means that a particular proportion of the rate is intended. But it is said that this must be so, as the act directs the Justices to examine into the state and length of the roads, and decide accordingly. But what an uncertain test that would afford if, from the length or breadth of the road, they were to fix what proportion of the rate was to be applied for repairs; one mile might require very great repair and another mile none at all. If the Justices should, upon examination, direct a sum to be so applied which is too large a proportion of the rate, that is merits, and can be questioned upon appeal to the Quarter Sessions, but can afford no ground for objecting to the order on certiorari. Next it is objected that there being three rates of 10d. in the pound which may be raised in the year, the order ought to state out of which of these rates the sum of money is to be paid. Looking to the order, it speaks of it as a portion of the rates levied or to be levied, and as a second rate cannot be made until the first is collected and found insufficient, "the rate" must mean the rate then in existence. The order, therefore, speaks of that which is sufficiently certain, on the ground that id certum est quod cer- tum reddi potest. As to the preliminary objections to the rule, and the first objection made to the order, I will look at the affidavits.

COLERIDGE, J.—This was an application for a certiorari to two Justices to return an order made by them into this court, for the purpose of having it quashed. There were two objections taken to this rule:—First, that it had been moved after a rule, which has subsequently been made absolute in the full court, for a certiorari to the Quarter Sessions to return the order confirming the above order of Justices, and all orders and proceedings relating thereto, and before any return to that rule; and it was contended, that it was to be presumed that this order had been duly returned by the Justices to the Quarter Sessions, and that, therefore, the present rule was unnecessary, as the return by the Quarter Sessions would include this order. All this would have been perfectly true, if the Justices had returned the order to the Quarter Sessions, and if they had sworn to that fact, it would have been an answer to the application, and this rule would have been discharged with costs. But they have not stated this to be the case in their affidavit, and in the absence of such statement I cannot presume it. The second objection to the rule is, that it is out of time, having been moved for more than six months after the date of the order of Justices. But it is clear, that the six months within which the certiorari must be moved for, run from the time of the confirmation by the Quarter Sessions, and not from the time of making the original order. If that were not so, a party would in many cases be deprived of his double remedy, by appeal, and also by certiorari. I am, therefore, brought to consider the objections to the order itself, which are, that it is not shewn on the face of the order that the Justices had jurisdiction to make it. It purports to be made at a special sessions of the highways, holden in and for the division of the hundred of Odsey, and states that the turnpike road in question is situate within the parish of Bygrave; but it is nowhere stated that Bygrave is within that division of the county for which the special sessions was held. This order was made under the 4 &

5 Vict. c. 59, which gives jurisdiction to the Justices at any special sessions for the highways. These words, however, appear to me clearly to point to the periodical special sessions appointed to be held by the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, and not to any special sessions which the Justices may hold for the particular occasion. It is more conducive to public justice that such matters should be brought before the periodical special sessions, at which it may reasonably be presumed there will be full attendance of Justices.—[His Lordship then read the 45th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50.]—The provisions of that section evidently point to a local limitation of jurisdiction; the surveyor of each parish within the division is to appear before the Justices at the special sessions, and to inform them of various facts relating to the highways; in short, to give them such preliminary general information as shall be necessary before they proceed to make any order. The fact, therefore, that the highway does lie within the jurisdiction of the Justices, must be stated in the order, and as it is not either expressly stated here, nor is to be inferred from any thing which is stated, that Bygrave is situated within the division of the county for which the special sessions were held, the rule for the certiorari must go.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS
Jan. 22. } OF YELVERTOFT.

Settlement by Birth—Ex parte Maternâ.

The examinations on which an order of removal was founded, shewed the maiden settlement of the pauper's mother to be in the appellant parish. They contained a hearsay statement that her husband (the pauper's father) was born in London, but there was no legal evidence of the fact, nor of any attempt made to ascertain it:—Held, that the examinations justified the order of removal, and that, in the absence of other evidence, the Sessions did right to confirm it.

On an appeal against an order of two Justices, dated October 14th, 1843, for the removal of Charles Page, jun., together with his wife and their four children from Blaby, in the county of Leicester, to Yelvertoft, in the county of Northampton, the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court on the following

CASE.

The examinations, on which the order of removal was grounded, so far as they were material, were as follows:—First, the examination of the pauper to the effect that he had gained no settlement in his own right. Secondly, Charles Page, senior, “I believe I am upwards of sixty-four years of age, and was born, I believe, in London, but in what parish I never heard. I was brought up by my grandfather at Yelvertoft, in the county of Northampton, from about the age of two and a half years, and never saw my parents above three or four times afterwards, and do not know where they belonged. I have never done any act to gain a settlement in my own right. I was married at Yelvertoft church on Yelvertoft Feast Tuesday, when I was about twenty-six and a half years old, to Catherine York, single woman, by whom I had six children, one of whom is the pauper Charles Page the younger, who was born at North Kilworth, and is about thirty years old. I have heard that my said wife was born at Yelvertoft, where I remember her parents living, and where I believed they belonged. I never heard the place of her settlement was out of Yelvertoft. She died at North Kilworth about twenty-three years ago.” Thirdly, the examination of Thomas York, “I believe I am fifty-nine years of age, and was born at Yelvertoft. My father Samuel and my mother lived there ever since I can recollect: I lived with them until they died. Catherine York was my sister, and younger than me. She was born at Yelvertoft. She is the same person who is mentioned in the certificate of baptism now produced, as being baptized at Yelvertoft on the 6th day of July 1788, and the same person who was afterwards married to Charles Page the elder: I was present at the marriage. I believe my father Samuel York belonged to Yelvertoft.”

The grounds of appeal were, first, that the said order and examinations whereon the same was founded, and the notice thereof, were informal and bad on the face of them, because the pauper, Charles Page the younger, appeared by the said examinations to be removed to his derivative settlement ex parte maternal, while it did not appear that any due examination or inquiry had been made to ascertain that the said pauper had no derivative settlement ex parte paternal, but, on the contrary thereof, Charles Page the elder stated his belief, that he (Charles Page the elder) was born in London, and no prima facie evidence was given that he was not there born, or that he acquired no birth settlement thereby. Secondly, that there was no legal or sufficient evidence given before the removing Magistrates, or shewn in the said examinations, that Catherine Page, the mother of the pauper, was born in the parish of Yelvertoft.

The respondents, at the trial, proved the birth of Catherine Page at Yelvertoft, by a witness not examined by the removing Justices, and did not call Thomas York, whose examination is above set out. The appellants contended, that the order ought to be quashed on the objection stated in the first ground of appeal, and also that it was not competent to the respondents to support their order, without calling Thomas York as a witness, he being in court, and the appellants requiring that he should be called. The Sessions held, that the examinations were sufficient in respect of the objections taken on the first ground of appeal, that it was not necessary for the respondents to call Thomas York as their witness, and confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court. If the Court should be of opinion that the Court of Quarter Sessions were not justified in both or either of the above decisions, the order of removal and order of Sessions to be quashed. If the Court should think the Sessions justified in both the said decisions, both the said orders to stand confirmed.

Macaulay and Simpson, in support of the order of Sessions, were directed by the Court to confine themselves to the objection stated in the first ground of appeal. The examinations disclose a settlement of the pauper ex parte maternal. That is a sufficient prima facie case to justify the order of removal. It was not necessary for the respondents to shew that any inquiry had been made respecting the settlement of the father. The onus of proving that the pauper's father had any settlement lay upon the appellants. But supposing that it was necessary for the respondents to shew that they had made inquiry respecting the settlement of the father, here the Sessions have properly decided as a fact, that there had been a sufficient and reasonable investigation into that matter. It would be a manifest absurdity to set parish officers on a search through London, from parish to parish, to ascertain the truth of a hearsay statement that a particular man was born in London sixty-four years ago. He may have been born in an extra-parochial district. The cases most analogous to the present are those of the removal of a married woman or a widow to the place of her maiden settlement, upon proof of her maiden settlement only, leaving it to the appellant parish to shew her husband's settlement, if he had any—The King v. Woodsford (1), The King v. Westerham (2), The King v. Ryton (3), The King v. Edisore (4), The King v. Harborton (5).

[COLERIDGE, J.—Have you a right to remove to parish A, when there is prima facie evidence that the settlement is in some other parish, although you cannot tell what that parish is? Suppose a birth settlement proved, and on cross-examination a settlement by hiring and service with residence is proved, but the witness has forgotten in what parish, would the birth settlement remain?]

No; because in that case there would be evidence of a subsequent settlement somewhere, though where is not known. But in the present case there is no evidence whatever of the settlement of the pauper's father; nothing but his own hearsay statement of a fact necessarily beyond his knowledge. This distinguishes the case from that of The King v. St. Mary, Beverley (6), where the respondents themselves clearly proved that the husband of the pauper had a settlement in one of the parishes of Ipswich, though it was uncertain in which. The doctrine laid down in The King v. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green (7), "that no recourse shall be had to the mother's settlement till that of the father can be traced no farther," must be received with this limitation, that proof of the mother's settlement is sufficient in the first instance, till it appear that the father had a settlement—The King v. St. Mary, Leicester (8). The only ground on which the argument on the other side can be supported is, that every man must be presumed to have a settlement, and therefore that the settlement of the pauper's father should have been inquired into before resorting to that of the mother. If that be so, it would be a good objection in every case of a removal to a birth settlement, that the respondents do not shew an inquiry into, and negative the pauper's derivative settlement by parentage.

J. Hildyard, contra.—The examinations contain no legal evidence of the birth of the pauper's mother in Yelvertoft; for a comparison of the dates shews, that Thomas York was only three years old when he states that his sister was born. It was impossible he could remember the fact.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—Where are we to draw the line? Might he not remember it if he were four years old? We must assume that the examining Magistrates took the proper evidence. He swears to the fact. The expression, "I believe I am fifty-nine" is not binding on him. He might be older.]

As to the main point. The power of removal is a statutory power. The removal must be to the place of the pauper's last legal settlement, cleared of all reasonable doubt. Here, though there was no sufficient evidence that the pauper's father was born in London, there is sufficient to raise the presumption that he was born there, and so to set the respondents on further inquiry. Whatever may have been the law in former times, the later cases shew that a married woman cannot be removed to her maiden settlement, until the respondents shew either that her husband had no settlement, or that reasonable search has been made, ineffectually, to ascertain it—The King v. St. Mary, Leicester, The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Leeds (9).

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It appears to me that the case of The King v. Harborton must govern our decision in this case. There the Court said, that there could be no doubt but that the evidence offered by the respondents of the wife's maiden settlement was prima facie sufficient; and that it lay upon the appellants to rebut it by giving evidence of the husband's settlement in a different parish. None of the cases which have since occurred are opposed to The King v. Harborton. In The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Leeds it was taken for granted, that some inquiry into the settlement of the husband was necessary; and the Court merely said, "As you put the question to us, whether the inquiry made was sufficient, we will answer it." In The King v. the Inhabitants of St. Mary, Leicester, proof of the mother's settlement was held sufficient to destroy the birth settlement of the pauper, no evidence being given by either party as to the father's settlement. In The King v. St. Mary, Beverley, an actual settlement of the pauper's father was proved, which got rid of the mother's settlement, although the particular township in which the father was settled was not proved. In The King v. St. Mary, Leicester, I stated my first impression to have been, founding myself on the rule laid down in The King v. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, that it was necessary, before setting up a mother's settlement, to shew that some inquiries had been made as to the father's settlement, and that it could not be discovered; but The King v. Harborton does not support that opinion. No doubt it may in many cases be desirable for a parish obtaining an order of removal upon a mother's settlement, to inquire, for their own sake, into the settlement of the father, that they may not, when they come to the Sessions, be upset by proof of it on the other side. But in the case before us there is no evidence of any settlement of the pauper's father, nor anything to shew that it was necessary for a prudent man to make inquiry into it. The necessity of such inquiry must depend upon the value of it—upon what could be got from making it. What could be got from following up the hearsay evidence of the witness, "I believe I was born in London upwards of sixty-four years ago, but in what parish I never heard"? I think we must assume here, that the Sessions held that whatever inquiry was necessary had in fact been made.

PATTERSON, J.—I confess I cannot distinguish this case from The King v. Harborton. There it is distinctly laid down, that evidence of a woman's maiden settlement is sufficient prima facie evidence of her child's settlement, and the onus of proving her husband's settlement is thrown on the other side. It is very clear, that if in the course of the evidence it turns out that the husband had a settlement, they must go on and pursue the inquiry to discover what that settlement was. In the case of The King v. St. Mary, Beverley, it appeared that the husband was settled in some parish in Ipswich. And if it had appeared here that Charles Page the elder was settled in some parish in London, the case would have been different; but here there is nothing to shew that he was settled in London. The man says, "I believe I was born in London." That was a fact of which he could know nothing himself, and there is no other evidence of it.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think it is material to remember that the objection is here, that there is a defect on the face of the examinations. Now, that does not let in objections to the course which the Magistrates, who made the order of removal, took in hearing the evidence. But even if it did, there is nothing to shew that they did wrong. A mere hearsay statement by a man that he was born in London, does not make it necessary to search through all the parishes in London, to ascertain whether the fact be so or not. The question is, was there evidence here for the Magistrates to adjudicate upon? and have they drawn the right conclusion from it? If so, they have done what the statute requires. The objection as to the decision at which the Magistrates arrived was rather one to be made at the Sessions, and to be supported by evidence. But this was not done. The case at the Sessions stood entirely on the same ground as it did before the Magistrates, and I think the Sessions were right in coming to the same conclusion which the Magistrates arrived at (10).

Indictment—Central Criminal Court—Recognizance—Venue.

The caption of an indictment for a misdemeanour found by the grand jury of the Central Criminal Court, need not state that the person presenting such indictment had been bound over by recognizance to prosecute, before the Sessions at which the bill was found; for the grand jury have jurisdiction to find such a bill, although no recognizance has been previously entered into.

An indictment in the Central Criminal Court described the offence as committed "at the parish of M, in the county of Middlesex, within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court." It was removed by certiorari by the defendant, who pleaded guilty to it in Middlesex:—Held, that the venue was correctly stated.

This was an indictment found at the Central Criminal Court. It was, at the instance of the defendant, removed by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench. The indictment had in the margin the venue "Central Criminal Court, to wit," and contained eleven counts, each alleging that the defendant, on &c. at the parish of St. Mary-le-Strand, in the county of Middlesex, within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, wilfully and maliciously published a certain false and scandalous libel concerning Charles Frederick Augustus William, Duke of Brunswick. Each count alleged the publication of a different libel.

The cause came on for trial, in the Court of Queen's Bench, in Middlesex, when the defendant obtained permission to withdraw his plea of not guilty, and pleaded guilty to the indictment.

Platt, in Michaelmas term, 1844, obtained a rule nisi to arrest the judgment or to quash the indictment, on the ground, that the caption of the indictment, which stated that the indictment was presented and found a true bill on the 28th of November 1842, did not shew that the prosecutor had been bound by a recognizance to prosecute the defendant before the Sessions at which the indictment was so found. The affidavits shewed that the Duke of Brunswick (the prosecutor) had, in fact, on the 2nd of December 1842 entered into a recognizance before a single Police Magistrate, in the following terms: "To appear at the Sessions of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, now holding for the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, &c. and prefer a bill of indictment, &c. against Barnard Gregory for a libel," and that he had accordingly on the same 2nd of December, after entering into the recognizance, attended and preferred the bill of indictment, the Sessions of the 28th of November having been continued till the 2nd of December. It was upon these facts, objected, that the recognizance was entered into too late, and that the grand jury had therefore no jurisdiction to find the bill; and next, that there was a variance between the recognizance and the indictment, the recognizance being to prosecute for a libel, and the indictment being for eleven libels. He likewise objected that the indictment contained no proper venue.

Talfourd, Serj. and Wordsworth, in this term (April 24), shewed cause.—It is not necessary that it should appear upon the face of the indictment that any recognizance had been entered into. If it be necessary, then all indictments for misdemeanours found at the Central Criminal Court since its institution are bad. The statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 36. ss. 1. & 2. creates the Central Criminal Court, and gives it jurisdiction in all cases within its ambit. Section 13. enacts "that no bill of indictment for any misdemeanour (other than perjury or subornation of perjury) shall be presented to the grand jury to be summoned under the authority of the act, unless the prosecutor or other person presenting such indictment shall have been bound by recognizance to prosecute or give evidence at the Sessions to be held under the authority of the act." But this section is directory only, not imperative. At all events the objection as to the want of such recognizance, even if it might have been taken before the grand jury, or upon the plea of not guilty, cannot now be urged, after the defendant has removed the indictment by certiorari, has pleaded guilty to it, and has thereby confessed that it was preferred before a court of competent jurisdiction. The Court will not after plea quash an indictment—The King v. Marsh (1). And here the affidavits shew that, in fact, the recognizance was entered into before the bill was preferred. The object of the 13th section has therefore been answered, which was to prevent persons from improperly preferring bills, and not afterwards proceeding with them. As to the alleged variance between the recognizance and the indictment preferred—

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—You need not trouble yourself on that point.]

Lastly, the venue is sufficient. The words “Central Criminal Court” in the margin are surplusage, and immaterial. There is in the body of the indictment a common law venue, of parish and county, which is quite sufficient, after the removal of the indictment by certiorari and verdict thereon—The King v. Connop (2). The indictment has been drawn up in conformity with the decision of the Court in The Queen v. Stowell (3).

Crowder and Peacock, contra.—The 13th section of the statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 36. is imperative, and not merely directory. Unless a recognizance to prosecute has been entered into before the sitting of the grand jury, the Central Criminal Court has no jurisdiction whatever to entertain a bill for misdemeanour. If that Court had no jurisdiction to find this bill, this Court will quash the indictment on its removal here by certiorari—The King v. Williams (4). The King v. Carlton (5) is an express authority that the grand jury had, in fact, no jurisdiction, there having been no recognizance entered into previous to the session.

[PATTESON, J.—It is impossible to tell from the report of that case what Tindal, C.J. really said. It is stated that an application was made to the Court to allow the prosecutor to be bound over in court to prosecute, so that another bill might be presented to the grand jury which was sitting, in order that the trial might take place at the then session; and Tindal, C.J. is reported to have said, “I think this cannot be done;” that may mean that the indictment could not be tried at that session. Nor could it. That case cannot be used as an authority.]

The statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 36. creates a fresh jurisdiction: it provides for the trial of offences in Middlesex, by a grand jury who may not be grand jurymen of Middlesex. It was necessary, therefore, that the caption of the indictment should shew that the grand jury in this case had jurisdiction, and that the requisites of the statute had been complied with—Bac. Abr. tit. ‘Indictment,’ (I), citing 2 Hawk. P.C. 25. ss. 119, 123, and 126. Even had it appeared on the caption here that the recognizance was taken (as the fact was) on the 2nd of December, it would have been insufficient, because the caption expressly states that the bill was found on the previous 28th of November.

[PATTESON, J.—There does not seem to be any provision in the statute, directing before whom the recognizance is to be taken. Acts of Parliament generally say before whom the recognizances which they direct shall be entered into, shall be taken.]

As to the venue. This is not an indictment preferred and tried in the Central Criminal Court. If it were, the allegation as to the venue would by section 3. of the statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 36. be sufficient. But if the venue as far as regards the Central Criminal Court is immaterial and rejected, then it appears to be an indictment for an offence committed in Middlesex, and found not by a grand jury of the county of Middlesex, but by a grand jury differently formed.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—There is this distinction between this case and The Queen v. Stowell, that there it did not appear in what county the offence charged was committed, nor that there was any jury who could try the offence, after the removal of the indictment by certiorari. But here there is a good common law venue.]

The judgment of the Court was now delivered by—

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—In this case a doubt was raised, whether the judgment ought not to be arrested in consequence of the indictment not stating that the party had been bound over by recognizances to prosecute, before the Sessions at which the bill of indictment was found. We are clearly of opinion, that it cannot be necessary that that should appear in the caption, and that therefore there is no ground for arresting the judgment. That is our opinion on the subject: if there is error, it may be the subject of a writ of error. With regard to the other matter,—the affidavits state that there had been no previous recognizances, and it is urged that we ought on that account to interfere and quash the indictment. We have considered the matter, and we think that we ought not to take that step. By the statute establishing the Central Criminal Court, power is given to the grand jury of that court in the largest terms possible, to try all offences within their jurisdiction; and then the 13th section says, that no bill shall be presented before the grand jury at that Central Criminal Court unless the party shall have been bound over by recognizance (not saying where it is to be taken) to prosecute or give evidence at the Sessions to be held—that is, some future Session. It appears that upon one occasion my Lord Chief Justice was applied to, to permit a party to be bound over in court at the Sessions in order to comply with that clause. We think he was perfectly right in refusing to permit that to be done. In fact, it would have been clearly too late for the purpose of removing the objection. We consider that all he did or meant to do on that occasion was so to decline to act; not that he meant to give any opinion at all on the true construction of the statute, and still less upon the result of a non-compliance with the directions of the 13th section. As we find that general power given to the grand jury, and as we find also that, although it is directed by the statute that no bill shall be presented before that grand jury without recognizances being entered into, yet no consequences attach upon its being so presented, we think, that those general words ought to have their effect; and the particular words, whatever they may import, and whatever the object may have been for introducing them, do not limit the power of the grand jury to find the bill, or of the petit jury to proceed upon it, or of the party to plead guilty. We therefore discharge the rule. The question whether the number of libels charged in the indictment makes a variance (as it were) between the indictment and the recognizance does not at all arise. The point that we decide upon makes it quite immaterial to inquire into that question, because we have considered the matter as if no recognizance had been previously entered into at all.

(1) 6 Ad. & El. 236; s.c. 6 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 153.

(2) 4 Ibid. 942.

Rule discharged.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. THE JUSTICES
May 1, 15. } OF DERBYSHIRE.

Highway Rates — Order of Justices, when made—Appeal against—within what time.

Two Justices at special sessions, on the 23rd of April, acting under the stat. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, after hearing evidence and examining (among other witnesses) the surveyor of the roads in a parish, expressed their determination to make an order on him, as such surveyor, to pay a sum of money to the trustees of the turnpike road. The form of an order in writing was then and there signed by them, in blank, the blanks being afterwards filled up by their clerk, in conformity with their verbally expressed decision. No copy of the order in writing was served on the surveyor for six weeks afterwards:—Held, that the order was made on the 23rd of April, and that notice of grounds of appeal given more than six days after the 23rd of April, was too late.

A rule nisi had been obtained for a mandamus to the Justices of Derbyshire, commanding them to enter continuances and hear an appeal of the surveyor of highways for the parish of Hartshorne, against an order of two Justices, whereby he was ordered to pay the sum of 100*l.* out of the highway rate to the treasurer of the trustees of a turnpike road in the said parish. It appeared from the affidavits that, in pursuance of a notice which had been previously served upon the surveyor of the highways, the acting surveyor attended a special Sessions of the highways, held on the 23rd of April 1844, when an information was exhibited by the clerk to the trustees of the turnpike roads, that the funds of the turnpike roads were insufficient for the repairs of such part of the turnpike road as was situate in the parish of Hartshorne. The Justices, after hearing the case and examining witnesses, expressed their determination to make the order in question under the stat. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59(1); and it was admitted in the affidavit of the surveyor of Hartshorne, that though he did not hear the order made by the Magistrates, yet, as a matter of hearsay, he understood it had been made. It appeared that the two Justices signed the form of an order in writing, previously prepared by the clerk to the trustees, in blank, blanks being left for the length of the road, the sum of money to be paid, and other particulars.

(1) By section 1. of that statute it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the Justices at any special sessions for the highways holden after the passing of this act, upon information exhibited before them by the clerk or treasurer of any turnpike trust that the funds of the said trust are insufficient for the repairs of the turnpike roads within any parish, notice in writing of such intended information having been previously given on the part of such clerk or treasurer to the parish surveyor twenty-one days at least before such special Sessions, to examine the state of the revenues and debts of such turnpike trusts, and to inquire into the state and condition of the repairs of the roads within the same, and also to ascertain the length of the roads, including turnpike roads, within such parish, and how much of such road is turnpike road, and if, after such examination, it shall appear to the said Justices necessary or expedient for the purposes of the said turnpike roads so to do, then to adjudge and order what portion, if any, of the rate or assessment levied or to be levied by virtue of the said recited act, shall be paid by the said parish surveyor, and at what time or times, to the said commissioners or trustees, or to their treasurer or other officers appointed by them in that behalf, such money to be wholly laid out in the actual repairs of such part of such turnpike road as lies within the parish from which it was received."

Section 3. provides, "That if any person shall think himself aggrieved by any order, judgment or determination made, or by any matter or thing done by any Justices of the Peace, at any such special Sessions, in pursuance of the act, such person shall be at liberty to make his complaint thereof by appeal to the Justices of the Peace at the next General or Quarter Sessions of the Peace, to be holden for the county or place wherein the cause of such complaint shall arise, such appellant first giving to such Justices ten days' notice in writing of the grounds of such appeal, within six days after such order, judgment or determination shall be so made or given as aforesaid, who are hereby required, within forty-eight hours after the receipt of such notice, to return all proceedings whatever had before them respectively, touching the matter of such appeal, to the said Justices, at the General or Quarter Sessions aforesaid, &c. provided that it shall not be lawful for the appellant to be heard in support of such appeal, unless such notice and statement shall have been so given as aforesaid."

These blanks were, subsequently to the signature of the Magistrates, (but at what precise time was not stated) filled up by their clerk, in accordance with the expressed determination of the Magistrates. The order, when completed, purported to be made on the 23rd of April, and directed that payment of one half of the 100*l.* should be made on the 1st of June then next, and the remaining half on the 1st of September. It appeared that on the following 11th of June, a written application for payment of the 50*l.* directed to be paid on the 1st of June, was sent by the clerk to the trustees to the surveyor of Hartshorne. No copy of the order was served upon the surveyor until the 5th of July. On the 11th of July the surveyor gave notice of appeal to the Justices, describing it as an order dated the 23rd of April. At the Michaelmas Sessions, when the appeal came on to be heard, the counsel for the respondents objected that the notice of appeal was not given in due time, inasmuch as the statute 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59. requires the notice to be given within six days after the order shall be made or given, not six days after the service thereof, and that the order in this case was made on the 23rd of April; upon this objection the appeal was dismissed.

Whitehurst and Wilmore shewed cause (May 1), and contended, that the Sessions were right. This was a good and valid order on the 23rd of April. The appellant knew of it then. He had further distinct written notice of it on the 11th of June. The King v. the Justices of Pembrokeshire (2) and The King v. the Justices of Staffordshire (3) are authorities for the respondents. An order is complete as soon as made, whether served or not. There is no analogy between such an order and rules of court, which, by the practice of the Court, only operate from the time of service. They referred also to Proser v. Hyde (4).

Clarke, Serj. and Wildman, contra.—The statute 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59. is of a similar nature to the statute 4 Geo. 4. c. 95; and in The King v. the Justices of Lancashire (5), decided upon the last-mentioned statute, it was held that no cause of complaint arose until a copy of the order in writing had been served, and that a notice of appeal given within six days from that time was valid. What is the party to appeal against if no order in writing exist? That it must be in writing is shewn by the provision in the statute (sec. 3.) which requires that all proceedings must be returned to the Sessions. It would be a good ground of appeal that the order was signed in blank; but how is the party to arrive at the fact that it was signed in blank, until he be served with a copy? Or how can it be determined at a future time what the order really was? If the verbal declaration of the Magistrates be the order, and it be appealed against, the written document returned to the Sessions may be different from the verbal declaration. Who is to decide whether it be varied or not? In the case of a conviction, a good form may be drawn up and returned to the Sessions in lieu of an invalid one, but this cannot be done in the case of an order—The King v. the Justices of Cheshire (6). The words "order made or given," in the first section of the statute 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, leave the party the option of appealing either from the time the order is made or from the service of it.

(4) 1 Term Rep. 414.

(5) 8 B. & C. 593; s. c. 6 Law J. Rep. M.C. 119.

The judgment of the Court was now (May 15) delivered by—

LORD DENMAN, C.J., who, after recapitulating the facts, proceeded—The point raised is whether the order can be said to have been made on the 23rd of April when it was agreed upon, or whether it was made on the day it was served. In the former case the notice of appeal was too late, and the Sessions were right; in the latter it came in due time, and the appeal ought still to be heard. The learned counsel who opposed the rule relied on two cases as decisive authorities in their favour. The King v. the Justices of Pembrokeshire, however, undoubtedly went upon no ground inconsistent with the opposite view. The order there was for stopping a road; it was made in April, and appealed against at the Michaelmas Session. The three learned Judges who held that appeal too late, all observed that it was too late at all events; for the affidavits shewed, and it had been proved at the Sessions, that the appellant had notice of what was going on in the month of April. In Michaelmas term following the Court held, in The King v. the Justices of Staffordshire, that the time for giving notice of appeal against an order for stopping a road must be reckoned from the order made or proceeding had, and not from that of notice to the party aggrieved. There the words of the statute were held imperative on the Court. Le Blanc, J. observes, "In the case of a public highway, all the king's subjects may be said to be interested, and there never would be an end of the time for appealing if the right of appeal were to depend on personal notice of the order to the appellant." On the other hand, the case of The King v. the Justices of Lancashire was cited, in which the statute gives the right of appeal against an order exactly similar to the present, only that the words are, that notice of appeal must be sent "within six days after the cause of such complaint shall arise," dating the right of appeal from the cause of complaint; whereas this act dates it from the time of the order made or given. And there the Court held, that the cause of complaint arose at the time of serving the order. The reasons assigned by Bayley, J. are perfectly applicable to the present case; they were agreed to by Holroyd, J. and Littledale, J., and we think them sound in principle. The two cases before mentioned were referred to in the argument, but are not noticed in the judgment, probably because they are entirely dissimilar. But although we were much inclined to think the present case was ruled by the decision in The King v. the Justices of Lancashire, there is an obvious distinction between the language of the two statutes. The cause of complaint may well be taken to mean something directly affecting the party appealing, or at any rate brought to his knowledge. The period fixed in the present act is the making or giving of the order, judgment or determination, which is too distinct and express to admit of being varied by any gloss of construction. We may add, that the act provides some means for giving notoriety to the proceedings at the petty sessions, and even notice to parties directly interested in opposing the making of such an order.

We are of opinion that the Court of Quarter Sessions properly considered the order to have been made at the petty sessions on the facts disclosed on affidavits as having appeared before them, and that the period of the order made is that to which the act of parliament refers, and the time within which the notice is to be given. We think, therefore, the Sessions were right, and the rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

April 26. } THE QUEEN v. PERKIN.

Coroner—Deputy, Jurisdiction of—Inquisition.

An inquisition purported to be taken before R. D. coroner for the county of W, and was signed as follows: "R. D. coroner, by E. M. his deputy duly appointed." The inquisition was in fact taken, the jury sworn, super visum corporis, the witnesses examined, and the inquisition signed by E. M. the deputy. R. D. was not present when the jury were sworn, being engaged in holding another inquest at a distance. He returned in time to be present during the greater part of the examination of the witnesses, but did not personally act as coroner:—Held, that the absence of D, when the inquest began, was occasioned by a lawful and reasonable cause; that his presence afterwards did not vitiate the proceedings, which M. had authority to conduct; and that the inquisition was properly framed and signed.

In Michaelmas term last a rule was obtained, calling on Ralph Docker, one of the coroners for the county of Worcester, and S. H. to shew cause why an inquisition brought up by certiorari should not be quashed.

The inquisition was as follows:—

"Worcestershire, to wit.—An inquisition indented, taken for our sovereign lady the Queen, in the parish of Oldswinford, in the county of Worcester, the 7th day of October, A.D. 1844, before Ralph Docker, one of the coroners of our said lady the Queen, for the said county of Worcester, upon view of the body of E. H, then and there lying dead, upon the oath of J. B. &c., (setting out the jurors' names,) good and lawful men of the said county, duly summoned, and who being then and there sworn and charged to inquire for our said lady the Queen, when, where, how, and by what means the said E. H. came to her death, do upon their oath say, that the said E. H, upon the 6th day of October, in the year aforesaid, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, suddenly departed this life in a natural way, and not from hurt or injury received from any person or persons whomsoever, to the knowledge or belief of the said jurors. In witness whereof, as well the said coroner as the foreman of the said jurors and the rest of his said fellows, have to this inquisition set their hands and seals, the day, year, and place first above written.

"Ralph Docker, (L.S.) } coroner, by Edward Moore, } Signed and his deputy duly appointed," } sealed by all &c. } the jurors.

The affidavit of John Perkin, on which the rule was granted, stated, that as constable, he had on the 6th of October 1844, applied to and received from Edward Moore, the deputy coroner, his precept, under his hand and seal as deputy coroner, to summon a jury to hold an inquest on the body of E. H; that the jury attended accordingly, on the 7th of October, and were sworn by the said Edward Moore, and the jury so sworn attended and viewed the body of E. H, but that Ralph Docker was not present at the time the jury were sworn, and was not present and did not view the body in the presence of the jury; that several witnesses were examined by the said Edward Moore; that during part of the time, while Moore was examining witnesses, Docker was present, but did not act as coroner on the occasion; that Docker did not sign the inquisition, and that in the judgment and belief of the deponent, Docker was at the time of holding the inquest in good health, and was not at any time during the holding the same absent from any lawful cause.

The affidavits of Docker and Moore, in opposition to the rule, stated, that Moore was the deputy coroner duly appointed; that his residence was seven miles nearer to the spot where the body of E. H. was lying than the residence of Docker ; that Docker had at 12 o'clock at noon, on the 7th of October, attended at Oldswinford, for the purpose of proceeding with an adjourned inquest on the body of a child, and had then heard from Moore of the precept issued by him respecting the inquisition on the body of E. H. Docker's affidavit proceeded to state, that, believing the adjourned inquiry respecting the death of the child would be long and protracted, he requested Moore to proceed to take the inquisition on the body of E. H, which he accordingly did ; that he himself proceeded with the adjourned inquest on the child, which occupied only a short space of time ; and he thereupon returned to the place where Moore, who had sworn the jury, was proceeding with the inquisition ; that the death of E. H. appeared to have occasioned considerable excitement, &c., and he "was induced in consequence of such apparent excitement, to view the body of the said E. H, and to remain and be present during the taking of the greater portion of the evidence taken on the said inquisition, for the purpose of making any suggestion to the said Edward Moore which might appear to him (Docker) calculated to facilitate the said inquiry."

It was objected, first, that the inquisition ought to have been taken before Docker, and not before Moore, as deputy, inasmuch as Docker was present during a part of the time, and was not absent from illness, or from any lawful or reasonable cause. Secondly, that having been, in fact, taken before Moore, as deputy, it ought to have purported to have been so taken, and should have been signed and sealed by Moore accordingly, as the person before whom it was taken.

Godson now shewed cause.—The stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83. s. 1, gives coroners power to nominate a permanent deputy, and provides that "all inquests taken and other acts performed by any such deputy coroner, under and by virtue of any such appointment, shall be deemed and taken to all intents and purposes whatsoever to be the acts and deeds of the coroner, by whom such appointment was made ; provided that no such deputy shall act for any such coroner as aforesaid, except during the illness of the said coroner, or during his absence from any lawful or reasonable cause."

Moore was duly appointed deputy ; he had, therefore, authority to hold the inquest, in the lawful absence of Docker. The affidavits shew that Docker was lawfully absent, and his accidental presence during a portion of the time, during which he did not act as coroner, did not supersede or extinguish the authority of his deputy. Secondly, the inquisition is good on the face of it. It properly purports to be taken before Docker, the principal, who had authority to allow his name to be written by his deputy. If the words "by Edward Moore, his deputy duly appointed," had not been added, no question could have arisen.

Jervis, contra.—Admitting that Moore was duly appointed deputy, he had only authority to hold the inquest in the absence of Docker ; but the affidavit of Docker himself shews that he was present. The question, therefore, as to whether there was any lawful or reasonable cause for his absence, does not arise. Moore ceased to have jurisdiction upon Docker's return. Docker appears to have viewed the body, and to have signed the inquisition by Moore, while Moore appears to have examined the witnesses. The duty, therefore, was divided between them : either the whole of the proceedings should have been by the principal, or the whole by the deputy. But if the Court shall consider that Docker was not present, his absence was not justified by the facts stated. It was not intended that the coroner, by his deputy, should be holding inquests at different places at the same time.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I think that giving a reasonable construction to the act of parliament, this was an acting by the deputy for the coroner, during the absence of the latter. The inquest began in his absence, and it sufficiently appears that that absence was occasioned by a lawful and reasonable cause. I cannot see that the accidental presence of the principal afterwards, during a part of the proceedings, can make that bad which was properly begun. As to the form of the inquisition, there appears to me no objection in it. Even supposing the words "by Edward Moore, his deputy, duly appointed," ought not to have been there, they are but surplusage ; but I think they were properly inserted.

PATTERSON, J.—I apprehend, as to the last point, that the signature would have been wrong, had it been other than it is. It is laid down in Comyns's Digest, tit. 'Attorney,' (C, 14,) "If a man, who acts by the authority of another and as his attorney, does it in his own name, and as his own proper act, it will be void; for he represents his master, and ought to do it in his name, or at least, ought to express, that he does it as attorney to such a one." The form of the inquisition is, therefore, quite right. As to the absence of Docker in the first instance, it was occasioned by a reasonable cause, the necessity of his being present as coroner at another place. Moore, the deputy, therefore, properly began to take the inquisition, and his jurisdiction was not superseded by the return of his principal. What took place after his return was not a new inquisition, but a continuation by Moore of that which had been properly begun.

WILLIAMS, J.—The statute says, that all inquests taken and other acts performed by any deputy coroner, shall be deemed and taken to all intents and purposes whatsoever to be the acts and deeds of the coroner, by whom such deputy was appointed. Here, therefore, the inquisition, though in fact taken by Moore the deputy, is properly stated to be an inquisition before Docker, and the signature, even if not strictly correct,—although I agree it is correct,—is fully warranted.

WIGHTMAN, J.—As this inquisition was begun by Moore, Moore was bound to continue it, otherwise the objection raised by Mr. Jervis would have applied, and it would have appeared that part of the proceedings had been before the deputy and part before the coroner himself.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABIT-
April 23. } ANTS OF ORTON.

Order of Removal—Evidence—Rate-books—Examination.

An overseer was served with a summons, signed by a Justice, requiring the overseer to appear before him and other Magistrates, at a place mentioned in the summons, to give evidence touching the settlement of a pauper,

NEW SERIES, XIV.—MAG. CAS.

and to produce certain rate-books, the dates of which were also specified:—Held, that on the non-compliance with the summons, the Justices could not go into secondary evidence of the contents of the rate-books, and that an order of removal made on such secondary evidence could not stand.

Upon an appeal against an order of two Justices of the county of Lancaster for the removal of Robert Pickthall, his wife, and three children, from the township of Burrow with Burrow, in the county of Lancaster, to the parish of Orton, in the county of Westmoreland, the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench, on the following

CASE.

The material part of the examinations on which the order was made, and which were duly sent to the appellant parish, were as follows:—"Robert Pickthall, on his oath, saith, I was born, as I believe, in the township of Dent, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, and am now fifty years old; six years ago, that is to say, in the year 1837, I took of the Rev. Mr. Saurey, of Stainmore, a farm situate in the parish of Orton, called Raisegill Hall, for the term of two years, at the rent of 36*l.* per annum. I occupied and resided upon the same, under the said taking, from Whitsuntide, 1837, for the two years then next ensuing, and paid the whole rent for the same, and all poor-rates for the said term. In 1839 I took the said farm for the further term of five years, and continued to occupy and reside upon the same for the two years then next following, paying all the rent for those two years, and also all the poor-rates. In 1842 I went to Ingleton, and occupied a beer-house there, called the New Inn, but I did not pay to poor-rates there.—John Tennant, on his oath, saith, At the request of the overseers of Burrow with Burrow, I served on Thursday last a summons, of which the following is a copy, on James Ellwood, one of the overseers of the poor of the parish of Orton aforesaid, in the said county of Westmoreland. He admitted that Robert Pickthall, the pauper, belonged to their parish; he talked about appearing here to-day, in pursuance of the said summons; but I have not seen him here to-day. I saw the pauper's name in the

Orton poor-rate book, for the year 1840, in respect of the Raisegill Hall estate.

Summons to witness.—County of Lancaster.—“You are hereby, in her Majesty’s name, required to be and personally to appear before me, or such other of her Majesty’s Justices of the Peace and quorum, in and for the said county, as shall be present at the Rose and Crown Hotel, in Kirkby Lonsdale, in the county of Westmoreland, on Thursday, the 6th day of July, now next ensuing, at 11 o’clock in the forenoon, to give such evidence as you know, touching the settlement of Robert Pickthall, formerly of the parish of Orton, but now resident and chargeable to the township of Burrow with Burrow, in the county of Lancaster; and to bring with you, and produce before the said Justices all books of rates or assessments, made for the relief of the poor, within your parish, during the years 1837, 1838, 1839, 1840 and 1841.—Herein fail not at your peril.—Dated the 29th day of June A.D. 1843.

Addressed “To the overseers of the poor of the parish of Orton, in the said county of Orton.”

The appellants duly served notice of appeal, and the grounds of such appeal are as follows: first, that the order and examinations on which the same are grounded, are bad and defective in point of law; and the said examinations contain no evidence on which the said order can or ought to have been legally made or founded. And that if legal evidence of such settlement was given before the said Justices making the said order, no copy of such examination hath been sent to us, by you, the said overseers and churchwardens of the said township of Burrow, pursuant to the statute, nor was there any evidence given to or before the said Justices, that the said Robert Pickthall had ever been assessed to the poor-rates of the said farm or farms, or in any way or manner whatsoever. The appellants, also, traversed the settlement of the pauper in Orton, and also set up a subsequent settlement gained by the pauper Robert Pickthall, in the township of Ingleton, by renting a tenement in that parish, for the term of one whole year, in the year 1842, and paying the rates, &c.

At the trial of the said appeal, the respondents proceeded to prove the settlement in Orton, by renting a tenement, according to the facts stated in the examinations; and the appellants objected that the respondents could not give evidence of any rating and assessment, on account of the deficiency of the examinations in that respect. The Court, however, overruled the objection, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen’s Bench, and the respondents then proved a settlement in Orton, by renting the said tenement called Raisegill Hall, and by being assessed to the poor-rate, and paying the same for such tenement for one year. The appellants then proved a renting by the pauper of a tenement in the parish of Ingleton, of one Lambert, from May-day 1842 to May-day 1843, and an occupation by the pauper from March 1842 to May-day 1843, under that renting; and the payment by the pauper of two rates, one for January 1842, and the other for April 1842; but it appeared that there was no payment by the pauper of any rate made between May-day 1842 and May-day 1843, when his occupation ceased. The Sessions found as a fact, that the tenancy under Lambert commenced at May-day 1842. The Court of Quarter Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court on two points: first, whether the respondents were entitled to go into evidence, at the trial of the appeal, of the assessment and rating in Orton; and, secondly, whether as the pauper was not assessed after May-day 1842, to any rate which he paid, the facts stated were sufficient, since the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 66, to prove a subsequent settlement in Ingleton. If the Court of Queen’s Bench should be of opinion that the respondents were not entitled to go into such evidence, or that the facts above stated as to the assessment and payment of rates in Ingleton, were not sufficient for a settlement in the latter township, then the order was to be quashed, otherwise to stand confirmed.

Drinkwater and Pashley, in support of the order of Sessions.—The examinations shew that the Magistrates took all practicable means to get the best evidence of the rating of the pauper in Orton; and, therefore, the statement of that which amounts to secondary evidence is sufficient to establish such rating. It may be admitted that parol evidence is not to be given of the contents of rate-books, which are not produced, and which no notice has been given to produce—The King v. Coppull (1), but here notice to produce was given, which brings it within the authority of The Queen v. Staple Fitzpaine (2), The Queen v. Mildenhall (3); and the opposite party, with full knowledge of the purpose for which they are required, refuses to produce them. There is no doubt that the overseer was served with the summons, as he admitted such service. The Justices could not compel the overseer to produce the rate-book—The King v. Woburn (4), Worrall v. Jones (5) even since the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 101. s. 70. The Magistrates might therefore act upon his admissions—The King v. Hardwick (6). The principle is the same as in those cases in which a party has an opportunity of cross-examining and does not—Cazenove v. Vaughan (7). When the overseer is required to produce the rate-books, he becomes a party, and a subpoena does not lie. It cannot be objected that the summons was not in form sufficient to operate as a notice to produce. No technical or particular form of words is necessary to constitute a good notice—Smith v. Young (8), and it may even be by parol. This summons is directed to the overseers, and is quite explicit as to the time and place at which they are to appear, and as to what they are to bring with them; and further, there is the direct admission that the pauper belonged to the appellant parish.

Then as to the second objection, it being found that the tenancy commenced at May-day 1842, there has been no payment of rates under the yearly hiring to satisfy the 6 Geo. 4. c. 67.

Archbold and Otter, contra.—It may be taken as admitted on the other side, that, unless the document called a summons amounts to a notice to produce, the examination is insufficient. How then can this be called a notice, which is not sent by or on behalf of one party to another, but emanates from the Magistrate, and is under his seal? Again, how could there be a notice to produce at a time when there were no parties to any suit or proceeding? The objection arises before even an order of removal is made. The proper course would have been to have procured a subpoena from the Crown Office, in obedience to which the overseer would have been compelled to attend; and if he attended, and refused to produce the rate-books, then, and not till then, could secondary evidence be given of their contents. The case of The Queen v. Staple Fitzpaine is in favour of the objection. That case was decided on the ground that the notice of appeal did not raise the question. The statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101. s. 70. now enables Justices, by summons and warrant, to compel the appearance of witnesses, and the giving evidence before them. As to the second objection, the appellants proved a settlement by rating. (They were then stopped.)

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We think that the first objection is fatal, and that the order of Sessions cannot stand. The objection is that no legal evidence of any assessment was given before the removing Magistrates, and that objection is taken in the grounds of appeal. It is necessary to proceed in these matters on legal principles, and if there is no evidence at all of the assessment, or such evidence as is not admissible, the examination is bad. There are means by which a party is compellable to produce documents, and these means should have been resorted to; this has not been done.

PATTESON, J.—I am sorry to be obliged to yield to an objection of this sort.

s. 105, need not be personally served upon the convicting Justices.

This was a rule calling upon the Justices of the North Riding of Yorkshire to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue to them, commanding them to cause continuances to be entered, and to hear an appeal by William Lunn against his conviction by three Justices, of an offence under the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 72. The affidavits on which the rule was obtained stated, that Lunn had within fourteen days after his conviction, left a written notice of his intention to bring his appeal, together with a statement in writing of the grounds of such appeal, at the dwelling-house of each of the three Justices. It appeared from the notes of the chairman of the Court of Quarter Sessions, that at the sessions the respondents' counsel objected that there should have been personal service of notice of appeal upon the Justices; and the Court of Quarter Sessions, after referring to the case of The Queen v. the Justices of Bedfordshire (1), dismissed the appeal, on the ground that personal service was necessary.

Tomlinson now shewed cause.—The mandamus ought not to issue. The appeal against the order of Justices is of a penal nature, for the Sessions have power, by section 105. of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, to award costs against the respondents—The Queen v. the Justices of Hertfordshire (2). The act does not expressly direct any mode of service, and therefore it may be contended that personal service is necessary; or at least, if service at the dwelling-house be sufficient, it ought to be accompanied by some evidence to shew that the notice has reached the hands of the Justices. Here the affidavits shew nothing more than a leaving the notice at the house, without any statement that it was delivered to any servant, or that any explanation of it was given.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—In the case of The Queen v. the Justices of Bedfordshire, nothing was said about the mode of service. Suppose it is impossible to serve the Justice personally: he may refuse to be seen. And

(2) Ante, p. 73.

the notice must be given within fourteen days.]

At least the appellant should use due diligence, and state what steps he has taken to endeavour to effect service. In analogous cases, either personal service or reasonable proof that the process has reached the party to be affected, or a statement of the causes which have prevented actual service, is required. Thus, in order to ground an attachment, there must be personal service of the order which is disobeyed—so of a writ of mandamus. To obtain a distringas, there must be proof that the party is keeping out of the way to avoid process—to prove service of a declaration in ejectment, there must be evidence to shew that it has reached the hands of the party. Wherever the mere leaving of a notice at a dwelling-house is sufficient, it is because there has been an express statutory enactment to that effect.

Bliss, contra.—The appeal was dismissed by the Sessions, on the ground that personal service of the notice was necessary. (He was then stopped.)

Appeal—Order of Removal—“Next practicable Sessions”—Jurisdiction—Party aggrieved—Certiorari, Notice on Magistrates under 13 Geo. 2. c. 15. s. 5.

An order of removal was served on the 7th of August. Notice and grounds of appeal (dated September 6), “for the then next Sessions,” were served on the 14th of October. The next Sessions were held on the 17th of October. By the practice of Sessions eight days' notice of trial of an appeal is required. Neither party attended at the October Sessions, and it was stated on affidavit that the deponent (the respondent's attorney) was informed and believed that no appeal was then entered. At the Epiphany Sessions, in the absence of the respondents, no further notice of trial having been given, the order of removal was quashed, with 5l. costs:—Held, that this was a grievance entitling the respondents to apply to have the order of Sessions quashed; and that the Sessions had acted without jurisdiction in entertaining the appeal.

Held also, that an affidavit of service of notice of certiorari under 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 5. on A. and B, "two of the Justices present at the Sessions at which the order was made, and who are two of the same Justices whose names are mentioned in the heading or caption of the said order," was, under the circumstances, sufficient as against the appellent parish.

On the 29th of July 1843 an order was made under the hands and seals of two Justices of the county of Kent, for the removal of Elizabeth Quinell from the parish of Sevenoaks to the parish of St. Luke's. By another order of the same date the said order was suspended. On the 17th of August a copy of the orders and examinations were sent to the overseers of St. Luke's. On the 14th of October a notice of appeal "for the then next Sessions" for the county of Kent, together with grounds of appeal, both dated September 6, were served, by the churchwardens and overseers of St. Luke's, upon the overseers of Sevenoaks. The next Sessions for the county of Kent, after the service of the notice of appeal, were held on the 17th of October. By the practice of the Sessions eight clear days' notice of trial of an appeal against an order of removal is required. No one attended on the part of the parish of Sevenoaks at the Sessions on the 17th of October, nor at the following Epiphany Sessions. It did not appear that anything further was heard about the appeal by the parish of Sevenoaks until the 17th of February 1844, when the overseers of Sevenoaks were served with a copy of the following order of Sessions:—

"Kent. At the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace of our Lady the Queen, holden at Maidstone, in and for the county of Kent, on Thursday in the week next after the 28th day of December, to wit, the 4th day of January, in the seventh year of the reign of our Sovereign Lady Victoria, &c. before Joseph Berens, James Jacobson, John Malcolm, Esquires, and others their associates, Justices of our said Lady the Queen, assigned to keep the peace, &c.

"Upon an appeal made unto this Court by the inhabitants of the parish of St. Luke in the county of Middlesex, from an order made by two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for this county, for the removal of Elizabeth Quinell from the parish of Sevenoaks in this county, to the said parish of St. Luke, there to be provided for. Now upon reading the said order and hearing counsel and what could be alleged on both sides, it is ordered by this Court, that the said order so made by the said Justices, be, and the same is hereby in all points, quashed. And it is further ordered by this Court, that the overseers of the poor of the said parish of Sevenoaks do forthwith pay unto the overseers of the poor of the said parish of St. Luke the sum of 5*l.*, for and towards the costs and charges they have been at in and about the said appeal.

"By the Court," &c.

In Easter term 1844—

Deedes obtained a rule nisi for a certiorari to remove the order of Sessions into this Court.—The rule was granted on affidavits of the overseers of the parish of Sevenoaks, and also on the affidavit of Mr. Holcroft, one of the attornies for the respondent parish. He deposed that he and his partner were retained and employed by and on behalf of the inhabitants of the parish of Sevenoaks, in the prosecuting and conducting of an appeal, in which the said inhabitants were the respondents; and that he did, on the 25th day of April 1844, serve Joseph Berens, Esq. and James Jacobson, Esq., two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, in and for the said county, with the notices thereunto annexed. And that the said Joseph Berens, Esq. and James Jacobson, Esq., were two of the Justices present at the said General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, at which the said order in the said notice mentioned was made, and are two of the same Justices whose names appear and are mentioned in the heading or caption of the said order.

The notice was in the usual form, and was signed,

"Austin & Holcroft, attornies for the inhabitants of the said parish of Sevenoaks."

It was further stated in the affidavit, that no appeal was prosecuted or entered and respited by or on behalf of the said parish of St. Luke against the said order of removal at the Sessions, held on the 17th of October 1843, as the deponent was informed and believed.

No cause being shewn against the rule for bringing up the order of Sessions, it was, in Trinity term, 1844, made absolute.

In Michaelmas term—

Deedes obtained a rule nisi for quashing the order of Sessions for insufficiency.—This rule was drawn up upon reading the return to the certiorari, and the several affidavits on which the former rule had been obtained; and the ground of his motion was, that no appeal having been entered at the October Sessions, the Justices had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal at the January Sessions.

On the 18th of January 1845,—

Pashley obtained a rule nisi for quashing the certiorari; first, on the ground that the notice of certiorari did not appear to have been served on two Magistrates present at the making of the order; secondly, that the application did not sufficiently appear to have been made on behalf of the parish of Sevenoaks.

Deedes shewed cause.—The first objection is taken on the authority of The Queen v. Cartworth (1), it not being in terms distinctly stated in the affidavit of service, that the Magistrates served were two of those before whom the order was made. But in this case, in addition to the fact of the names of these two Justices appearing on the caption of the Sessions, there is, at all events, a prima facie case, as against the appellants, as these very Magistrates are named in the order which the respondents seek to set aside, and which order having been made behind their backs, they have no means of knowing what Justices were present when it was made. In The Queen v. Cartworth the affidavit only stated that the Magistrates served were two of the Magistrates of the West Riding.

[PATTESON, J.—And in that case they might have been appointed as such since the making of the order. There was a case of The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Darton (2), before me in the Bail Court.]

This case is stronger than that, as the heading of the order shews it to be the order of the particular Magistrates. Secondly, it distinctly appears that the attornies who served the notice were authorized by the parish of Sevenoaks, and that the application is made on the behalf of that parish—The King v. the Justices of Lancashire (3), The Queen v. the Justices of Lancashire (4), The Queen v. Solly (5). Lastly, it is now too late to move to quash the certiorari after the parties below have neglected to come in and shew cause, which they might have done—The King v. Wakefield (6), The King v. Nicholls (7), The Queen v. the Justices of Shrewsbury (8), The King v. Rattislaw (9).

(1) 13 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 26.

(2) Ante, 41.

Pashley, in support of the rule for quashing the certiorari.—In every case in which the Court has been called upon to put a construction on the statute 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 5. they have construed it strictly. The Court of Quarter Sessions may now be divided under the power given by the statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38. s. 4, and it may well be that the Magistrates who were served with the notice, though they were, in fact, present at the Sessions, were not present when the order was made.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—You have served the respondents with an order containing the two names in the heading.]

That is no ground for the presumption one way or the other. They extract the order from the minutes of the clerk of the peace. The Queen v. Darton is conclusive. It was there sworn that the Magistrates were present at the Sessions, which is all that the heading of this order can at most amount to. Secondly, it does not appear that the attornies who gave the notice had any authority to do so. They swear that they were retained by the parish of Sevenoaks to prosecute and conduct the appeal; but the appeal had terminated by the judgment of the Sessions, and the authority of the attornies thereby terminated also—Rolle's Abr. tit. 'Attorney' (M), Barker v. St. Quintin (10). In The King v. the Justices of Lancashire, the Magistrates appeared and shewed cause against the rule for a certiorari. It is not sufficient for an attorney to swear that he is the attorney of the party; the affidavit should shew authority to act in the particular case—Lewis v. Lord Tankerville (11).

The judgment of the Court was delivered (April 26) on a subsequent day, by—

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This case is distinguishable from The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire (12). There it appears from the facts of the case that both parties were present at the Sessions, and that the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court on a case. It is not there stated that the Justices who were served with the notice of the application for a certiorari were members of the Court, or were present on the day when the case was heard. In this case the parties applying for the certiorari were not at the Sessions, and a copy of what took place at the Sessions was sent to them by the opposite parties. That copy states the order of Sessions, and the heading or caption of the order contains the names of Joseph Berens and James Jacobson, amongst others, as two of the Justices before whom the said order was made. Then, the affidavit of notice of the intention to apply for a certiorari states that these Justices were served, being two of the Justices present at the Quarter Sessions, at which such order was made, and whose names appear in the heading or caption of the order. We think this copy of the order is sufficient prima facie evidence against the parties serving it, that these Justices were present; and if there has been any mistake as to the service, it should have been shewn, by an affidavit from the other side, that these two Justices were not present at the hearing at the Sessions.

Rule to quash the writ of certiorari discharged.

Pashley (April 30th) shewed cause against the rule to quash the order of Sessions.—First, there has been here no grievance.

The order of removal has been suspended, and the suspension never taken off. If the order made at the Epiphany Sessions be, as the respondents contend, a nullity, they will have an opportunity of contesting its validity, if the appellants should ever attempt to put it in evidence hereafter. In the meantime they are not damnified, and the Court in its discretion will not interfere to quash an order where no actual grievance exists, and where the parties have another remedy.

The following cases were cited:—Wylie v. Birch (13), The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire (in the matter of Thornton), Ex parte Lord Gifford (14), The Queen v. the South Holland Drainage (15), The Queen v. Dunn (16), The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding, (Sheffield v. Crich) (17).

But, secondly, it is not shewn that there was any want of jurisdiction in the Justices to make the order at the Epiphany Sessions. The affidavits state merely the information and belief of the deponents, that there was no entry of the appeal at the October Sessions. This is insufficient—Symes v. Amor (18), Joynes v. Collinson (19). There should have been either an application to the clerk of the peace to ascertain whether there was any entry, or an affidavit by him. Mere irregularity in the mode of proceeding is not sufficient to justify the interference of the Court. He cited The Marshalsea case (20), *The King v. Baines and Deedes, contra.—The order of Sessions discharges the order of removal, and orders the respondents to pay the sum of 5*l*. It imposes a penalty, and it may be used hereafter as evidence of the pauper's settlement. This is clearly a grievance.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We have no doubt at all upon that point.]

Then the order is not irregular merely: it is made without any jurisdiction. The appellants were bound to go to the Michaelmas Sessions and enter their appeal. The affidavits shew that there was no entry at the Michaelmas Sessions.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—This case has undergone great consideration. It is first said, that the defendants labour under no grievance. I think most certainly they do labour under a grievance, and that we are bound to interfere, if in other respects our interference is justified. Reference has been made in the course of the argument to numerous cases, among others to a case of Ex parte Lord Gifford. I may observe that the authorities there cited do not bear out the proposition contended for in argument, in that case, that a peer cannot be bound over by recognizance. But, in truth, that case is totally inapplicable to the present. The question here simply is, whether the Sessions had authority to quash the order of Magistrates. The order was served on the appellants on the 7th of August. Notice of appeal and grounds of appeal, dated the 6th of September, were served on the respondents on the 14th of October. The next Sessions were held on the 17th of October. At these Sessions nothing whatever appears to have been done. At the following Epiphany Sessions the order was quashed, the appellants relying, it seems, in some way or other, upon the notice which they had given on the 14th of October. Now, the question is, as the appellants were bound to go to the next practicable Sessions, whether the October Sessions were practicable, or whether a party is entitled to lie by, to do nothing at the next Sessions, and at his option treat the second Sessions after the service of the order of removal, as that to which he will appeal. And I am clearly of opinion that the October Sessions were the next practicable Sessions, and that they did not become impracticable because the appellants chose to keep in their pocket the notice of appeal till it was too late to try the appeal at these October Sessions. Both parties would seem to have endeavoured to overreach the others. Professional men ought to communicate with one another, and one or other of the parties would have done himself credit, and have relieved his clients from expensive litigation, if they had inquired from, or stated to their opponents, whether they intended to try the appeal, and when. The question is, whether the Sessions in January, when they quashed the order, had possession of it at all. As nothing was done at the October Sessions, to which the appellants were bound to go, it seems to me that the following Sessions acted in a cause over which they clearly had no jurisdiction or controul whatever. They might just as well have given judgment in a cause in this court. The appeal ought to have been entered at the October Sessions, and carried over by adjournment. The affidavits are not very express in stating that it was not entered at the October Sessions, but they contain sufficient to call upon the officer of the court or the opposite party to state what really took place, and there is no statement made by either that there was any entry and respite at the October Sessions.

PATTERSON, J.—The only doubt I have had is, whether the affidavits sufficiently shewed that there was no entry of the appeal at the October Sessions. It is now settled that, even when an appellant has plenty of time to try at the Sessions next after the service of the order of removal, if he does not choose to try, the Sessions must enter and respite the appeal. The appellants, therefore, in this case were not compelled to try at the October Sessions, though they might have done so. I dare say, when they first drew up their notice, they did mean to try in October, but perhaps altering their minds, they keep it by them and serve it on the 14th of October, without altering the date. In order to keep alive that notice as a notice for the Epiphany Sessions, they were bound to enter their appeal in October.

WILLIAMS, J.—I should surmise that the appellants must have considered their notice of appeal as abolishing the October Sessions altogether. The question is, what we are to deem the October Sessions to have been. Are we to consider them as any Sessions at all? In one respect, no doubt, they were not a practicable Sessions: that is, not practicable for the trial of the appeal. And why? because the party chooses to keep his notice so long without serving it. But a party has no right by his own conduct to make that an impossible Sessions, which is possible in point of fact.

An order of removal was grounded on examinations shewing relief given by the appellant parish to the pauper's father, while residing out of the appellant parish, at a time when the pauper was twenty-seven years of age, and containing nothing to raise the presumption that the pauper was at that time emancipated:—Held, that the examinations were sufficient, and that it was not necessary they should negative the fact of the pauper's emancipation at the time the relief was given to his father.

On appeal against an order of two Justices for the removal of Thomas Silvester and his two children, from the parish of Lilleshall, in the county of Salop, to that part of the parish of Muccestone, which lies in the county of Stafford, the Sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a case, the material parts of which were as follows:—

The examinations were taken and the order made on the 7th of July 1843. The examinations were, first, that of the pauper: "I am about thirty-eight years of age. I am the son of Thomas and Jane Silvester. In the year 1834 I was married by banns at the parish church of Wellington, to my late wife Ann, by which marriage I have two children: viz. Samuel, aged eight, and Thomas, aged five years. I have never done any act to gain me a settlement in my own right." Secondly, the examination of Jane Silvester, the pauper's mother: "In 1799 I was married at the parish church of High Offley to Thomas Silvester, who died in the parish of Lilleshall eleven years ago last November, by which marriage I had five children, one of them being the pauper Thomas Silvester, who was born at the township of Dorrington, in the county of Salop, in the month of September 1804. My said late husband was at the time of his death a legally settled and acknowledged parishioner of that part of the parish of Muccestone, which lies in the county of Stafford. About half a year before his death he received relief from the overseers of the said parish of Muccestone, and at the time he received the relief he was living in the said parish of Lilleshall. He received 1s. a week. After my husband's death I received relief from the said parish of Muccestone."

The appellants' first and third grounds of appeal were:—

First, that the examinations upon which the order was grounded were incorrect and too general, and not made with sufficient accuracy and particularity; thirdly, that the pauper Thomas Silvester was emancipated when his father Thomas Silvester gained the alleged settlement in Muccestone.

At the hearing of the appeal, the appellants objected to the examinations (under the first ground of appeal), on the ground, that a fact material to the case was omitted in them, inasmuch as it was not stated, nor did it appear by them that the pauper was unemancipated at the time his father gained a settlement in the appellant parish; it being consistent with the examinations that the pauper was emancipated at the time his father gained the said settlement. The respondents contended, first, that the examinations were good, and that it was not inconsistent with them that the pauper was unemancipated at the time his father gained a settlement in Muccestone; secondly, that relief to a pauper whilst resident in another parish not being in itself a ground of settlement, but merely evidence of acknowledgment of a settlement on the part of the relieving parish, it was unnecessary to state that the pauper was unemancipated at the time such relief was afforded to his father; thirdly, that it was not competent to the appellants to take the objection under their first ground of appeal. The Court of Quarter Sessions quashed the order, subject as aforesaid. If the Court should be of opinion that the Sessions were right, the order of Sessions was to be confirmed; if of a contrary opinion, the order of Sessions to be quashed.

Phillimore, in support of the order of Sessions.—The only evidence of the settlement of the pauper's father in Mucclestone, is the relief given to him in 1831, which only shews that the father was acknowledged as then settled there. But the pauper at that time was twenty-seven years of age. It is not stated that he was then part of his father's family, or that he resided with him. He may have obtained a settlement of his own long before the relief was given to his father; and the relief may have been given to the father in respect of a settlement gained by the father long after the emancipation of the pauper. All the facts stated in the examinations may be true, and yet the pauper have no settlement in Mucclestone. Nothing is to be left to inference—The Queen v. the Inhabitants of North Bovey (1), The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding (2), The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Wyomndham (3), The Queen v. the Recorder of Pontefract (4), The Queen v. the Inhabitants of St. Sepulchre, Northampton (5), The Queen v. Pilkington (6). Here, the Court is called on to infer that the pauper was not married before 1831. It is true the examinations state that he was married in 1834, but they do not shew that that was his first marriage. The other side may rely on The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Yeaveley (7), but there it appeared on the face of the examination that the pauper was unemancipated, and till the contrary was shewn it was to be presumed that he continued so. So in The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Staple Fitzpaine (8), it was stated that the pauper had resided with his father as part of his family; primâ facie, therefore, he continued unemancipated. But in The King v. the Inhabitants of Oulton (9), Lord Denman, C.J. said, "Where a child has attained the age of twenty-one, and is then separated from the father's family, the burden of proof that the child is not thereby emancipated lies on the party asserting that fact;" and in the same case Patteson, J. observed, "She was of full age; and that being the case, the onus of shewing that she was not emancipated is thrown upon that party who contends that she was not so." These observations apply to the present case. The ground of appeal is sufficiently specific to let in this objection—The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Flockton (10).

Whateley and Boughey, contrâ, were stopped by the Court.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It appears to me that there is no objection to these examinations. Mr. Phillimore has referred to cases in which there have been many nice distinctions taken; but a clear and intelligible principle is sufficient for the decision of this case. Where facts are so stated in the examinations as to leave it doubtful whether any settlement was ever gained, we cannot say that a settlement appears on the examinations: but where the facts stated shew a good primâ facie settlement, although other facts may exist which would be inconsistent with that settlement, it is not necessary that the examinations should negative the existence of those other facts. There is no objection to these examinations unless the presumption of the emancipation of the pauper arises upon them: for unless that presumption arises, it was not necessary to rebut it. It should be remembered that the observations which have been cited as made by my Brother Patteson and myself in the case of The King v. the Inhabitants of Oulton had reference to the particular facts of that case; and can only be understood with reference to those facts. The question there was, whether on the facts we thought the Sessions right in finding that the child was emancipated, and we thought they were right. But, in the present case, it seems to me there is not that presumption of the emancipation of the pauper at the time relief was given to his father, which made it necessary that the examinations should negative the fact of his emancipation.

PATTERSON, J.—I think these examinations raised a prima facie case of the settlement of the pauper in the appellant parish. This is to be observed, that the examinations do not merely raise a presumption that the pauper's father acquired a settlement in the appellant parish at that particular time, 1831; but they shew an acknowledgment of his settlement (by relief being then given him), which acknowledgment may have had reference to a settlement gained by him fifty years before. It is at least evidence of a settlement gained by the father at some previous time. Perhaps the reports of the case of The King v. the Inhabitants of Oulton state the observations then made somewhat too broadly, without reference to the particular facts. It could hardly have been intended to have laid it down, that if a person be twenty-one years of age, it is to be presumed that he is emancipated, until the contrary be shewn. That case only decided, that if there be evidence, as in that case there was, of a child more than twenty-one being separated from its parents, that separation and service at a distance raise the presumption that she is emancipated. But in this case there is no evidence of the kind: no residence apart from the father, no separation whatever stated. The presumption of emancipation therefore does not arise here, and, consequently, there was no occasion to rebut it.

WILLIAMS, J.—In the The Queen v. Middleton in Teesdale (11), the Court proceeded upon the ground, that admitting the facts stated in the examinations to be true, they did not amount to prima facie evidence of a settlement, and upon various occasions, one or more of the members of this Court have intimated that a ground of appeal stating the examination to be bad and insufficient, is in the nature of a general demurrer, under which the objection that no settlement appears might be raised. And that is perfectly correct. But the present case is quite distinguishable. Here on the face of the examinations there is a perfectly good settlement shewn. And if anything exist to destroy it, by exception, still nothing of that kind appears upon the face of the examination, and, therefore, it is not to be presumed, and need not be denied, but should appear affirmatively from the other side. In the case of The King v. the Inhabitants of Oulton there were facts from which emancipation might be presumed: here there are none.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The question seems to me to be, as stated by my Brother Williams, whether, assuming all the facts stated on this examination to be true, they shew a prima facie derivative settlement of the pauper in the appellant parish. And I think they do shew it, unless any presumption exists as to the emancipation of the pauper, which ought to have been negatived. It appears to me that there are no facts here stated to raise any such presumption, and that the case of The King v. the Inhabitants of Oulton is no authority for the position as a proposition of law, that, when a person attains the age of twenty-one, it is to be presumed that he is emancipated.

Articles of the Peace—Sessions—Jurisdiction of Justices—Sureties—Commitment.

The Court of Quarter Sessions, upon articles of the peace exhibited in the absence of the defendants, made an order that the defendants, upon service of the order, should enter into recognizances before a Justice to keep the peace towards the exhibitant for six months. The order did not direct that in default of finding sureties they should be committed. The defendants having been brought before two Justices upon a warrant reciting the order of Sessions, declined to enter into sureties, whereupon the Justices committed them to gaol for six months, unless they should in the meantime enter into recognizances:—Held, that the Justices had no jurisdiction to commit them, and that the prisoners were entitled to be discharged.

At the General Quarter Sessions for the county of Huntingdon, held on the 7th and 8th of April, William Nainby Swallow exhibited articles of the peace against Allpress Ashton and Alfred Ashton, in their absence. They were under no recognizance or undertaking to appear at the Sessions, nor had they notice or knowledge that the articles of the peace had been exhibited till after the Sessions were concluded. The caption of the articles was as follows: "At the General Quarter Sessions held at Huntingdon in and for the county of Huntingdon, on Monday the 7th day of April 1845, before," &c. The jurat of the articles was, "Exhibited and sworn by the exhibitant W. N. Swallow in open court at the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the said county of Huntingdon, held at Huntingdon, in and for the said county of Huntingdon, this 8th day of April 1845." Upon these articles the Court of Quarter Sessions made an order headed as follows: "Huntingdonshire, to wit. At the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace of our Lady the Queen, holden at the Shire Hall in the town of Huntingdon, in and for the county of Huntingdon, on Monday the 7th day of April, and thence continued by adjournment unto Tuesday the 8th day of April, all in the 8th year of the reign of our Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria, before," &c. After reciting the exhibition of the articles, it proceeded: "And it is by this Court ordered, that the above named Allpress Ashton and Alfred Ashton do severally and respectively forthwith upon service of this order, before one or more of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace of the said county of Huntingdon, enter into their own recognizances in the sum of 100*l.* each, and severally and respectively find two sureties in the sum of 50*l.* each to keep the peace towards the Queen and all her liege people, and especially towards the said W. N. Swallow, for the term of six calendar months now next ensuing." On the 21st of April Messrs. Fryer and Linton, two Justices of the county of Huntingdon, issued their warrant to the constable of St. Ives to apprehend the said Allpress Ashton and Alfred Ashton. The warrant recited that the order of the Court of Quarter Sessions had been proved before them, and that it had also been proved to them that a true copy of the order had been on the 19th of April personally served upon each of them, Allpress Ashton and Alfred Ashton, and the original order at the same time shewn to them, and that they were then respectively requested to obey it, but that they severally and unlawfully and contemptuously refused to obey the said order of Sessions, and to enter into such recognizances and to find such sureties as mentioned in the said order. The Ashtons were accordingly apprehended on the 21st of April, and brought before Messrs. Fryer and Linton. They were asked whether they were prepared to enter into the recognizances mentioned in the order of Sessions. Their attorney submitted to the Justices that the order of Sessions was void, inasmuch as it had been made without hearing the Ashtons, and without their having an opportunity of being heard in answer to them, and that the Quarter Sessions could not in the absence of parties make an order to find sureties, unless it were sureties to appear at the next sessions to answer. The Justices said they could not question the order of Sessions, and were bound to enforce it. They accordingly signed a warrant of commitment, which after reciting the order of Sessions, the warrant to apprehend, and the service of the order, proceeded thus: "And whereas the said order of the Court of Quarter Sessions hath been this 21st day of April 1845, read over in the presence of us, the said Justices, to and in the presence and hearing of the said A. A. and A. A., and they the said A. A. and A. A. have been this day personally required by us, the said Justices respectively, to obey the said order of the said Court of Quarter Sessions, and severally and respectively to enter into such recognizances, and to find such sureties as are therein mentioned, or to shew and assign some good, valid and legal cause why they respectively refused to obey the said order, or why they should not respectively forthwith obey the same, and enter into such recognizances, and find such sureties as are therein mentioned, but they, the said A. A. and A. A. have again severally and respectively unlawfully and contemptuously in the presence of us, the said Justices, and still do unlawfully and contemptuously refuse to obey the said order of the said Court of Quarter Sessions, and to enter into such recognizances, and to find such sureties as are therein mentioned; nor have they, the said A. A. and A. A., or either of them, shewn or assigned any good, valid, or legal cause for their respectively having refused and still refusing to obey the said order, and to enter into such recognizances, and to find such sureties as are therein mentioned, or why they should not respectively forthwith obey the said order, and enter into such recognizances and find such sureties as are therein mentioned. We, therefore, the said Justices," &c. Then followed the commitment, requiring the keeper of the gaol to keep the bodies of the said A. A. and A. A. respectively, in his custody in the said gaol, "for the residue yet to come and unexpired of the term of six calendar months, to be computed from and next following the 8th day of April 1845," unless in the meantime they should enter into recognizances and find sureties to keep the peace, &c. "for the term of six calendar months to be computed from the 8th day of April 1845." Under this warrant they were committed to gaol.

Gunning (April 24) obtained a rule for a writ of habeas corpus to the keeper of the gaol, to bring up their bodies, together with the cause of their detainer. He also obtained a writ of certiorari to bring up the articles of the peace and the order of Sessions founded thereon. He contended, that the prisoners were entitled to their discharge. First, the articles were exhibited and the order of Sessions thereon made in the absence and without the knowledge of the defendants. Secondly, admitting the order of Sessions to be valid, it only directs the defendants to find sureties to keep the peace, but does not go on to direct that in default of their so doing they should be committed to prison; the two Justices therefore acted without jurisdiction. Thirdly, even if the Justices had jurisdiction at all, they awarded a longer term of imprisonment than they were authorized to inflict, viz. for "six months next following the 8th of April," whereas the caption of the articles shewed the Sessions to have been held on the 7th. Lastly, the order of Sessions does not shew that the Sessions held by adjournment on the 8th of April, were held within the county.

Biggs Andrews and Worlledge shewed cause (1).—As to the second objection, "It is said that whosoever a Justice of the Peace is empowered by any statute to bind a person over, or to cause him to do a certain thing, and such person, being in his presence, shall refuse to be bound, or to do such thing, the Justice may commit him to the gaol to remain there till he shall comply," 2 Hawk. P.C. c. 16. s. 2 (2). Here the Sessions have fixed the amount of the sureties, and the Justices had no discretion to alter them. Nor did the defendants apply to have the amount lowered. They refused to enter into any recognizance or find any sureties. In The Queen v. Dunn (3), the Sessions only ordered the defendant to find sureties, and the Justice committed for want of them, but no objection was taken upon that ground. And so, though there is no provision in the statute 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 13, authorizing Justices to commit to prison witnesses who refuse to appear and give evidence, yet it has been held that they have power to do so—2 Hawk. P.C. 62. c. 8. s. 58, Bennet v. Watson (4).

Gunning (with whom was O'Malley), contra.—The order of Sessions is to do a specific thing, viz. to find sureties. The Magistrates have chosen to enforce that order in a way unknown to the common law. (He was then stopped).

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We think this warrant of commitment cannot be upheld. The only power given to the Justices was to enforce the order of Sessions. They had no authority to commit the parties, but they have proceeded to convict them in a summary way upon a supposititious indictment for disobedience to the order of Sessions.

PATTESON, J.—The order of Sessions does not go on to say, “and in default of finding sureties the defendants shall be committed to prison.” It is quite silent as to their commitment. That being so, the Justices have exceeded their power in committing these parties. The committal is not according to the order of Sessions.

WILLIAMS, J.—It is admitted that the Justices had no original jurisdiction to send these men to prison: none whatever. There was merely a devolution upon them of a duty imposed by the Sessions. Consequently, when these men were brought up before them, the Justices could only do what the Sessions had directed. How could it be competent to them to commit them for either one, three or six months? I am entirely at a loss to discover the origin of their jurisdiction to commit them at all.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am also of opinion that this rule must be made absolute, and the prisoners discharged. The difficulty is to discover the authority of these Justices to commit them at all, the Sessions not having in the order introduced the alternative.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS OF RIPON.
May 3. }

Appeal—Certainty and Sufficiency of Statement in Ground—“Separate and Distinct” Dwelling-house.

*One of the grounds of appeal against an order of removal stated that the pauper was rated for and in respect of a tenement in the township of H, consisting of two dwelling-houses of the value of 10*l., &c.:—Held, that such statement was insufficient, by reason of its omitting to state that the dwelling-houses were “separate and distinct,” pursuant to the words of the statute 6 Geo. 4. c. 5. s. 72.

On appeal against the order of two Justices for the removal of William Leaf, his wife and children, from the township of Hunslet, in the borough of Leeds, to the township of Ripon, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, the Recorder confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court on a case which, as far as is material to the questions raised for the Court, stated the following facts:—

The respondents having proved a settlement in the appellant township, the appellants offered to give evidence of a settlement gained by the pauper in the township of Holbeck, under the following grounds of appeal:—

Sixth—That after the said supposed service, under the said indenture of apprenticeship, in the said examination mentioned, to wit, in the year 1836, the said pauper, the said William Leaf, was duly rated and charged with his share towards the poor-rates of and for the township of Holbeck, in the borough of Leeds, in the West Riding of the county of York, for and in respect of a tenement, to wit, a tenement consisting of two dwelling-houses, situate in the said township of Holbeck, of the value of 10*l.*, and held and rented by the said William Leaf of one Charles Crossland, for the term of one whole year, to wit, from the 1st day of November, A.D. 1836, to the 1st day of November, A.D. 1837, at and of the rent of not less than 10*l.*, to wit, for the rent of 14*l.* 5*s.*, and which said tenement was duly occupied for the said year, under the said yearly hiring; and the said rent for the same was duly paid, and the said William Leaf duly paid the said rates for and in respect of the said tenement, and during the whole of the said year, and for forty days after the payment of the said rates, resided in the said township of Holbeck.

The seventh, eighth, and ninth grounds of appeal contained similar statements of rating and renting premises, described in the same terms, for the four following years.

The respondents objected to the sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth grounds of appeal above set forth as insufficient, for not stating that the tenement or dwelling-houses in respect of which the pauper was alleged in the notice to have been rated were separate and distinct, as required by 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. After an argument the objection was overruled, subject to the opinion of this Court. The respondents also objected that the above grounds of appeal were severally insufficient, in not shewing any such residence in the township of Holbeck for forty days, as would, together with the payment of the rates stated on the above grounds, confer a settlement in Holbeck, on the party so paying and residing, as alleged. After argument, the objection was allowed, subject to the opinion of this Court. If the Court should be of opinion that the grounds of appeal were sufficient, the order of Sessions to be quashed.

Hall and Pashley, in support of the order of Sessions.—This Court has, in the decisions on the New Poor Law Act, uniformly required certainty and particularity of statement in examinations and grounds of appeal, and that nothing shall be left to inference—The Queen v. Wymondham (1), Stowell v. Lord Zouch (2). The term “dwelling-house” cannot be intended to mean a “separate and distinct dwelling-house” or “building,” as required by 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 2. The term “dwelling-house” may mean a single room, 3 Inst. 65, Co. Litt. 48, b, or chamber, 9 Vin. Abr. 380. So in the earlier cases of settlement a single room was held to confer a settlement—The King v. St. George, Hanover Square (3), The King v. Whitechapel (4). The words “separate and distinct” were therefore advisedly inserted in the statute, to meet the difficulty. All the later cases shew that the statute requires, first, distinctness as regards tenure—The Queen v. Caversall (5), The King v. Wakering (6); and secondly, distinctness as regards the building—The King v. Henley-upon-Thames (7), The King v. Great and Little Usworth and North Biddick (8).

dick (8). It may be said, that persons in general would understand the term “dwelling-house” to mean a separate and distinct house; but that is no answer where grounds of appeal are drawn under an act of parliament. They should specify in the very words of the act the character of the subject-matter of the notice—The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire (9), The Queen v. St. Margaret's, Rochester (10), The Queen v. the Inhabitants of St. Sepulchre, Northampton (11). If this were a case of civil pleading, and it were alleged in the declaration that the reversion of and in a dwelling-house belonged to the plaintiff, the allegation would be satisfied by evidence of a joint ownership of such reversion—Wallis v. Harrison (12).

On the second question they cited The King v. Ringstead (13), The King v. Wiltoughby (14); but the Court, as will be seen, gave no opinion upon it.

Pickering, contra.—Where it is stated that a person rented a dwelling-house, the Court will not intend that he only rented a part of one; and the words of the statute are satisfied by its being separate and distinct as regards any other person—The King v. Wootton (15), The King v. Great and Little Usworth and North Biddick. This is not a condition or positive qualification which must be stated, as in The Queen v. Wymondham, but it is matter which the words used necessarily imply, and the effect of the statement can only be defeated by shewing positively a non-compliance with the statute. This very point was raised in The Queen v. the Recorder of Pontefract (16). In The Queen v. the Justices of Buckingham- shire (17), Lord Denman observed, that Justices in matters of this sort were to exercise a reasonable intendment. On the second question he cited The Queen v. St. Mary Kalendar (18), The King v. Gainsborough (19).

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The stat. 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 2. enacts, that no person shall acquire a settlement by reason of settling upon, renting or paying parochial rates, for any tenement, not being his or her own property, unless such tenement shall consist of a “separate and distinct” dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bond fide rented, &c., for the sum of 10*l.* a year. The first objection taken to these grounds of appeal is, that they do not state the dwelling-house to have been separate and distinct, as the statute requires. Whatever meaning is to be given to these words, “separate and distinct,” it seems to me that in order to shew a settlement gained since the statute, the words themselves, or some equivalent words, should be used;—that is not done in this case; and in conformity with what we have already decided, we must hold these grounds of appeal insufficient. On the other question it is not necessary to give any opinion.

PATTESON, J.—We ought to adhere to the words of the act, and I think the grounds of appeal ought to state that the party acquired a settlement by paying rates for a separate and distinct dwelling-house, bond fide rented by him for the sum of 10*l.* a year, &c., according to the words of the statute.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion; the words “separate and distinct” have on several occasions received a distinct interpretation by the Court. Can we say that a settlement by rating and renting is complete without them?

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion on the express words of the statute.

Conviction—Stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. ss. 10, 14—Woollen Manufactures—Justices, Jurisdiction of—Penalties, Distribution of—Statute 3 Geo. 4. c. 24.

A conviction under the statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. s. 10. stated, that materials used in woollen manufactures, suspected to have been purloined, had been found in the house of A. B, and that he had given no satisfactory account thereof to the convicting Justices:—Held, that it was not necessary that the conviction should state that they were found concealed in the house, nor that they were found under a search warrant.

The statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, so far as regards the distribution of the penalties thereby imposed, is repealed by the statute 58 Geo. 3. c. 57.

Where the information, under 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. s. 10, has been laid before two Justices, and the conviction has taken place before two other Justices, this fact must appear on the face of the conviction.

On an appeal to the Quarter Sessions of the West Riding of Yorkshire, against the conviction of Joshua Taylor, the Sessions quashed the conviction, subject to the opinion of the Court on the following

CASE.

The conviction was in the words following, viz.:—“West Riding of Yorkshire, to wit. Be it remembered, that on the 1st day of May, A.D. 1844, at the parish of Bradford, in the West Riding of the county of York, Joshua Taylor, of the township of North Burley, in the said parish of Bradford, in the said West Riding, weaver, was convicted before us, H. W. Wickham, Esq. and John G. Horsfall, Esq. two of Her Majesty’s Justices of the Peace in and for the said West Riding of the said county of York, upon the information upon oath of Joseph Wilcock, of the township of Bradford, in the said riding, inspector of worsted yarn, a credible person, the informer in this behalf, and upon evidence on the oaths of certain persons, of whom the said

informer was not one, to wit, of Joseph Field, of the township of Bradford aforesaid, in the said riding, police officer, and Joseph Foster, of the township of Bradford aforesaid, inspector of worsted yarn, credible witnesses, of a misdemeanour, for that he, the said Joshua Taylor, had, on the 20th of April in the said year of our Lord 1844, in his, the said Joshua Taylor's dwelling-house, situate in the township of North Burley, in the parish aforesaid, in the West Riding aforesaid, (the said township of North Burley then, and thence hitherto, and still being a township having separate overseers of the poor of the said township, and the inhabitants of the said township then, and thence hitherto, and still maintaining the poor of the said township separately and apart from the said parish at large), certain materials used in the woollen and worsted manufactures, to wit, two pounds weight of worsted yarn and two pounds weight of alpacha yarn, then and there suspected to be purloined or embezzled, and then and there found in the said dwelling-house of the said Joshua Taylor, and in the possession of the said Joshua Taylor, and the said materials so found as aforesaid and the said Joshua Taylor having been duly brought together before us, the said H. W. Wickham and J. G. Horsfall, so being such Justices as aforesaid, on the said 1st day of May, A.D. 1844, at the parish aforesaid, in the riding aforesaid, he, the said Joshua Taylor, did not then or at any other time give an account to the satisfaction of us, the said H. W. Wickham and J. G. Horsfall, so being such Justices as aforesaid, how he came by the said materials, nor did he, the said Joshua Taylor, then, or at any other time, produce before us, the said Justices, the party or parties or any person or persons duly entitled to dispose of the same materials, of or from whom he bought or received the same, but though then and there required by us, the said Justices, then and there wholly neglected and refused so to do, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided: whereby and by force of the said statute, the said J. Taylor is to be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour: whereupon we, the said H. W. Wickham and J. G. Horsfall, so being such Justices as aforesaid, do adjudge the said J. Taylor to be guilty of the said misdemeanour, and that he hath forfeited for his said offence, being his first offence, the sum of 20*l.* of lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid, applied and distributed as the law directs, according to the form and directions of the statute in such case made and provided; and if the same be not paid, and if no sufficient distress shall be found whereon to levy the said penalty and forfeiture of 20*l.*, then we, the said Justices, do adjudge that the said J. Taylor be committed to the house of correction at Wakefield, in and for the said West Riding, without bail or mainprize, for the space of one month, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided. Given under our hands and seals the day and year first above written."

The parish of Bradford is divided into townships, each maintaining separately its own poor, the parish having churchwardens and no overseers, the townships having each their respective overseers and no churchwardens.

The counsel for the appellants objected, first, that the adjudication for the distribution of the penalty was not correct; secondly, that, on the information being put in, on the part of the respondent, it appeared to have been before Joshua Pollard and Thomas Paley, Esqs. Justices of the Peace in and for the West Riding, while the conviction itself was before Henry Wickham Wickham and John Garnett Horsfall, Esqs. two other Justices in and for the said West Riding, and that this did not appear upon the face of the conviction; thirdly, that the conviction did not state that the said materials used in the woollen and worsted manufactures so found in the dwelling-house of the appellant were concealed in the said dwelling-house, nor that they were found under a warrant, under the hands and seals of two Justices of the peace of the said West Riding. If the Court of Queen's Bench should be of opinion that the conviction was bad upon all, or any, or either of these points, the order of the Sessions was to be confirmed. If the Court should be of opinion that the conviction was good on the said points, then the order of Sessions was to be quashed and the conviction affirmed.

Hall and Overend (January 25), in support of the order of Sessions.—The conviction is bad, for each of the reasons stated. First, the penalty is not properly distributed, according to the provision at the close of the 14th section of the statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, "one moiety to the informer, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish." It is not sufficient to direct that it "be paid and distributed according to the direction of the statute." It may be said, that the statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. is repealed, as regards the payment of forfeitures, by the statute 58 Geo. 3. c. 51. But that is not so. The last-mentioned statute, both in the preamble and in the schedule, repeals an act passed in the 13 Geo. 3, but has no reference to any statute passed in the 17 Geo. 3. It is true the title of the act, 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, is set out in the preamble to the 58 Geo. 3, but the title is no part of the act. And there is a statute of the 13 Geo. 3. c. 68, which is within the scope of the 58 Geo. 3, and to which therefore it may apply. The following cases were cited upon this branch of the argument:—Atkinson's case (1), Allen v. Flicker (2), The King v. Cartwright (3), The King v. Pierce (4), Free v. Burgoyne (5), Chance v. Adams (6), Nixon v. Nanney (7), The King v. Biers (8). Secondly, as the information was made before two Justices, other and different from those who determined the same, this ought to have appeared on the face of the conviction. The statute 3 Geo. 4. c. 23. s. 2. enacts, that "in all cases where two or more Justices, &c. are authorized to hear and determine any complaint, one Justice, &c. shall be competent to receive the original information and complaint, and to issue the summons or warrant requiring the parties to appear before two or more Justices," &c., (who are to adjudicate thereon,) "and where the original complaint or information shall be made to any Justice or Justices, &c., or other person or persons, different from him or them before whom the same shall be heard and determined, the form of conviction shall be made conformable and according to the fact." This provision is general, referring to all cases. The 1st section of the same statute refers only to cases in which no form of conviction has been directed. The statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. s. 21. does direct a particular form of conviction, and therefore the 1st section of the 3 Geo. 4. c. 23. does not apply. But the terms of the 2nd section are express; and they have not been complied with in the present case—Jones v. Gurdon (9). Thirdly, the conviction is bad for not stating that the materials, &c. were found concealed in the dwelling-house of Taylor, or that they were found under a search warrant. The conviction is framed on the 10th section of the statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, the preamble of which refers to "materials, &c. concealed in the possession of persons who have received the same, knowing them to be purloined." By the enacting part of the same section Justices are, on information, &c., to issue their warrant to cause the premises to be searched; "and if any such materials shall be found therein," &c.—that is, if any materials are concealed therein, and are found concealed upon a search made under the authority of a warrant (10), the party is to be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanour. The 11th section authorizes the apprehension of persons carrying after dark any such materials suspected to be purloined, and provides in a similar way for their being adjudged guilty of a misdemeanour. And then the 14th section enacts, "That any person deemed and adjudged guilty of a misdemeanour in having in his or her possession any materials suspected to be purloined or embezzled, and not producing the party or parties being duly entitled to dispose of the same, of whom he or she bought or received the same, nor giving a satisfactory account how he or she came by the same; or of a misdemeanour in having, carrying, or conveying of the said materials suspected to be purloined or embezzled, and not producing the party, &c., nor giving a satisfactory account, &c., shall, for every such misdemeanour, forfeit for the first offence 20*l*." This 14th section does not create a fresh misdemeanour, but merely supplies the punishment for the offences previously described in the 10th and 11th sections respectively. This conviction is founded on the 10th section only, and the offence there described is not complete, unless the goods were concealed, and unless there had been a search warrant. The words are, "if such materials shall be found therein." Every finding contemplates a search, and a search under a legal authority. Unless properly called upon, a refusal to account would be no offence. The King v. Walsh (11), Basten v. Carew (12). All the preliminary proceedings necessary to constitute the offence, and to give the Justices jurisdiction, must appear on the face of the conviction—In the matter of Peerless (13), The Queen v. Scotton (14), The King v. Hazell (15), Kite and Lane's case (16). Davis v. Nest (17), which may be relied on on the other side, was a Nisi Prius decision only, and cannot be supported.

Pickering and Hardy, contra (Feb. 1).—First, the statute 58 Geo. 3. c. 51. repeals the 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, so far as the distribution of the penalties is concerned. There are eleven statutes mentioned in the preamble to the 58 Geo. 3. c. 51, most of which contain provisions similar to that contained in the 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. It was clearly the intention of the legislature to repeal the 17 Geo. 3. The title of it is fully and accurately set out in the preamble to 58 Geo. 3. c. 51. Since the time of Henry VII. acts of parliament have always been described by the legislature by their titles, and the clerical error, as to the year in which the act passed, cannot avail against the clear intention of the legislature (18). On this point they cited the following authorities—Mills v. Wilkins (19), Bac. Abr. tit. 'Statute,' (L), 5, Andree v. Fletcher

(16) 1 B. & C. 101.

(17) 6 Car. & Pay. 167.

(18) It was suggested as a probable explanation of the discrepancy, that it was the original intention of the framers of the act, 58 Geo. 3. c. 51, to repeal both the 13 Geo. 3. c. 68. and the 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, as regarded the distribution of the penalties; and that in revising the draught of the bill, the framer had struck out by mistake the title of the former, and the date of the latter statute.

(19) 6 Mod. 62.

(20), Anonymous (21), Com. Dig. tit. 'Parliament,' (R), 10. Secondly, there was no necessity to set out in the conviction, that the previous information was before other Justices than the convicting Justices. The statute 3 Geo. 4. c. 23. applies only to cases where no particular form of conviction is directed. But here a form is given.

[COLERIDGE, J.—Jones v. Gurdon turned upon the particular words of the act 52 Geo. 3. c. 93, which gave authority to a Justice, being a Commissioner of Taxes, upon information made to him, to summon the person accused before him. There, the act being restrictive, it was held, that the statute 3 Geo. 4. c. 23. s. 2. would not operate. But it is clear that that statute was meant to operate upon previous statutes, and here the statute 17 Geo. 3, being general, why should not the provision at the close of the 2nd section, 3 Geo. 4. c. 23, apply ?]

It only applies where no form is given, or to the cases mentioned in the former part of the same 2nd section. The two statutes are not inconsistent, and may stand together. They cited Williams v. Pritchard (22), and Dakins v. Seaman (23).

[PATTESON, J.—The other side say that the form of conviction, given in the 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, was a good form, without stating that the information was made before other Justices than the convicting Justices, up to the 3 Geo. 4, but that that act super-added something to the form previously used.]

Thirdly, the 14th section creates a new offence. If so, this is a good conviction under the 14th section only. But if not, the 10th and 14th sections must be taken together, and then the offence is sufficiently made out, if it appear that the party was dishonestly in possession of materials suspected to be stolen, and gave no satisfactory account when called on so to do. This was in substance the offence intended to be punished and guarded against. It was not necessary that the materials should be found in his house (though that fact does appear), nor that they should be found concealed there. That no search warrant was necessary to give the Magistrates jurisdiction, was expressly decided by Tindal, C.J., in Davis v. Nest. The 10th and 11th sections merely point out the process by which the party is to be brought before the Magistrates, and the goods discovered. If a party entered without any warrant, he might be liable in trespass for such entry, but still if the materials were found there, the Magistrates would have jurisdiction to proceed to inquire and convict. Even if it were necessary to prove that the previous proceedings were properly taken, it was not necessary to state them in the conviction, where there is a form of conviction given by the statute, as here—Chaney v. Payne (24), Nixon v. Nanney.

The judgment of the Court was now (May 15,) delivered by—

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—In this case three objections were made to the conviction: first, that the penalty was not properly distributed; secondly, that the conviction was by two different Justices from those who received the information; and, thirdly, that the goods were not found concealed, nor under a search-warrant. If any one of these objections is fatal, the conviction is to be quashed; if not, it is to be affirmed. None of them can be properly considered, without an examination of the whole law on the subject. The conviction is framed on the 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. s. 10 & 14, and charges in substance, that the defendant had in his dwelling-house and in his possession certain materials, suspected to have been purloined; that he and the said materials were brought before the convicting Magistrates, when he gave no account to the satisfaction of the said Magistrates, how he came by them, nor produced at any time the person from whom he bought or received them. It then adjudges him guilty of a misdemeanour, and that he has thereby forfeited 20*l.*, this being his first offence, to be paid in the manner provided by the statute, and orders imprisonment for one month in default of payment. The conviction is in the very words of the (24) 1 Q.B. Rep. 712; s.c. 10 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 114.

10th section, with an addition rendered necessary by the 14th section, and negatives that the appellant produced before the Justices the person of whom the goods were bought or received by him. But an argument is founded on the introduction of the word “such” as applied to the materials, among the operative words of the 10th section, where it is said to have reference to materials, as described in its preamble. The recital is, “whereas it frequently happens that materials used in the manufacture before mentioned are found, or known to be concealed, in the possession of persons who have received the same, knowing them to be purloined or embezzled, or of persons not entitled to dispose of the same; and, whereas the discovery and conviction of the purloiners and embezzlers, buyers and receivers of such materials is full of difficulty, from the close and clandestine manner in which the offence is committed, and there is still greater difficulty in proving whose property such materials are; and it would tend to the discouragement and suppression of such offences if the discovery and conviction of such offenders were rendered more easy; and, whereas, by a former Act, (22 Geo. 2.) Justices of the Peace, after conviction of any offender for purloining or embezzling the said materials, or for buying or receiving the same, are authorized to grant warrants for searching the houses and other places of the persons so convicted, but no such authority is given before conviction, nor in any other house or place except such as belongs to a person before convicted.” Then the enactment follows: “that it shall and may be lawful for any two Justices, &c., upon complaint made to them, upon oath (or on affirmation by a Quaker) that there is cause to suspect that any such purloined or embezzled materials, &c. are concealed in any dwelling-house, &c., by a warrant under their hands and seals, to cause every such dwelling-house, &c. to be searched in the day-time;” then the misdemeanour is created; “and if any such materials, suspected to be purloined or embezzled, shall be found therein, to cause the same, and the person or persons in whose house, &c. the same shall be found, to be brought before any two Justices, &c., and if the said person shall not give an account to the satisfaction of such Justices how he came by the same, then he shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be punished in manner thereafter mentioned, although no proof shall be given to whom such materials belong." The word "such" is supposed to incorporate, in the description of the materials found, all the preceding particulars, or at least the fact of their being concealed in the dwelling-house where they are found; but we think this is not the true construction. "Such" does not appear to be applied to the circumstances, but to the nature of the article. It is not "so found," or "found upon such search," nor "found concealed," nor is there any reason why that limitation should be imposed, either by the legislature or by any judicial interpretation of the statute. The preamble recites the mischief, and moreover gives some additional powers for preventing it; but the offence meant to be put down is the possession of goods suspected to be purloined, without being able to give a satisfactory account of them. The difficulties that had protected suspicious goods from seizure induced the legislature to provide a penalty against all in whose possession they might be found without explaining how they were come by; and the prima facie case is equally made out, whether they are found in their possession in the course of an unexpected visit, or by virtue of a search-warrant. This was the view taken by the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, in Davis v. Nest, and we think it perfectly correct. The concealment is merely evidence, and by no means essential to the definition of the offence.

Secondly, whether the penalty is properly distributed by the adjudication is assumed to depend on the question, whether the act just alluded to was in those particulars repealed by the 58 Geo. 3. c. 51. s. 3, which repeals an act passed in the 13 Geo. 3. intitled, an act, with the title of that which I have just referred to. The title of the 17 Geo. 3. is set out in the preamble to the 58 Geo. 3, not that of any act passed in the 13 Geo. 3, nor we presume of any other act whatsoever. A mistake has been committed by the legislature in setting out the year in which this act passed; but having referred to the subject-matter, and looking to the contents of the act itself, we cannot but find the intention was to repeal the 17 Geo. 3, and we think that the incorrect year must be rejected. The third objection, arising from the information having been before different Justices from those who convicted, is, that the fact of such difference is not recited in the conviction, as required by the 3 Geo. 4. That act must be taken generally. If the latter part of the second section, the part on which this turns, were confined in its operation to the case provided for in the former part of that section, viz., the commencement of a proceeding by one Justice, where two are necessary for the hearing and conviction, there is no reason why the words, Justice or Justices should be introduced. It clearly contemplated an information laid before two Justices. The words are as general as may be, and the application of the provision is as reasonable, where two have received the information, and two others have heard the evidence, as where one only has commenced the proceeding. For this objection we think that the conviction was bad.

Therefore, where a pauper was removed to parish A, as his birth settlement, and it was alleged in examinations that such pauper was born out of wedlock in parish A, in or about the year 1833, nothing being said as to the settlement of his mother:—Held, that as the words "in or about" the year 1833 did not necessarily exclude the 14th of August 1834 (the time when the statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. came into operation), the examinations were insufficient.

An impression made on an order with ink, by means of a wooden block, is a sufficient sealing.

On appeal against the order of two Justices for the removal of Thomas Hoggarty from the parish of St. Martin in the Fields, to the parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court on the following

CASE.

The order was made on the examinations of Cecilia Shea, otherwise Hoggarty, and Samuel Matthews. The said Cecilia Shea, otherwise Hoggarty, stated that she is residing at the workhouse at St. Pancras, in the county of Middlesex; that she is the mother of the said Thomas Hoggarty; that "in or about the year 1833" the said Thomas Hoggarty was born out of wedlock, at the house of one Mr. Flight, in Hart Street, now known as No. 33, Hart Street, in the parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, in the liberty of Westminster, in the county of Middlesex. The said Samuel Matthews, for himself, upon oath, saith, that he is messenger to the guardians of the parish of St. Martin in the Fields, in the liberty of Westminster, in the county of Middlesex; that the above-named Thomas Hoggarty, now present, is now residing at the workhouse of and in the parish of St. Martin in the Fields, in the said liberty and county, by which parish he has been relieved, and to which parish he is now actually chargeable. When the appeal came on to be heard, the appellants insisted that the said order ought to be quashed, for the insufficiency of the examinations on which it was made, and relied on the following grounds of appeal, as pointing out such insufficiency:—Secondly, that the examinations on which the said order was made are bad, defective and insufficient, inasmuch as they severally and collectively fail to shew that the said Thomas Hoggarty was born on or before the 14th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1834, and also inasmuch as they likewise fail to shew that the said Thomas Hoggarty ever inhabited in the said parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, so as to gain a settlement there; thirdly, that the said examinations contained no evidence sufficient to warrant and justify the adjudication contained in the said order, that the said parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, is the place of the last legal settlement of the said Thomas Hoggarty; fourthly, that the said order is bad, because no evidence whatever was received by the said Justices to shew whether the said Thomas Hoggarty had himself acquired any settlement in his own right, although it appears from the said examinations that the said Thomas Hoggarty was present before the said Justices, and that his said mother was also present before them when the examinations were taken. The Court of Quarter Sessions overruled each of these grounds of appeal, and held the examination sufficient, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench. Another objection taken by the appellants under another ground of appeal was, that they had not had sent to them any sufficient notice of the pauper being chargeable to or relieved by the removing parish; the only notice sent to the appellants was signed by seven persons styling themselves "overseers" of the parish of St. Martin in the Fields, whereas, at the time the notice was sent, there were two churchwardens, nine overseers, and twenty-four guardians, acting in and for the said parish. The Court of Quarter Sessions overruled this objection, subject to the opinion of this Court. Another ground of appeal, was that the said order is bad on the face thereof, and that the same was not signed and sealed by the said two Justices by whom the same purports to be made.

The respondents produced the said order of removal on the hearing of the appeal, and it appeared to the Court of Quarter Sessions that the signatures John Johnson and J. Tidd Pratt were the signatures of John Johnson and J. T. Pratt, two of her Majesty's Justices of the peace in and for the said county of Middlesex. On inspecting the said order it appeared to the Court not to be under the seals of the said Justices, and the respondents were called upon to shew when and how certain impressions in ink, which were to be observed near the respective signatures of the said Justices, were placed on the said order. The attorney for the respondents was thereupon called as a witness, and upon his evidence it appeared to the Court that the form of order used in this case was a printed form; that the parish of St. Martin in the Fields employ a printer to print from time to time a large number of such forms; that on each sheet of such large number of forms a stationer is employed to impress two marks in ink, which are so impressed by means of wooden blocks; that such impressions when so made at the foot of blank printed forms of orders of removal are intended to serve as seals for the Justices who may sign such orders. Each impression in this instance was so made before the sheets of paper had been sent to the parish officers of St. Martin in the Fields by the printer and stationer, and were in the same state on the order when it was made, as they were in when it was produced at the Sessions. The impressions represent an equestrian figure of St. Martin sharing his coat with a beggar, and is the size of an ordinary seal. The Court, after hearing the evidence on which the facts appeared, held that the impression in ink made by such blocks was a sufficient seal to make the order, when signed and delivered by the Justices, a good and valid order. If the Court of Queen's Bench should be of opinion that any of the objections to the said examinations above specified ought to have been allowed by the Court of Quarter Sessions; or if the Court of Queen's Bench should be of opinion that the notice of chargeability so sent as aforesaid was on the face thereof insufficient; or if the Court of Queen's Bench should be of opinion that the said order was not so made under the hands and seals of the said Justices as to be a valid order, then the said order of Sessions and the said order of removal were to be severally quashed; otherwise the same to stand affirmed.

Wortley and Bodkin, in support of the order of Sessions.—First, the pauper's mother states, that her illegitimate child was born in the parish of St. Paul; that is prima facie the place of its settlement, and that rule applies whether the child is legitimate or illegitimate; if so, it is no objection to the examinations that they do not shew that the pauper was born before the passing of the Poor Law Amendment Act on the 14th of August 1834. That act provides, by section 71. that every bastard child shall follow its mother's settlement till it attains the age of sixteen; but it does not appear there whether the mother's settlement was known to the Justices, and it must be taken on these examinations that it was in St. Paul's; there should be, at all events, distinct evidence of some other settlement to do away with the prima facie one of birth—The King v. Heaton Norris (1). But, secondly, it is stated with sufficient certainty, that the child was born before the 13th of August 1834.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—You do not say in what part of the year 1833 the child was born.]

The expression "in or about" is a way usually adopted, as it is impossible to swear to a precise day. It was not objected to in The Queen v. the Justices of Sussex (2); and in The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire (Drighlington v. Pudsey) (3) the statement was of a renting a tenement in or about the years 1828, 1829, or 1830, or some or one of them; and there was a similar statement in The Queen v. the Recorder of Pontefract (4).

[WIGHTMAN, J.—But would the want of certainty there make any difference?]

It is enough for overseers to give all the information they possess—The Queen v. North Bovey (5), The Queen v. Bridgwater (6). The words "in or about" are more certain than the term "about," which was held sufficient in The Queen v. Derbyshire (7).

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It may be sufficient for the parish to tell all they know, but the statement must amount to a good legal settlement.]

As to the sealing—The impression need not be made with wax—Sugden on Powers, 4th edit. 238, 239—Sprange v. Bernard (8).

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We have no doubt on this point.]

Pashley, contra.—As to the first point, if consistently with this statement a settlement might not have been gained, the statement is insufficient. The case of The Queen v. Ripon (9) establishes the strict rule on this subject; and the earlier cases in which the objection was not specifically taken, are not authorities against it. Will the Court say that the expression "in or about" necessarily means less than six or eight months? Take the case of an indictment for ravishing a child under the age of ten years, the age being the substance of the offence, would it be sufficient to say that the child was "about" the age of ten years? Where the pauper clearly appears to be illegitimate, as is the case on the face of these examinations, if the birth took place after August 1834, the settlement would not be that of birth. There is no reason to presume that the mother's settlement was in St. Paul's; prima facie it would be in the removing parish; and she might at all events have been asked the question. In The Queen v. Lydeard St. Lawrence (10), the fact of the Justices having the means of inquiry before them, is noticed by Patteson, J. Then, as to the seal. This is an order purporting to be made "under the hands and seals" of two Justices, but there was not such a sealing as the law requires. There should be a substance of some kind in addition to the paper—Lightfoot and Butler's case (11), Adam v. Kerr (12), and Shep. Touch. 52, 57.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We do not wish to encourage any doubt as to the sufficiency of the seal, but we think that on another ground this order is bad. On looking at the statement of the time of birth, we see that it is such that it affords no presumption that the child was not born after the particular period when the Poor Law Amendment Act came into operation. The words "in or about" leave those matters in doubt; and it being most material to know whether the birth was before or after the 14th of August 1834, it was the duty of the Magistrates to satisfy themselves clearly on this head, for if the child was born before that period, the removal to the place of birth would do; but if the birth was after that time, then the inquiry should be further pursued, and the mother's settlement investigated. I do not say that the mode of statement might not be sufficient for the purpose of information, if it were in other respects immaterial; but here it is most material, and should have been distinctly ascertained.

PATTESON, J.—I am of the same opinion. Here we find the words "in or about." Cases have been cited such as The Queen v. Derbyshire, in which the word "about" was considered sufficient, but I do not think that it appeared in any of them that the words were of any kind of consequence, except to give information to the other party. Here the words "in or about" the year 1833 cannot mean "in" the year 1833. The word "about" excludes the year 1833, and does not necessarily confine the time to a period previous to 1833, but might perhaps include August 1834, and if the child was born after the 14th of that month its settlement, up to the age of sixteen, would be that of the mother, and would not depend on the place of birth. Then the mother herself was examined, and no further questions were asked her as to the precise time of her child's birth. If she had been asked she probably would have said that the birth was in the year 1833; but that not having been done, nothing appears in the examination to fix the time with certainty as having been before August 1834.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion, and on the same ground, namely, that the point of time given in the examination being the very critical period when the act passed, therefore it was most material with reference to the actual state of the law to give the exact date. The words "in or about" fail to give the necessary information, and are too loose.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It is so very difficult to assign any period before or after the year 1833 to satisfy the word "about" that in a matter in which the time is material, I think the examination does not convey sufficient information. It is necessary that the examination should shew the birth to have been at a period when it would give a settlement in the parish in which it took place; but I am not prepared to say that the words "in or about" 1833 would not be satisfied by proof of some time subsequent to the month of August 1834.

Settlement—Examinations—Evidence.

The examination of a witness on which an order of removal was grounded, stated that the pauper, under letters of administration granted to him, had become possessed of a tenement in the appellant parish, and shewed that he had gained a settlement in respect thereof. A copy of letters of administration, corresponding in every respect with those described by the witness, was sent with the examination to the appellant parish:—Held, that it sufficiently appeared that the letters of administration, a copy of which was sent, had been produced before the removing Magistrate.

On appeal against an order of a Metropolitan Police Magistrate, for the removal of Thomas Munday, his wife and family, from St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, to St. Anne's, Westminster, the Court of Quarter Sessions for the county of Middlesex confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a CASE, the material parts of which were as follows:—The examination of Maria Munday, &c., who; on her oath, saith that she is about thirty-nine years of age, and is the wife of Thomas Munday, &c.; that on the 19th of January 1834, Stephen Munday, the brother of this examinant's said husband, died possessed of an estate, that is to say, a dwelling-house, situate No. 1, Market Street, Newport Market, in the parish of St. Anne, within the liberty of Westminster, which said dwelling-house was then of the value of 40*l.* per annum; that the said Stephen Munday made and executed his last will and testament, bearing date the 19th of January 1834, but did not therein appoint any executor, whereupon letters of administration, with the will annexed, on the renunciation of certain parties in such letters named, were granted unto this examinant's husband, the said Thomas Munday, bearing date the 26th of July 1834; and, as administrator with the will annexed of the said Stephen Munday, he, the said T. Munday, occupied the said dwelling-house, and resided therein for forty days and upwards, between the 25th of July 1834 and the 25th of July 1835.

NEW SERIES, XIV.—MAG. CAS.

The following were the only grounds of appeal material to the present case:—First, that it did not appear by the said examination that the said order of removal was founded upon any legal or sufficient proof, or any evidence of the grant or issuing of letters of administration, with the will annexed, of the estate and effects of the said Stephen Munday, deceased, to the said Thomas Munday, as administrator; secondly, that it did not appear by the said examination that the letters of administration, with the will annexed, were produced before the removing Justice, at the time of his inquiring into the settlement of the said Thomas Munday, and of his making the said order of removal.

When the case came on to be heard, the appellants objected that the examination was insufficient, upon the first and second grounds of appeal above stated. The respondents argued, that, taking the examination and the letters of administration together, which the Court ought to do, as they had been sent together to the appellants, and had been filed together in the Court of Sessions, and as the date of the letters of administration was stated in the examination, it appeared they must have been produced before the removing Magistrate. The appellants objected that such proof could not be permitted to be given in answer to their said objections. The Court received the evidence, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench on its admissibility. It was proved that at the time of making the order the letters of administration were, as alleged by the respondents, in fact, produced before the said removing Magistrate; and it was admitted that, together with the copy of the examination and order, a copy of the letters of administration, with the will annexed, had been sent to the appellants, but without any notice to the appellants that the same had been so produced before the removing Magistrate. A rule of court of the said Sessions requires the appellants to file a copy of the order and examinations; and the appellants had filed a copy of the letters of administration, with the will annexed, together with the copy of the examination. The Court of Quarter Sessions allowed the fact of the production of the letters of administration before the removing Magistrate to be proved, overruled the objection, and confirmed the order subject to this case.

Prendergast, in support of the order of Sessions.—All that was necessary was done. It appears that the letters of administration were before the Magistrate, and a copy of them was sent with the examinations to the appellant parish. Letters of administration prove themselves: they are not documents to the execution of which there is an attesting witness, in order to prove which the attesting witness must be called.

Pashley, contra.—It ought to have appeared on the face of the examination that some witness had produced before the Magistrate, and so connected with the parties the letters of administration, a copy of which was sent to the appellant parish—The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Mildenhall (1), The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Flockton (2), and The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Rishworth (3), were cited.

[WILLIAMS, J.—I presume you contend that the examinant, after stating the substance of the letters of administration, ought to have added, “as by the letters testamentary now produced, reference being thereunto had, will more fully and at large appear.”]

[PATTERSON, J.—Strike out of the examination all mention of the letters of administration. It would be perfectly good without it.]

Cur. adv. vult (4).

The judgment of the Court was now (May 3rd) delivered by—

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We think that there really is no doubt upon this case. We think it is impossible not to see that the letters of administration which were sent with the examination were those that were before the Justice: it would be shutting our eyes if we raised any doubt upon the subject, and therefore we are able to decide this case without at all interfering with the case of The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Mildenhall, in which the document that was acted upon did not appear to have been produced before the Justices.

Jan. 22, 25; } COMPANY AT KINGSTON-
May 3. } UPON-HULL.

Poor Rate—Docks—Tolls—Tonnage Duties.

By the stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. lvi. lands were granted by the Crown to the Hull Dock Company, with power to make a dock, wharves, &c., therein; and in consideration of the expense attending the execution of the works thereby authorized, certain duties were made payable to the company for every ship coming into or going out of the harbour, basin, or docks within the port of Kingston-upon-Hull, or unloading or loading any of their cargo within the said port. The company, under the powers given them, built three docks, viz., the Old dock, the Junction dock, and the Humber dock, communicating with each other. They built, also, an entrance basin to the Humber dock, from the River Humber, and an entrance to the Old dock from the harbour, or River Hull, which falls into the River Humber. The company had no right of property in the harbour, nor did they occupy anything there, except the entrance basin of the Humber dock. The port of Hull includes the harbour or River Hull, and a portion of the River Humber. All vessels, frequenting the port of Hull, paid tonnage duties to the company, whether they entered any part of the docks or basin of the company or not, and all such tonnage duties were paid and collected at the custom house:—Held, that the company were rateable to the relief of the poor, in respect of the tonnage duties received by them, for ships using their docks or entrance basin, but that they are not rateable in respect of the tonnage duties received by them for ships or vessels entering the harbour and port, but not using the docks or entrance basin.

(4) Pashley also objected that the order of removal was bad on the face of it, for want of jurisdiction in the single Police Magistrate to make it. To this it was replied, that the objection could not then be raised, and The King v. Guildford, 2 Chit. Rep. 284, was cited; but it appeared on examination that the Magistrate had jurisdiction, and the Court expressed no opinion as to the authority of The King v. Guildford, which Pashley contended could not be supported.

On an appeal to the Quarter Sessions for the town and borough of Kingston-upon-Hull, against a rate for the relief of the poor, in which the Dock Company at Kingston-upon-Hull were appellants, and the governor and guardians of the poor of the said town were respondents, the Court of Quarter Sessions amended the rate and assessment, subject to the opinion of this Court on the following

CASE.

The docks of the said company at Kingston-upon-Hull have been made in pursuance of certain acts of parliament, namely, the statutes of 14 Geo. 3. c. lvi, 42 Geo. 3. c. xci, 45 Geo. 3. c. xlii, 5 Geo. 4. c. xiii (1). By 14 Geo. 3. c. lvi. s. 42. it was enacted, that, in consideration of the great charges and expenses which the making, building, erecting and providing the basin or dock, quay or wharf, reservoirs, sluices, bridges, roads and works, thereby directed to be made, and the supporting, maintaining and keeping the same in repair for the future would amount unto, there should be payable, and paid, from and after the 31st of December 1774, to the said Dock Company, or to their collectors or deputies for their use, for every ship and vessel (the king's ships of war, and other ships and vessels employed in his Majesty's service only excepted) coming into, or going out of the said harbour, basin or docks within the port of Kingston-upon-Hull, or unloading or putting on shore, or loading, or taking on board any of their cargo, or any goods, wares or merchandises within the said port, by the master or commander, owner or owners of every such ship or vessel, the rates or duties of tonnage, thereafter particularly rated and described.

Soon after the passing of the 14 Geo. 3. c. lvi. the Old dock was built by the appellants. The Humber dock, with the Lock Pit, and entrance basin thereto, was built by the appellants, shortly after the passing of the 42 Geo. 3. c. xci. The third, or Junction dock, was subsequently built by the appellants. The three docks communicate one with another, and the Humber dock has an entrance into the same from the river Humber. The Old dock has an entrance into the same from the harbour or river Hull, which falls into, and is entered from the river Humber, and the Old dock communicates with the Humber dock by means of the Junction dock.

(1) It was agreed that to these or any other acts relating to the docks of the appellants, either party might refer.

[A plan was annexed to the case, which it was agreed either party might refer to.]

The dock company have no right of property in this harbour or haven, nor do they occupy anything there, or on the shores of the Humber, except the entrance basin of the Humber dock. The west or town-side of the Old harbour to the mid-stream thereof, opposite the town, is within the parishes of Holy Trinity and St. Mary in the said town, for which parishes the said rate was made.

The port of Hull, in its more confined sense, includes the river Humber to the midstream thereof, opposite the town and harbour; and all vessels frequenting the docks and harbour pass through that portion of the river Humber which is within the port of Hull as above described. Some of them discharge and load their cargoes in the Humber, opposite to the town, and on the town side of the midstream thereof, without entering the harbour, or the entrance basin, or any of the docks, and without ever using any part of the soil or property of the dock company, and without ever coming within the limits of either of the before-mentioned parishes. Others discharge and load their cargoes in the entrance basin of the Humber dock, without entering any of the docks or the harbour, and without using any other of the soil or property of the dock company, than the entrance basin. Others enter the Old harbour, and discharge and load their cargoes there, some on the east side, and others on the west side thereof, but without, in either case, entering any of the docks or basins, or using any part of the soil or property of the dock company. Others enter the harbour, and proceed through it into the Old dock, and discharge and load their cargoes, either there or in the Junction or Humber dock. Others enter the entrance basin of the Humber dock, and proceed through it into the said last-mentioned dock, and discharge and load their cargoes, either there or in the Junction dock, or in the Old dock. All the five classes of vessels above mentioned pay tonnage dues to the appellants.

The tonnage dues, in respect of which the Dock company are rated, are all paid and collected at the Queen's custom house, without reference to the place where the vessels are lying, or discharge or take in their cargoes, and whether they enter any part of the docks or basin of the company or not.

The appellants were rated in the rate or assessment which was the subject of the appeal, to the full amount (subject to the usual and necessary deductions) of the tonnage dues received by them for all the above-mentioned vessels frequenting the port of Hull, in whatever part of the port their cargoes were discharged or loaded, and whether they entered the basins or docks, and harbour, or any of them, or not.

The town of Kingston-upon-Hull consists of two parishes, viz., the parish of the Holy Trinity and the parish of St. Mary, and all the docks and basins, as well as the west side of the Old harbour to the midstream of the River Hull, are locally situate within the said two parishes.

For the appellants it was contended, that the dock company could not be rated for their property, in respect of any of their tonnage dues, inasmuch as they were all earned before the vessels came within either of the aforesaid parishes of Holy Trinity and St. Mary, or came into the docks, or upon the soil of the company, and that at all events they could only be rated in respect of the tonnage dues paid for such vessels as actually came into or used the docks or soil of the company, and also came within the limits of the aforesaid parishes.

The respondents, on the other hand, contended, that as all the dues were given in respect of the docks, the company were liable to be rated for their docks in respect of the whole amount of tonnage dues paid at the port of Hull, whether the vessels entered the dock or used the soil of the company or not.

The Sessions held, that the appellants were liable to be rated in respect of the tonnage dues received by them, (subject to the deductions aforesaid,) for ships or vessels using their docks and entrance basin, that is to say:—First, for those using the entrance basin without going into the docks. Secondly, for those passing through the old harbour to the Old dock, and using that or the other docks. Thirdly, for those passing through the entrance basin into the Humber dock, and using that or the other docks.

But the Sessions held that the appellants were not liable to be rated in respect of dues received by them for ships or vessels not using their docks or entrance basin, that is to say:—First, for those discharging their cargoes in the river Humber, without entering the harbour, entrance basin, or docks. Secondly, for those which discharge their cargoes in the Old harbour, either on the west or east side thereof, without entering the docks or basin.

The Sessions amended the rate accordingly. The question for the opinion of this Court was, whether the appellants were liable to be rated in respect of all or any of the above classes of dues received by them, and the rate was to stand, or to be increased, or to be reduced accordingly.

The case was argued in Hilary term last, (January 22 and 25,) by

M. D. Hill, Archbold, and Raines, for the respondents, who contended, that all the five classes of dues were rateable; and by Kelly, Wortley, Martin, and Bain, for the appellants, who contended, that none of the five classes were rateable.

The judgment of the Court was now delivered by—

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This case arose out of the decision in The Queen v. the Bristol Dock Company. Many cases have been decided and are reported as to the mode of rating the Hull Dock Company; but it is now for the first time contended, that they are not rateable at all. We do not mention this as in itself an objection to the view now first put forward by the company, but in order to shew what the real question is. If the defendants are within the principle of that case, they are not rateable at all; or if they be within the principle as to part of their tolls, they are not rateable as to that part. The case of the Bristol Dock Company was a very peculiar one. The company there were empowered to convert a large portion of the river Avon into a floating harbour, and to construct a new channel for the river itself,—a great work, in respect of which certain dues were granted to them for every ship entering into the port of Bristol. That port extended to a great distance, and many ships would enter it, which would have no occasion to use the floating harbour, and yet would be liable to pay the dues under the act of parliament. In that respect, the present case is very similar, for here many vessels are liable to pay dues to the company which never use their docks at all. But in the case of the Bristol Dock Company, the floating harbour was not the property of the company; before it was converted into a floating harbour, it was part of the river Avon, and of the port of Bristol, the property in which was vested in the corporation, (if in any subject,) and there are no words in the act of parliament vesting the property in the company. But it was sought to rate them in respect of entries into the floating harbour of Cumberland Basin, because that, or at least part of it, was the property of the company. That basin consisted of a portion of the old river Avon, with an addition made to it, by excavating several acres of land. Those additions appear to have been the property of the company; but the act of parliament provided that the company, in respect of these additions, should be rated in a particular manner, and the Court thought that the company could be rated for them, only in the manner provided by the act, and that dues on tolls could not be said to be profit arising in that basin, in the parish in which it was situate. Here, on the contrary, the docks themselves are the property of the company—they were excavated from land granted to the company, and made entirely de novo by them. The occupiers of the land, before the docks were constructed, were rateable for it, and if the docks yield any profit to those who constructed them out of that land the company surely must, in the absence of any enactment to the contrary, be liable to be rated in respect of such profits. In the Bristol case, inasmuch as the company could not be rated in respect of the principal subject-matter, the floating harbour, for which the dues were granted and received, the Court held that they could not be rated for the main entrance basin to that subject-matter, as if the tolls were earned in that entry. In the present case, the company can be rated in respect of the principal subject-matter, that is, the docks themselves. But it is said, that the tolls in this case are not given for the use of the docks, because ships must pay whether they use them or not; and so because those ships, which do not enter the docks, cannot be said to pay for the use of them, it is urged that those which do enter the docks, and use them, cannot be said to pay for the use of them. This argument is ingenious, but we do not think it conclusive; nor did it prevail in the Bristol case. The Court did not say there that the tolls were not granted for the use of the floating harbour, as regards those ships which use the floating harbour, but that the company could not be rated in respect of the tolls, because they were not owners of the floating harbour, and it was not attempted so to rate them. But it is said further, that these tolls are due on the ship the moment it enters the port of Kingston-upon-Hull, whether it proceeds into the docks or not; and, therefore, as the dues attach before arrival in the docks, they could not be said to be profits earned in the docks. The language of the act of parliament, 14 Geo. 3, is not uniform and consistent in the different sections, nor free from doubt; but it sufficiently appears from sections 42, 43 and 44, that the tolls are not due and do not attach upon a ship merely coming into the port; they attach on ships coming into the said harbour, basin, or docks, within the port of Kingston-upon-Hull, or unloading or loading goods within the said port. "The harbour," then, will probably mean the whole harbour of Hull Haven; but, whatever it means, a distinction is made between "coming into the docks," and "unloading or loading within the port," sufficient to shew that the tolls do not attach on a ship the moment it comes into the port. The fact, therefore, on which this part of the argument rests, is not as stated; but, if it were, the argument is not conclusive. The ship which actually comes into and uses the dock is not the less benefited by it, because the toll must have been paid even if it had not come in, and the benefit conferred by the use of the dock is not the less meritorious cause of the toll because other ships pay to which that meritorious cause does not apply. To those which come into the docks, the benefit is conferred by the docks and in the docks; and, therefore, the toll paid for that benefit must be held to be earned there in the docks, and to be profit arising there. As to those ships which do not come into the docks, which never are on the property of the company at all, the case is very different. The toll given to the company, and which such ships are obliged to pay, is doubtless given in respect of the company having made those docks; but still it does not arise from the use of the docks, nor is it earned in them. It is a naked toll, just as much as toll paid by vessels passing light-houses, and similar cases.

Upon the whole we are of opinion, that the learned Recorder was right in the view he took of this case, and that the order of Sessions must be confirmed.

THE QUEEN v. GOMPERTZ AND OTHERS.

Indictment—Venue.

An indictment, charging the offence to have been committed at Gray's Inn, in the county of Middlesex, is sufficient.

Peacock applied for a rule to shew cause why an indictment for conspiracy, which had been preferred and found against the defendants, and removed into this court by certiorari, should not be quashed, on the ground that no sufficient venue was alleged; the offence being stated to have been committed "at Gray's Inn, in the county of Middlesex." There is no such place as Gray's Inn, in the county of Middlesex, from which a jury could be summoned, and the offence is therefore insufficiently charged. This application is before verdict, and the defect is not aided. In The King v. Harris (1), an indictment laying the offence to have been committed at the Guildhall, in the city of London, was held to be bad, as the venue should be laid in some parish or ward. The Court will, upon motion, quash an indictment for want of an addition to the defendant's name — The King v. Thomas (2).

WILLIAMS, J.—I think that this objection ought not to prevail. The rule which was formerly adopted, that time and place must be added to every material averment in an indictment, has been frequently broken in upon since the case of The King v. Holland (3), for the jury are now summoned, not de vicineto, but de corpore comitatus. Suppose, then, that the words "Gray's Inn" had been omitted altogether, it would then appear that the offence took place in the county, which would, according to the present practice, be sufficient; and it seems to me to be quite immaterial whether there is such a place as Gray's Inn, or what its character may be.

May 23. { YORKSHIRE, (ST. PANCRAS AND BRADFORD).

Poor Law—Mandamus—Notice of Appeal—Signature by a Majority of Parish Officers—Presumption—Imperfect Statement of Facts in moving for rule nisi.

A notice of appeal against an order of removal was signed by a majority of parish officers, and commenced, "We, the undersigned, being a majority of the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, &c."—Held, that the presumption was that it had been signed by the majority on behalf of the whole body of parish officers, and that the onus lay upon the respondents of shewing that in fact it was not so signed.

If a rule nisi for a mandamus to hear an appeal has been obtained upon affidavits stating imperfectly the grounds upon which the Sessions proceeded in their judgment, and the facts omitted are substantial and material to the case, the Court will discharge the rule with costs.

A rule nisi had been obtained in Michaelmas term last, for a mandamus to the Justices of the peace for the West Riding of the county of York, to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order of removal from Bradford, in the West Riding, to the parish of St. Pancras, in the county of Middlesex. The only ground stated in the affidavits upon which the rule was granted was, that a copy of the order and other documents having been duly served on the appellant parish, no notice of appeal had been sent by the appellants within twenty-one days from the receipt of the copy of the order, but notice and grounds of appeal were sent after the expiration of the twenty-one days, and before the removal of the pauper, and in due time before the next Sessions, according to the practice of the Sessions, and that the Sessions had refused to hear the appeal on this ground.

Hall and Pashley now shewed cause on affidavits, which stated, that at the time when the appeal came on to be heard, the respondents called upon the appellants to prove their notice and grounds of appeal, and that a witness was called, who proved that there were six churchwardens and overseers for the appellant parish. The notice and grounds of appeal commenced, "We, the undersigned, being a majority of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of St. Pancras," &c., and was in fact signed by five out of the six. The respondents then called upon the appellants to shew when, where, or under what circumstances the notice was signed; and no evidence on this point having been given, it was objected by the respondents that the notice was invalid, as it purported to be the act only of a majority and not of the whole body of the parish officers, and that it ought to have been shewn that the signature by the majority was made at a meeting of the whole body, properly convened.—Two questions arise here: first, has a party a right to ask this Court for a mandamus on an affidavit stating one point alone on which the Sessions proceeded, without disclosing the other circumstances which took place at the hearing? If such a course is permitted, a mandamus may be granted on one point, when the others which are not noticed may be amply sufficient to warrant the Sessions in deciding as they did. This Court ought to be enabled to see, from the whole of what occurred, whether the Sessions have acted rightly or not. If the judgment of the Quarter Sessions ought to have been what it was, this Court will support their decision—The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire (1), The King v. Skeffington (2); on the ground, therefore, that this was an attempt to obtain a rule by imposing upon the Court an imperfect statement of what occurred, this rule should be discharged, with costs. But, secondly, if it is necessary to rely on any other than the first point, it is contended, that the decision of the Sessions was correct as to the sufficiency of the signature to the notice and grounds of appeal. It is admitted that the document need not be signed by all the parish officers, a signature by a majority on behalf of all will do, but then it ought to be clearly shewn that it was on behalf of, and the act of all. By the 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. s. 8. and the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. the whole body are to send notice of appeal; it is not the majority—The King v. the Justices of Warwickshire (3), The King v. the Justices of Derbyshire (4). This general principle was laid down in Grindley v. Barker (5) and acted on in Cortis v. the Kent Waterworks Company (6), and The King v. Whitaker (7). The act of the majority must be pleaded as the act of the whole—Robinson v. James (8), The King v. Kynaston (9), The King v. Theodorick (10). This is a quasi corporation, acting by their wrong name, and The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire (11) and Ward v. Clarke (12) are in point. In the former case Patteson, J. refused a rule under precisely similar circumstances. At all events, as the Court of Quarter Sessions has already given its judgment on a point of evidence, this Court will not send the case back to be reheard.

Pickering, contra, was not called upon.

WILLIAMS, J.—I think this rule must be made absolute. I quite agree with the statement which has been made, that if the Court is applied to for a mandamus on an affidavit which omits to state all the points upon which the Quarter Sessions proceeded, and if the facts which are not disclosed are material to the case, that is imposing upon the Court, and the rule ought to be discharged with costs. But in order that such should be the case, the points which are omitted ought to be real, substantial, and not such as this, merely imaginary points. The points which are urged here are, in my mind, purely ideal, and there is no weight in either of them. The first, as to the notice not having been given within the twenty-one days, was indeed given up by the counsel in argument, as being untenable, and there is just as little in the other point, for it is admitted that a signature by the majority of the parish officers is sufficient, unless you assume that the rest did not concur. Then it is said that it ought to appear that this, which purported to be the act only of the majority, was in fact the act of all, and that in the absence of any such evidence, it is to be presumed that such was not the case. But, I think, in cases of this kind the presumption is just the other way, and that it lies on the party who impeaches the notice to shew that it was improperly given. It seems to me, therefore, that this notice was perfectly good, and that if anything more were added, it would only be adding another irrelevant and impalpable fact to that which was already sufficiently clear to ordinary apprehensions.

on the 31st of January 1845, by Anne Openshaw, single woman, for an order upon William Porter Holt, as the putative father of a male bastard child, born of the body of the said Anne Openshaw, and to hear and determine such application at a petty sessions to be held for the said division, as by adjournment from the said petty sessions held on the 31st of January.

It appeared that the bastard was born on the 26th of March 1844; and that on the 24th of July 1844, the guardians of the poor for the Bury Union (the child being then chargeable to the parish of Elton, within the said union) gave notice to W. P. Holt of an intended application under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, for an order to reimburse the Union, for the maintenance and support of the child. The notice was to appear on the 9th of August 1844 (the day upon which the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101. received the royal assent), on which day W. P. Holt appeared at the petty sessions, and under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85. s. 3. declared his desire that the inquiry should be removed to the Quarter Sessions for the county of Lancaster, and entered into the recognizances required by that statute. At the next Quarter Sessions, the hearing was postponed, by consent, to the following sessions, when the Court heard the application, and refused to make any order.

On the 18th of January 1845, an application under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101. s. 2. was made by the mother of the child, and a summons obtained by her, and served upon W. P. Holt, requiring him to appear at a petty sessions, to be held at Bury, on the 31st of the same month, on which day he attended by his counsel, and contended that the refusal of the Quarter Sessions to make the order on the application of the guardians was final and conclusive; and that the Justices in petty sessions had no power to hear an application by the woman; and the Justices, being of that opinion, refused to hear the application.

Martin and Gray now shewed cause against the rule.—The question is, whether a second application was allowable in this case. Although an application to and refusal by Magistrates, in petty sessions, may not be conclusive, a decision of the Court of Quarter Sessions is conclusive against the mother—The King v. Tenant (1), The King v. Jenkin (2). Under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85. the application must have been by the guardians nominally; but they were, practically, agents of the mother, and the power given to the mother individually, by the new act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, is a mere substitution for the former power of the guardians. Therefore the mother was substantially a party to the former application, and is estopped by it.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—How a party? She could not help being a witness. Under the new act the money is to be paid to her; but she was not to receive anything personally under the old law, and that makes a great difference in the two cases.]

She was interested practically in the former case. By sect. 9. it is enacted that nothing in the act shall affect the validity of any orders for the maintenance of a bastard child, made by Justices in Quarter or petty sessions, before the passing of the act, and “that all proceedings actually pending before Justices in Quarter or petty sessions, at the time of the passing of this act, may be continued, and orders made therein, in the same manner as if this act had not been passed.” Here the proceedings were actually pending, when the act passed. Suppose the Quarter Sessions had granted this order as applied for, could it be said that the mother then would have had a right to make a second application herself?

[WIGHTMAN, J.—That is not the case here: this act gives a new right to a person who had no right before.]

The same facts are required to substantiate both applications; and the same purpose is answered in both cases. The intention of the new act was not to give a double remedy, which will be the result if this rule be granted.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—Supposing an order had been made in favour of the guardians, that would have been in force so long only as the child was chargeable: the condition of the order in favour of the mother is by sect. 5. that the child is not chargeable. A case may arise where the mother undertakes to keep the child, and relieve the guardians, and then finds herself unable to do so, may she not then apply under this act?]

(1) 2 Str. 716; s.c. 2 Lord Raym. 1423.

(2) Cas. Temp. Hardw. 301.

The old order would not cease to have effect; it would revive on the child becoming chargeable again. The very hardship alluded to does arise in case of children born more than six months before the passing of the act.

Archbold.—There is no adjudication of the Quarter Sessions which can be set up against this application. The mother was a total stranger to the former proceedings by the guardians.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It seems to me that, under the words of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, I am bound to make the rule absolute in this case. By the 2nd section, on the application of the mother of a bastard child, which has been born, as in this case, within twelve months before the application, it is compulsory on the Justice to issue a summons to the putative father to appear at a petty sessions, and the Justices at such petty sessions are obliged to hear the evidence in support of her case, and to come to some decision upon the facts. This they have refused to do in the present case, because a former unsuccessful application had been made by the guardians, under the power which they formerly had to reimburse themselves for the expense incurred by the parish. It is argued that some inconvenience may possibly arise under the provisions of sect. 9. which gives validity to former orders of bastardy; as if an order is made in favour of the guardians, and also one in favour of the woman, there may be two existing orders at the same time. But, in the present instance, no prior order has in fact been made, so that it is not necessary for me to decide that question. The rule, therefore, must be absolute for a mandamus.

May 15. } ANTS OF GREAT BOLTON.

Settlement—Examinations—Statement of Chargeability—Former Order, Conclusiveness of.

"I am now residing in and receiving relief from, and am actually chargeable to, the township of B."—Held, a sufficient statement of chargeability.

The signatures of the Justices were omitted in the copy of an order of removal, sent pursuant to 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 79. The Sessions, upon appeal, quashed the order upon this objection, subject to a case for the opinion of the Court. The respondents took no steps to bring up the case, but within six months, the pauper having become again chargeable, obtained a second order of removal to the appellant parish, upon the same settlement.

Held, first, that the quashing of the first order was not conclusive between the parties; and, secondly, that the respondents were not precluded from obtaining such fresh order by the fact that they had applied for and obtained liberty to state a case for the opinion of the Court, upon the decision of the Sessions as to the first order.

On appeal against an order of two Justices, for the removal of Ann Higginson from the township of Great Bolton to the township of Bradshaw, the Sessions for the borough of Great Bolton quashed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court on a case, the material parts of which were as follows:—

By an order of two Justices, dated the 17th of August 1843, it was ordered that the pauper, Ann Higginson, be removed from the township of Great Bolton to the township of Bradshaw. At the October Sessions 1843, the overseers of Bradshaw entered and respited an appeal against that order. At the trial of that appeal, in January 1844, the appellants relied upon an objection stated in their grounds of appeal, "that no copy or counterpart of the said order of removal had been sent to them by post or otherwise." It appeared that with the other documents required by the stat. 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 79, a paper purporting to be a copy of the said order had been sent to the appellants, but that in transcribing such copy the signatures of the two Justices making the order had been omitted; in all other respects the documents sent were complete copies. The Sessions held the objection valid, and quashed the order; but, on the application of the respondents; granted a case for the opinion of this Court. The respondents, however, took no steps towards stating such case, nor ever communicated with the appellants as to proceeding with or abandoning it, nor did they make any motion at the sessions relative thereto; but the pauper having since the quashing of that order become again chargeable to and relieved by Great Bolton, the respondents obtained another order of Justices, dated the 17th of February 1844, for her removal from Great Bolton to Bradshaw, which order was made upon fresh examinations, wherein the pauper stated—"I am unable to maintain myself, and am now residing in and receiving relief from, and am actually chargeable to, the said township of Great Bolton." The settlement stated therein was the same as that upon which the former order had been founded.

At the Bolton Quarter Sessions, April 1844, the appellants entered and respited an appeal against the last order, which appeal was tried at the following sessions, July 1844. The appellants relied upon various grounds of appeal, which stated in substance, first, that the quashing of the first order of removal was conclusive between the parties, no fresh act having been since that time done by the pauper to gain a settlement; secondly, that the order of the 17th of February 1844 was improperly obtained, inasmuch as the case which had been granted by the Sessions for the opinion of this Court, might before or after the 17th of February have been taken up by the respondents; and if the decision of the Sessions thereon should have been reversed, the original order of removal of the 17th of August 1843 would have been confirmed; thirdly, that the examination contained no sufficient evidence of chargeability. The Sessions decided in favour of the respondents on the last point, holding that the examination contained sufficient evidence of chargeability; but they were of opinion that the decision on the former order of removal was conclusive between the townships, and, upon that ground, as well as because the second order of removal was obtained before the period had elapsed when a writ of certiorari might have been obtained by the respondents, they thought the order of the 17th of February 1844 was invalid and improperly obtained. On these grounds the order of removal was quashed.

If this Court should be of opinion that the judgment of the Sessions, on the hearing of the appeal against the order of removal of the 17th of August 1843, was not conclusive between the townships, and that the order of removal of the 17th of February 1844 was also rightly obtained by the respondents, before the expiration of the time limited for the issuing of the certiorari to remove the former order of Sessions; and that the statement of the evidence of chargeability, contained in the examinations whereon such last order of removal was made, was sufficient to support such order, then the order of Sessions was to be quashed, and the order of removal of the 17th of February confirmed. If the Court should be of a contrary opinion on all or any of these points, the order of Sessions, quashing the order of removal, was to be confirmed.

The case was argued (April the 30th) by—

Pashley, in support of the order of Sessions.

The Court first called on—

Wortley, contra.—The objection on which the first order was quashed, was, that in the copy of the order of removal first sent to the appellants, the names of the Justices were omitted. The pauper, therefore, was not removable, the provisions of the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 79. not having been complied with. The decision of the Sessions upon that point was not a decision upon the settlement of the pauper, but merely that the appellants were not bound to receive the pauper. When the respondents subsequently obtained a fresh order, and served a proper copy of it, the pauper became removable. The King v. the Inhabitants of Osgathorpe (1), The King v. the Inhabitants of Wheelock (2), The King v. the Inhabitants of Wick St. Lawrence (3), shew that the first order was not conclusive. In The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Charlbury and Walcott (4), the Court refused to sanction a second order of removal, because the decision of the Sessions on the first order had been a decision on the merits. But The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Perranzabuloe (5) is exactly like the present. There the first order was quashed, because the examinations did not shew chargeability; and it was held that the respondents might remove again on new examinations shewing chargeability, and that the quashing of the first order was not conclusive. It is like the case of an action of which notice is required, and which has been commenced without giving notice. The action may be abandoned, fresh notice given, and a fresh action commenced. Secondly, the respondents might obtain a second order of removal, although the time for taking up the case granted by the Sessions upon the decision on the first order had not elapsed—The Queen v. the Inhabitants of St. Pancras (6).

The Court then called on—

Pashley.—Every order of removal must adjudicate the chargeability of the pauper to the removing parish, his inhabiting in the same parish, and his settlement in the appellant parish. The cases cited shew that when an order is quashed on appeal, such a decision is not necessarily conclusive upon the three points as to which the order adjudicates, but that it is open to the removing parish to shew hereafter that the decision did not touch the question of settlement. But here, though the first order was good in other respects, the removing parish had disqualified themselves from supporting it, because they had omitted to send a copy of it; and therefore the decision on appeal against the order was final—The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Outwell (7), Ex parte the Overseers of Ackworth (8), The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Brixham (9). It is like the case of a bad notice of appeal, on which the party had gone to trial; the judgment is conclusive, and he cannot lodge a second appeal—The King v. the Justices of the West Riding (10), The King v. the Justices of Middlesex (11). Secondly, pending the case granted on the decision of Sessions quashing the first order, no fresh order of removal could be properly obtained. The Queen v. the Inhabitants of St. Pancras is distinguishable. There the removing pariah abandoned their first order, before any appeal had been entered against it. Here there has been a hearing on the appeal, and if the case had been brought up, this Court might have sustained the decision of the Sessions, upon other and more substantial grounds than that upon which the Sessions decided—The King v. the Inhabitants of Skeffington (12), The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding (Longwood v. Halifax) (13). The appellants ought not to be subject to two processes against them at the same time, relating to the same matter—Knight's case (14). Therefore, no certiorari will issue while an appeal is pending—Case of the Borough of Warwick (15), The King v. Sparrow (16); nor will a mandamus lie to enter continuances and hear an appeal, when a case has been granted—The King v. the Justices of the West Riding (Warmworth v. Doncaster) (17), The King v. the Justices of Suffolk (18). The judgment of the Sessions, being a judgment of record, cannot, though conditional only, be avoided except by record of the same nature—Co. Litt. 131, a. Lastly, the statement of chargeability is insufficient. It should be stated who gave the relief and where—The Queen v. the Inhabitants of High Bickington (19).

Wortley and Pickering, contra.

[Per Curiam.—You need not trouble yourselves on the last point. The statement goes much farther than it did in High Bickington.]

It is no objection to an order of removal that a previous order is still pending, if new circumstances have in the interim arisen. In The King v. the Justices of the West Riding, the second appeal was against the same conviction; one judgment having been given on the record, the Sessions were functi officio, and could not entertain a second appeal. The cases cited only shew that there cannot be two remedies in respect of one and the same order; but here there has been a fresh order altogether. The King v. the Inhabitants of Barham (20), and The King v. the Inhabitants of Willoughby (21), are additional authorities to shew that the decision on the first order is not conclusive. How can the appellants be damnified by the respondents waiving the privilege of the case granted them? Even if the case had been brought up, and the first decision of the Sessions had been confirmed by this Court, the respondents would have been at liberty to obtain another order, as they have done: a fortiori may they do so now. The Queen v. the Inhabitants of St. Pancras is even a stronger case than the present; for there the first order was in force at the time the second order was obtained, whereas here the first order was at an end, having been quashed on appeal.

The judgment of the Court was delivered (May the 15th) by—

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—In this case it appeared that a pauper was duly removed by an order of two Justices, on the 17th of August 1843, from Great Bolton to Bradshaw. On appeal to the following Sessions the said order of removal was quashed, on the ground that the removing township had sent to Bradshaw with a notice of chargeability a copy of the order of removal, omitting the signatures of the two Justices. The Court of Quarter Sessions, however, granted a case for the opinion of this Court upon the validity of this objection. No steps were taken in consequence by the respondents, but on the 17th of February 1844, the pauper continuing to be chargeable, they procured a fresh order, upon fresh examinations, which stated the same settlement as that upon which the former order of August 1843 had been founded. At the Quarter Sessions for the borough of Bolton, on the 4th of July last, the last-mentioned order was quashed, subject to a case which raises three questions for our opinion:—First, whether the statement of the pauper being chargeable is sufficient; secondly, whether it was competent for the respondents to obtain a fresh order of removal, after having obtained the case from the Sessions, as above stated; and, thirdly, whether the order of removal quashed was conclusive, under the circumstances, against the respondent township, so as to prevent a fresh order being obtained. The last and most material question we shall consider first. The rule that an order of removal quashed is conclusive between the same parties, is always open to the exception of a fresh settlement having been gained. This exception is founded upon a very clear and intelligible principle. The doctrine, however, in many cases, has been carried farther. At the head of these cases stands The King v. Wick St. Lawrence, in which the second point decided was, that if the settlement be not in question and adjudicated upon, the first order is not conclusive, or, in other words, the second order may be made, though no subsequent settlement has intervened. The case of The King v. Wheelock, without mentioning any more, is a strong authority on the same point. In the present case, our opinion is formed on the particular facts of it. The first order was quashed on a matter as clearly a matter of form as can well be imagined. The omission (in the copy of the order) of the signatures of the two Justices was not calculated, by any possibility, to mislead or create the slightest doubt or uncertainty as to the case intended to be set up by the respondents. Whether the objection so taken ought or ought not to have prevailed, it is unnecessary to offer any opinion; but it is obvious, if the appellants had any merits, and were disposed to try them, it would not have been taken. We think, therefore, as other grounds have been deemed sufficient to justify a second order of removal after a former one has been quashed, without any new settlement accruing, it is hardly possible to conceive a stronger case than the present to warrant such a proceeding; and, resting on that ground, we are of opinion in this case the objection ought not to prevail.

On the second point, we think there was nothing final and conclusive in the respondents having applied for and obtained from the Court of Quarter Sessions liberty to state a case, so as to preclude them from having recourse to any other form of proceeding which might be open to them. It was a benefit which they might forego. No attempt has been made to pursue both remedies at once; on the contrary, it is stated that no steps had been taken to bring up the case to this Court; and the respondents must have been considered as having abandoned it altogether. The appellants, it must be observed, have been in no degree affected by the application to the Sessions, and their having granted a case.

Upon the last point, that of chargeability, the examination of the pauper is as follows:—"I am unable to maintain myself. I am now residing in and receiving relief from, and am actually chargeable to, the said township of Great Bolton." We think this statement goes further than a mere allegation that the pauper was actually chargeable to the parish, which has been held insufficient; but the fact of receiving relief, in whatever shape, would make the pauper so receiving it actually chargeable. The statement of chargeability is therefore sufficient (22), and we think that the order of Sessions must be quashed.

Examination—Evidence of Chargeability.

A statement that the pauper is residing in the workhouse in P, and is chargeable to the township of P, is sufficient evidence of chargeability.

On appeal against an order of Justices, for the removal of Anne Mollineux, from the township of Preston, in the borough of Preston, to the township of Manchester, the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to a case.

The only question raised was, as to the sufficiency of the statement of the charge-ability of the pauper, who, in her examination stated, "I have lived in the township of Preston for some time past, and am now residing in the workhouse in that town. I have been and am now chargeable to the said township of Preston." If the Court should be of opinion that the examination contained no legal evidence that the pauper was actually chargeable to the respondent township, the order of Sessions to be quashed, otherwise to be confirmed.

Cowling, in support of the order of Sessions.—Chargeability is sufficiently stated. The Queen v. the Inhabitants of High Bickington (1) may be cited, but there it was merely said, that the pauper was chargeable.

[WILLIAMS, J.—That was a conclusion, not a fact. Here the fact also is stated.]

Crompton, contra.—The statement of chargeability is insufficient.

[WILLIAMS, J.—How could she be in the workhouse without being chargeable? Here you have both a general and a particular statement of chargeability.]

It does not appear to be the workhouse of the township—she might be there as the matron or servant. The evidence of chargeability ought to appear on the face of the examination.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—So it does.

PATTERSON, J. and WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

COLERIDGE, J.—You are contending that there must be conclusive evidence of chargeability in the examination. That is not so. Here there is some evidence of it, which is sufficient.

On appeal against an order of two Justices, (dated the 28th of December 1840,) for the removal of Elizabeth Lague, widow, and her four children from the parish of St. Pancras, Middlesex, to the parish of St. Mary, Lambeth, Surrey, the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court on a case, of which the material facts were these:—

By an order of removal, dated the 5th of August 1840, the same paupers were ordered to be removed from St. Pancras to St. Mary's, Lambeth. A copy of the examination on which this order was made was duly sent to the parish officers of Lambeth, who appealed against it. On the 7th of September 1840, the order of removal of the 5th of August 1840 being then subsisting, another order of two Justices was made for the removal of the same paupers from St. Pancras to Lambeth. Against this order, also, an appeal was entered. The two last-mentioned appeals against the order of the 5th of August and 7th of September 1840, came on to be heard on the 16th of December 1840, when the appellants contended in both cases, that the examinations on which the orders are founded were insufficient, and the Sessions being of that opinion, ordered them severally to be quashed, "on the ground of the examination of the pauper Elizabeth Lague, disclosing no settlement on the face thereof." Both these orders, as well as that of the 28th of December 1840, relied on the same settlement of the paupers.

The appeal against the order of removal made the 28th of December 1840, came on the 21st of April 1841, when the appellants (relying on a ground of appeal which raised the objection,) contended that the respondents were precluded by the two former orders of Sessions, quashing the two former orders of removal, respectively from removing again to the appellant parish upon the same settlement. The Sessions disallowed the objection, and confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court. If the Court should be of opinion, that the respondents were so precluded by the orders of Sessions, made the 16th of December 1840, or either of them, from again removing the pauper to the appellant parish, under the order made the 28th of December 1840, then the order of Sessions made the 21st of April 1841, and the order of removal the 28th of December 1840, were to be respectively quashed, otherwise to stand confirmed.

Godson, Prendergast, and Howarth, in support of the order of Sessions.—The Sessions have, in effect, found that the two former orders were quashed not upon the merits; if they had been quashed upon the merits, no special entry of the grounds upon which they were quashed would have been made, nor would the Sessions have confirmed the 3rd order. This Court will not put a construction upon the orders of Sessions different from that which the Sessions have themselves put upon them—The Queen v. the Justices of Lancashire (1), The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Kingsclere (2). No abandonment of the first order was necessary before obtaining the second—The Queen v. the Inhabitants of St. Pancras (3).

Pashley, contra.—The former decisions were conclusive upon the point of settlement—Ex parte the Overseers of Ackworth (4). In The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Kingsclere, it did not appear upon what the decision of the Sessions upon the first order had turned. (He was then stopped.)

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We agree with you. Upon the facts submitted to us, we think that the former decision of the Sessions is conclusive upon the point of settlement, not upon the merits, but as between these parties.

The rest of the Court concurred.

THE QUEEN V. THE INHABITANTS OF ELLAL.

On appeal against an order of removal of a pauper from Layton-cum-Warbrech to Ellal, the Sessions for the county of Lancaster confirmed the order, subject to a case, which stated, that at the trial of the appeal it was proved that a former order for the removal of the same pauper had been quashed at a previous sessions, on appeal between the same parties, for "insufficiency of examination;" that the first order had been obtained upon

Order of Removal—Settlement—Parent and Child—Jurisdiction of Justices.

An order for the removal of a woman and her illegitimate child under seven years old, was grounded on a notice of the chargeability of the mother only:—Held, that as the child could not be separated from the mother, it was immaterial whether the child was mentioned in the order or not.

It must appear on the face of an order of removal that the complaint was made to the removing Justices within their jurisdiction, and this sufficiently appears if the order recite the complaint to have been made to "A. B. and C. D. Justices of the Peace in and for the county of —."

On appeal against an order of two Justices for the removal of Elizabeth Goldie and her illegitimate daughter Mary Ann, aged five months, from the parish of Sutton to the township of Stockton-upon-Tees, the Sessions for the borough of Kingston-upon-Hull confirmed the order so far as respected the mother, and quashed the same so far as respected the daughter, subject to the opinion of this Court upon the following

CASE.

At the time of making the order of removal appealed against, the daughter was of the age of five months, and was residing with her mother in the parish of Sutton. The notice of chargeability sent by the respondents to examinations disclosing substantially the same ground of settlement as in the present case, but stating the facts, and particularly the residence in Ellal, so imperfectly, that the order could not be supported; and that the order of Sessions setting aside the first order of removal had been obtained upon the motion of the respondents. The Sessions thought the former order was not conclusive, and confirmed the present order, subject to the opinion of the Court. If the former order was conclusive, the order of Sessions was to be quashed, otherwise confirmed.

Cowling, in support of the order of Sessions, contended, that as the former order had been quashed on a preliminary objection, and on the motion of the respondents, such quashing was not conclusive. But the COURT (without hearing the other side) intimated that the point must be considered as settled, by the decision in The Queen v. the Guardians of St. Mary, Lambeth. And, accordingly, the appellants, with a copy of the order of removal, was as follows:—

"In the matter of Elizabeth Goldie, a pauper.—To the overseers of the poor of the township of Stockton-upon-Tees, in the county of Durham. We, the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Sutton, in the borough of Kingston-upon-Hull, do hereby give you notice that the above-named pauper Elizabeth Goldie, together with —, now residing in the workhouse in the parish of Sutton, has become chargeable to our said parish of Sutton, and that an order of Justices has been duly obtained for her removal to your said township of Stockton-upon-Tees as —'s last place of legal settlement, a copy of which order, as also a copy of the examination on which the same was made, are herewith sent. And take notice, that unless you appeal against the said order, and within twenty-one days from the service hereof duly serve notice of such appeal, the said paupers will be removed to your township of Stockton-upon-Tees in pursuance of the said order."

Two objections were made by the appellants to this notice of chargeability at the trial of the appeal; first, that it made no mention of the daughter, and that, therefore, by virtue of the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 70. the order of removal as to the daughter must be quashed, and that an order of Sessions confirming the order of removal as to the mother, and quashing it as to the daughter, would be illegal, on the ground that its necessary effect would be to separate the mother and the child, and that therefore the order of removal ought to be quashed altogether. Secondly, that the said notice was bad in stating that the pauper Elizabeth Goldie "has become chargeable" to the parish of Sutton, without stating that the said Elizabeth Goldie was then chargeable.

The order of removal was in the following form:—"Upon the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Sutton, in the borough of Kingston-upon-Hull aforesaid, unto us George Cookman, Esq. and Thomas Firbank, Esq. whose names are hereunto set and seals affixed, being two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said borough of Kingston-upon-Hull and county of the same town," &c. The rest of the order was in the usual form, ordering the removal of both mother and daughter from the parish of Sutton to the township of Stockton.

At the trial of the appeal it was objected, thirdly, to this order, that it did not appear upon the face of it, that the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of Sutton was made to the Justices within their jurisdiction, but merely that it was to two Justices of the borough of Kingston-upon-Hull. The Sessions confirmed the order of removal as to the mother, and quashed it as to the child, subject to the above case.

If the Court should be of opinion that upon the preceding state of facts, the Sessions could not confirm the order of removal as to the mother, and quash it as to the child; or, if the Court should be of opinion that upon any of the before-mentioned objections to the order of removal and the notice of chargeability, the Sessions ought to have quashed the order of removal altogether, then the said order of Sessions and order of removal were to be quashed, otherwise the order of Sessions was to be confirmed.

Pashley, in support of the order of Sessions.—As to the first objection; if the effect of the order would be to separate the mother and child, no doubt the order would be bad. But the order has no such effect, for the child, being under seven years old, will follow its mother's settlement, though not named in the order.

[PATTESON, J.—The proper way is to adjudicate as to the mother's settlement only, and then order the removal of the mother and the infant child. Why did the Sessions quash the order as to the child?]

Because the notice of chargeability did not mention the child as it ought to have done; and notice of chargeability is a condition precedent to its removal. All parties removable under an order should be named in it: the child was not removable for the reason given, and therefore its name was properly omitted. He referred to The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Stogumber (1), The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Birmingham (2), Skeffreth v. Walford (3). Secondly, there is a sufficient averment of the chargeability of the mother at the time the order was made. Thirdly, admitting that it must appear that the complaint was made, and the evidence taken within the jurisdiction of the Justices, this is sufficiently shewn. The order is made "upon the complaint." The word "upon," as a word of time, is never applied to a longer period than a day.

[PATTESON, J.—It must be a very easy thing to get out of the borough of Kingston-upon-Hull in less than a day.]

It is not disputed that the order was properly made by the Justices within their jurisdiction, and it must be taken that the complaint upon which that order was made, was made at the same place.

Archbold, contrà.—By the statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 79, the removal of the child under the order would be illegal, there having been no notice of chargeability given. The Sessions therefore were bound to quash the order as regards the child. But if confirmed as to the mother, and quashed as to the child, the overseers would have authority to separate the mother from the child, which would be clearly illegal.—The King v. Cuckfield (4).

[COLERIDGE, J.—Why may not the child be removed, though not removed under the order? If the child's name is not in the order, they are still bound to remove it with the mother. Can the fact that the name is not in the order make any difference?]

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The law attaches to the removal of the mother the necessity of the removal of the child also; and whether named in an order or not, parties would subject themselves to very serious consequences who removed the one without the other.]

Secondly, the statement that the pauper has become chargeable, does not imply that she was so at the time the order was made. Lastly, "the Court must see beyond dispute that the Magistrates have jurisdiction: they must not give it to themselves by doubtful words;" per Coleridge, J. in The Queen v. Toke (5), The Queen v. Spackman (6). Here the Justices are not stated to be Justices in and for the borough. There is no statement when and where the complaint was made. The word "upon" has no such signification as contended for. It means only "after."

[LORD DENMAN, C.J. referred to The King v. the Inhabitants of St. Mary, Leicester (7).]

As there is generally no date of place given in these orders, unless the word "in" imports that the Justices are acting in their jurisdiction, there would be nothing to shew it.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I think it is only reasonable to require that it should appear on the face of the order that the complaint was made to the Justices within their jurisdiction; and as these orders are not generally dated, the place where the complaint is made does not appear, unless it can be imported from the use of the word "in." In all the precedents the words "in the county" are used; otherwise no jurisdiction of the Justices is apparent. In the present complaint the word "in" is omitted. I cannot see why we should encourage parties to depart from the ordinary forms which we find in all the precedents, and introduce novelties which are uncalled for. It is but reasonable to suppose that the practice of using the words in question has been introduced into the forms for the purpose of shewing that the Justices are acting within their jurisdiction.

PATTESON, J.—The objection is, that it does not appear that the complaint was made to the Justices within their jurisdiction, and that there are no words used from which we can infer the fact. If the word "in" had been used, the question would have been whether that would have been sufficient; and it seems to me that the word "in" would imply not only that the Justices had jurisdiction, but that they had also exercised it in the county. In the forms given in Burn's Justice the words "in and for the county" are invariably used, and there is nothing else to shew that the complaint is made within the jurisdiction. The word "in" then being omitted in the present case, the order is insufficient, unless there be something else on the face of it to supply the deficiency. I confess I can see nothing to raise the inference that this complaint was made within the jurisdiction of the Justices. There is nothing inconsistent with the supposition that the complaint was made out of their jurisdiction, that all the evidence was heard by them out of their jurisdiction, and then they may have gone within their jurisdiction and made the order.

WILLIAMS, J.—I think the construction put by my Lord and my Brother Patteson upon the word "in" in these orders is the correct one, because the word "for," which is in connexion with it, is descriptive of the authority of the person. Thus "Justice of the Peace for Cumberland" would shew that he has authority to act as a Justice for that county. If that be so, then the word "in" must be read as mere surplusage, unless it be understood as descriptive of locality; that is, as implying that the Justice is in the district for which he has authority to act at the time the complaint is made to him. It is conceded, that in orders the jurisdiction of the parties to make them must appear on the face of them. This, then, being a material omission in the order, an omission of an allegation which it has been the constant practice to insert ever since Dr. Burn wrote his valuable work, it seems to me that the order of Sessions and the order of removal must be quashed.

COLERIDGE, J.—It is properly conceded by Mr. Pashley that the jurisdiction of the Justices must appear upon the order; and he has attempted to argue that this principle has been satisfied by the words "upon the complaint," which, he contends, shews that the complaint was made upon the same day and at the same place at which the order was made: but there is no foundation for this argument. The word "upon" does not necessarily refer to time at all; and when it does, it implies merely a sequence of events. But the meaning of these words, "upon the complaint," is shewn by referring to the stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12, where they are used clearly without reference either to time or place, and simply as stating the foundation of the authority of Justices to make an order of removal.

1845. { THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS OF ST. MARGARET'S,
May 31. { WESTMINSTER.

Examination—Settlement, Derivative—Ex parte Maternâ.

Examinations on which an order of removal was founded shewed the maiden settlement of the pauper's mother to be in the appellant parish. They also shewed that her husband (the pauper's father) had acquired a settlement by renting a tenement; but in what parish was not stated:—Held, that the examinations were insufficient, as they shewed that the derivative settlement ex parte maternâ was extinguished by the father's settlement, which did not appear to be in the appellant parish, and that the Sessions did right to quash the order of removal.

On appeal against an order of two Justices, for the removal of Richard Mathews from the parish of St. Margaret, Westminster, to the parish of St. James, Bath, the Sessions for the city of Westminster quashed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court, upon a CASE, the material parts of which were as follows:—

The examinations shewed that the pauper had never gained a settlement in his own right, and that he was the lawful son of Joseph and Henrietta Matthews, who were married January 2, 1815, and were both dead at the date of the examinations. The examinations further stated that Henrietta Matthews was the lawful child of Peter Ferbrache and Martha his wife (both deceased), and that from about the year 1804 down to and including the year 1809, the said Peter Ferbrache was legally settled on, and rented, occupied and resided in a tenement and dwelling-house situate and being No. 3, Hot Bath-street, in the parish of St. James, in the said city of Bath, of the yearly value of 10*l.* and upwards; and that during the time the said Peter Ferbrache was so settled and resided in the said tenement and dwelling-house as aforesaid, his daughter, the said Henrietta Matthews, resided at home with him there, as part of his family, a single woman and unemancipated. The examinant then proceeded to state, that Joseph Matthews, the father of the pauper, in March 1819, "took a tenement, being No. 8, Hot Bath-street aforesaid, and that he was legally settled upon, and occupied and resided in the said tenement, from the month of March 1819, for one year and a half; that the said tenement, No. 8, Hot Bath-street, was of the yearly value of 10*l.* and upwards, during the time Joseph Matthews was so settled upon, and resided in and occupied the same." Among other grounds of appeal were the following:—That it is not shewn by the examinations that Joseph Matthews ever gained a settlement in the appellant parish; and that the examinations are bad in resorting to the settlement of the pauper's mother in the appellant parish, a good settlement of the father being shewn elsewhere, although it is not stated in what parish he gained it. At the hearing of the appeal it was objected, that no sufficient evidence appeared in the examinations to shew, that at the time of making the order the pauper's father was settled in the appellant parish (although it distinctly appeared that he had gained a settlement in some parish), inasmuch as there was no averment that No. 8, Hot Bath-street was in the parish of St. James, and it did not follow that No. 8, Hot Bath-street was in the same parish as No. 3, Hot Bath-street; and further, that the respondents could not rely on the derivative settlement from the mother, when it was shewn upon the examinations that the father had gained a settlement in his own right. The Sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court, whether they had come to a right conclusion with respect to the want of an averment in the examinations that No. 8, Hot Bath-street was in the same parish as No. 3, Hot Bath-street; and, if they had drawn the right conclusion in that respect, whether they were right in their judgment that the respondents could not rely upon the settlement of the pauper's mother, when a clear settlement of the father was shewn by the respondents in the examinations. If the Sessions were wrong on either of these points, the order of Sessions was to be quashed; if they were right on both, the order was to be confirmed.

Phinn, in support of the order of Sessions, relied on the argument as above stated, and cited The King v. Harberton (1),

(1) 13 East, 311.

The King v. St. Mary Beverley (2), The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Yelvertoft (3).

Bodkin, contrà.—The examinations either shew a settlement of the father in the appellant parish, or they do not. If they do, and the word "aforesaid" be taken to imply that No. 8, Hot Bath-street was in the parish of St. James, then the order of removal is good, as founded upon proof of settlement in the appellant parish ex parte paternâ. If, on the other hand, the word "aforesaid" do not imply "within the parish of St. James," then no settlement of the father appears. How can it be said that a settlement of the father is shewn unless it appears in what parish it was? No. 8, Hot Bath-street, may be extra-parochial. Then, if no settlement of the father appears, the settlement of the mother may be resorted to, and that was clearly within the appellant parish. This is an objection,—not to the evidence, as was the case in The King v. St. Mary, Beverley, but—to the examination. If the examinations shew two grounds of settlement, the respondents may rely on either—The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Latchford (4).

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It appears to me that the Sessions were right in this case. If, on the trial of the appeal, the respondents had proved the settlement of the pauper's mother to be in the appellant parish, they might have rested there. If, however, they had gone on and proved a settlement of the father, but had not proved in what particular parish it was, the Sessions would have properly said, you have not proved where the last legal settlement of the pauper is, so as to give us jurisdiction to adjudicate upon it. And it is just the same thing when the objection is made, not to the evidence on the trial of the appeal, but to the sufficiency of the examination. The examination shews a settlement of the pauper derived from the mother, gained in the appellant parish. But the examination shews another settlement gained by the pauper's father, in the same street, but in what parish is not stated. I think the Sessions were quite right in presuming that No. 8, Hot Bath-street, was in some parish.

(2) 1 B. & Ad. 201; s.c. 9 Law J. Rep. M.C. 17.

(3) Ante, p. 78.

(4) Ibid. 20.

All England is divided into parishes, excepting some very small districts, and there is no reason for presuming that this place is extra-parochial.

PATTESON, J.—This order removes the pauper to St. James's, Bath, either upon his father's settlement or his mother's settlement. If on the father's, it cannot be supported, because it does not appear from the examination in what parish the father was settled: if on the mother's, it cannot be supported either, because it appears in the examination that the father had a settlement, though where is not shewn.

WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

COLERIDGE, J.—I entirely agree. The case of The Queen v. Latchford has nothing to do with the present. There the objection taken was as to the course of proceeding at the Sessions, where the order of removal was perfectly good on the face of it, the examinations shewing a birth settlement in the appellant parish, and also facts which might constitute a settlement by apprenticeship. The respondents there, at the trial of the appeal, rested on the birth-settlement in the appellant parish, and then it was objected that they were bound by the other facts set out in the examination. The Sessions there properly thought the respondents were not bound to prove anything more than the birth-settlement, and that if that birth-settlement had been extinguished or destroyed, the proof of it came properly from the other side. Now, here, the objection is to the order of removal, that it is founded on examinations which shew only a settlement in the appellant parish ex parte maternâ. A settlement ex parte maternâ has this vice, that it can only be resorted to where no paternal settlement appears. But here the examinations do shew a settlement ex parte paternâ, although the respondents have omitted to shew in what parish the father was settled,—a fact which, with the least possible investigation, might have been made clear. I agree that it must be presumed that the place was parochial, unless there be evidence that it was extra-parochial, and there was no such evidence here.

On appeal against an order of two Justices for the removal of Jane Leary and Margaret Leary, from the parish of Lambeth, in the county of Surrey, to the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the city of Westminster, in the county of Middlesex, the Sessions quashed the order subject to the opinion of this Court on a case, the material parts of which were as follows:—

The parish of Lambeth was constituted an union of itself by virtue of the statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 39, under an order of the Poor Law Commissioners, bearing date the 19th November 1835. The notice of chargeability was signed by three persons, "guardians of the poor of the said parish of Lambeth." At the hearing of the appeal, it was objected, by the appellants, that the notice of chargeability was bad and insufficient, inasmuch as it was not signed by overseers of the poor of the said parish of Lambeth, and upon this objection the Sessions quashed the order.

The question for the opinion of this Court was, whether the notice of chargeability ought to have been signed by the guardians of the poor or by the overseers. If the signature by the former was sufficient, the order of Sessions was to be quashed, and the order of removal confirmed. If the Court should think the notice ought to have been signed by the overseers, the order of Sessions was to stand, and the order of removal to be quashed.

Charnock, in support of the order of Sessions.—The notice of chargeability was insufficient. The question depends upon the construction to be put upon the statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 79, which provides that no poor person shall be removed, &c. until twenty-one days after a notice in writing of his being chargeable, &c., accompanied by a copy of the order of removal, &c., shall have been sent by the overseers or guardians of the parish obtaining such order, or any three or more of such guardians, &c. The "guardians of the parish," mentioned in this section, must be understood to mean guardians appointed under Gilbert's Act, 22 Geo. 3. c. 83; who, by section 7, are overseers of the parish for which they are appointed, to all intents and purposes, except with regard to the making and collecting of rates. But the guardians of an union, whether that union consist of many parishes incorporated by sections 26. & 38. of the stat. 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76, or of a single parish like Lambeth, constituted an union of itself, under section 39, are not overseers of the parish. Section 81. provides, that the notice of appeal must be signed by "the overseers or guardians of the parish appealing," using the same words as the 79th section; and it has been held, that the notice must be signed by the majority of the parish officers—The King v. the Justices of Warwickshire (1); it is not sufficient that it be signed by a guardian of the union in which the parish is incorporated—The Queen v. the Justices of Surrey (2).

[WILLIAMS, J.—The Judges there were speaking of several parishes formed into an union.]

The principle applies equally where guardians are elected for a single parish. The duties of guardians refer only to the relief of the poor—they are called guardians of the poor, not of the parish; and the powers of guardians elected under section 39. for a single parish are precisely the same as those of guardians for united parishes. In the 72nd section, the words "guardians of an union" and "guardians of a parish" are used in contradistinction. So in 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57. s. 6. the provisions of which would be unnecessary, if guardians of an union had already all the powers of overseers. To hold that either overseers or guardians may give notice of appeal or sign notice of chargeability, would give rise to the inconvenience that there may be two separate conflicting authorities for the same purpose in the same district. But this inconvenience will be avoided, and the words of the section satisfied, by holding the word "guardians" in the 79th section, to refer to guardians appointed under Gilbert's Act. It may be said, that the section does not require the notice of chargeability to be signed at all. But it requires that it shall be sent, and it must be taken that those who signed it sent it.

Bovill, contra.—The Queen v. the Justices of Surrey is in favour of the sufficiency of this notice. The fallacy lies in speaking of a single parish as an union. That is not so. Section 39. only provides that persons shall be elected guardians of a single parish in the same way as for an union. Guardians of the poor and guardians of the parish are throughout Gilbert's Act, 22 Geo. 3. c. 83, treated as synonymous, and this notice is signed by the guardians of the parish. [Sections 41. & 109. of 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. were also referred to.] No signature at all was necessary—The King v. the Inhabitants of Westbury (3).

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We will hear the next case before giving judgment.

THE QUEEN v. THE CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF ST. MARY'S, SOUTHAMPTON.

On appeal against an order of two Justices for the removal of Ann Whitlock and her two children from the parish of St. Mary, in the town and county of Southampton, to the parish of Botley, in the county of Southampton, the Sessions quashed the order, on the ground that the notice of chargeability was not signed and sent by persons proper and competent in law to sign and send the same, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a case.

(3) New Sess. Cas. p. 33.

The order of removal was made upon the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of St. Mary's, Southampton. The notice of chargeability, which stated that the paupers had become chargeable to the parish of St. Mary, was signed by three persons "guardians of the poor of the united parishes of Southampton." The parishes of the town and county of the town of Southampton, including the parish of St. Mary, are by statute 13 Geo. 3. c. 1. (public local act) which formed part of the case, united into one district for the purpose of maintaining, relieving and employing the poor of the said several parishes from one common fund, and there is within the said district, by virtue of the said act, a corporation of guardians incorporated by the name of "the guardians of the poor within the town and county of the town of Southampton," having perpetual succession and a common seal, to whom the care and management of the poor of the said several parishes is, by virtue of, and according and subject to the provisions of the said act, committed, and conducted at a house fitted up for the reception of the poor in the said town and county of the town of Southampton. There are two churchwardens and two overseers of the poor of the said parish of St. Mary. The parties by whom the notice of chargeability was sent and signed were not churchwardens or overseers of the parish of St. Mary, but were members of the corporation of guardians elected in pursuance of the provisions, and for the purposes mentioned in the act; one only of the three who signed the notice was a guardian for the parish of St. Mary. If the Court should be of opinion that the notice of chargeability was signed and sent by the proper parties, the order of Sessions was to be quashed; if otherwise, to be confirmed.

Saunders and Pashley, in support of the order of Sessions.—The notice of chargeability was insufficient. This case is distinguishable from that just argued. The guardians appointed for a single parish may properly sign such a notice, but they cannot do so where they are guardians of an union only, as in the present case—The Queen v. the Justices of Surrey. The local act here provides, section 145, that "no appeal shall be made, &c. by any of the churchwardens or overseers of the said several parishes, touching the settlement of any poor person, without an order of the said guardians at one of their courts for that special purpose to be made," not repealing the powers of overseers as to appeal, but only imposing a condition precedent to its exercise. And here the order properly purports to be made on the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of the particular parish, while the notice of chargeability is improperly signed by the guardians of the united parishes, who had no authority to act except as a board—stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101. s. 64.

Watson and Archbold, contra.—The notice of chargeability was signed by the proper parties. This is not an union under the statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76, but under the special provisions of a local act. For every purpose, except for the purpose of settlement as against third parishes out of the district, the town of Southampton is united into one body, with one common rate.

[COLERIDGE, J.—Would an order of removal be good founded upon a complaint made by the guardians?]

It would. The application should properly be made by those who represent the district, and who are aggrieved by the chargeability of the pauper, viz. the united parishes. The guardians have no power to compel the overseers of the particular parish to apply to the Justices for an order of removal. The particular parish is no more aggrieved than the others with which it is united; and it could not truly be said, that the pauper was chargeable to it. The 64th section of the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, enacting that guardians shall act only at a board, and not individually, has no reference to parishes incorporated under local acts.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—In the former case, I think, the Sessions have done wrong. The guardians of the poor in Lambeth are guardians of the parish of Lambeth, and therefore the proper persons to sign and send the notice of chargeability according to the terms of the 79th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act. In the second case, I think the Sessions have done right, because the guardians of the poor of the united parishes of Southampton are not guardians of the parish of St. Mary, Southampton, and therefore not the proper persons to sign and send the notice of chargeability.

PATTESON, J.—I have no doubt at all about these two cases. The 79th section says, the guardians of the parish shall send the notice of chargeability. In the Lambeth case the guardians of the parish have sent it. In the Southampton case, the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of St. Mary go and make the complaint that the paupers are chargeable to them, and get the order of removal made. Are we to assume that that was all fiction? Because, if not, the notice ought to be signed by the overseers or guardians of the parish, and it is not signed by any one holding that office, or purporting to hold it.

Copy of Examination—Documentary Evidence—4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 79.

Documents produced in evidence before Justices making an order of removal, form part of the examination, a copy of which, by statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 79, must be sent by the removing parish, with a copy of the order of removal. Therefore a copy of such documents must be sent, or a sufficient reason given for the omission to send them.

On appeal against an order of two Justices for the removal of Elizabeth Spence and her five children from the parish of Gateshead to the township of East Rainton, the Court of Quarter Sessions, for the county of Durham, confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a case, of which the following is the substance:—

The respondents relied upon a hiring and service of the pauper's husband in East Rainton. The examinations relating to that hiring and service were as follows:— "John Robson says, I am colliery viewer for the Marquis of Londonderry at Rainton. I produce the pit bond by which the Marquis of Londonderry hired his pitmen for Rainton Colliery, for the year commencing the 5th of April 1829. It is dated the 21st of March 1829, and is made between the said Marquis of the one part, and the several persons, who were hired, on the other part. The several persons who were hired are thereby hired to the said Marquis for one year, from the 5th day of April 1829. Robert Spence, the late husband of Elizabeth Spence, was thereby hired to the said Marquis for one year. I have brought the said bond from Rainton Colliery office, where it is kept with other documents relating to the colliery."

The appellants, in their grounds of appeal, objected (inter alia) that the examinations were imperfect, in not setting out a copy of the pit bond, and that no copy of the pit bond had been sent to them with the examinations.

At the trial of the appeal, the respondents gave in evidence a pit bond, made the 21st of March 1829, between the Marquis of Londonderry and several other persons, among others Robert Spence. The case stated at length the contents of the bond so produced at the trial of the appeal, which contained a great number of special conditions. After the service of the grounds of appeal, but previous to the trial of the appeal, a copy of the bond was sent by the respondents to the overseers of the appellant township.

If the Court should be of opinion in favour of the appellants on any one of the points raised by the grounds of appeal, the order of Sessions was to be quashed.

Order, in support of the order of Sessions. —First, it has never yet been decided that it is necessary that a copy of all documents produced before the Justices, who make the order of removal, should be sent with a copy of the order. In The Queen v. Inhabitants of Outwell (1), Coleridge, J. seemed to intimate that the entire body of evidence must be sent, but the words, "copy of the examination," in the statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 79, may be interpreted to mean only the oral testimony given. If, however, the word "examination" does include documentary evidence, it must at least be restricted to documents over which the respondents have power. It may be impossible in many cases to send documents produced before the Justices. Suppose a pauper removed upon proof of a settlement by estate. He may have sold the property thirty years before. The purchaser, who would have the title deeds, may be summoned to produce them before the Magistrates, but there is no power to compel him to give a copy of these deeds.

[WILLIAMS, J.—There is nothing here to shew that there was any difficulty about procuring and sending a copy. On the contrary, the respondents did send a copy afterwards, though not at the proper time.]

Secondly, the Sessions have decided as a question of fact, that a copy was sent, and the respondents were at liberty to aid their originally informal copy, by sending a correct copy afterwards.

[PATTESON, J.—This is a special demurrer to your examination, and you say, you have amended.]

The evidence of the witness John Robson contains, in effect, a copy of the bond. There is no evidence to contradict that fact, which the Sessions have decided.

Grainger, contra, was not heard.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This case is free from all doubt.

PATTESON, J. and WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

COLERIDGE, J.—The case shews no excuse for not sending a copy of the pit bond with the rest of the examination. I do not think the Court intends at present to go farther than to say, that if a copy of the document is not sent, a good excuse must be offered for it.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABIT-
May 28. } ANTS OF BRIGHTHELMSTONE.

Settlement, Derivative—Emancipation.

Examinations contained a statement that the pauper's father had gained a settlement in the appellant parish in 1790, and had in 1838 been removed to the appellant parish, by an order unappealed against; that the pauper was emancipated in 1823, and that neither the pauper nor his father had gained any other settlement in their own right:—Held, that this was evidence of the pauper's derivative settlement in the appellant parish, on which the Sessions were bound to act.

On appeal against an order of two Justices for the removal of John Grill, his wife and six children, from the parish of Bright-helmstone to the parish of Little Hampton, the Court of Quarter Sessions for the county of Sussex quashed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court on a case, the material parts of which were as follows:—

The pauper, John Grill, was born on the 19th of April 1804, and became emancipated by marriage on the 28th of November 1823. He had gained no settlement in his own right, and was the legitimate son of Thomas Grill. The examination of Thomas Grill stated, "The pauper, John Grill, is my son: I believe he has never done any act whereby to gain any legal settlement in his own right. I was legally removed from the parish of New Shoreham, five years ago on the 26th of December last, by Mr. Hillwood, one of the parish officers of New Shoreham, to the parish of Little Hampton, by an order of two of her Majesty's then Justices in and for the county of Sussex, and I was duly delivered, with the said order, to the overseers of the said parish of Little Hampton, and the said order has not been appealed against." (The examination then shewed relief subsequently given to the witness by the parish of Little Hampton, while he was residing out of the parish.) "I gained my legal settlement in the said parish of Little Hampton, by apprenticeship to Jeremiah Scarrell, when I was about eighteen years of age, and I am now seventy-four years of age. I have never gained any subsequent settlement to my said apprenticeship." The several facts deposed to by Thomas Grill were, for the purposes of the case, admitted by the appellants. The grounds of appeal stated that there was no legal or sufficient evidence shewing that Thomas Grill was settled in Little Hampton at the time of the emancipation of his son, the pauper, John Grill, in November 1823; and further, that there was no legal or sufficient evidence of any settlement of Thomas Grill in Little Hampton by apprenticeship or otherwise.

The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether sufficient appeared on the face of the examination (the facts therein being admitted) to entitle John Grill to a derivative settlement in Little Hampton. If so, the order of Sessions was to be quashed, and the order of removal confirmed; otherwise the order of Sessions was to be confirmed.

Creasy, in support of the order of Sessions.—The order of removal of the pauper's father to the appellant parish was made in 1838. But the pauper was emancipated in 1823. It does not appear that the order of removal in 1838 was grounded upon the settlement said to have been gained by the father by apprenticeship, before the birth of the pauper, and the examinations therefore do not shew sufficiently that in 1823 the pauper's father was settled in the appellant parish. The King v. the Township of Caterall (1), The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Yeovely (2), and The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Lilleshall (3), were cited. The sufficiency of the evidence contained in the examinations is a question for the Sessions, and the Court will not interfere with that decision unless they were clearly wrong.

Pashley and J. J. Johnson, contra, were not heard.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I think there can be no doubt in this case. The order of removal of the father, unappealed against, was clearly prima facie evidence of his settlement in the appellant parish, upon which the Sessions were bound to act, unless there was some evidence of the son's settlement elsewhere.

PATTESON, J. and WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

COLERIDGE, J.—The case says that the facts, stated in the examination are to be taken for granted. One of the facts stated is, that the father never gained any settlement subsequent to his apprenticeship. Then if that be so, the order of removal was evidence that he was settled in the appellant parish from the time of his apprenticeship up to the date of the order. He was settled there, therefore, previous to and at the time of the emancipation of the son, and as the son never gained any settlement in his own right, I do not see how we can resist the inference, that the son had a derivative settlement from his father in the appellant parish.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS OF TOTLEY.
June 4. }

Settlement—Examination—Legitimacy, Presumption of.

A statement that A. is the child of B. is a sufficient allegation that he is his legitimate child.

On appeal against an order of Justices for the removal of John, Sarah, Anne, James and George Booker, children of George Booker, deceased, from Totley to Unston, the Court of Quarter Sessions for the county of Derby quashed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a case, the material parts of which were as follows:—

The order of removal was founded on the examination of William Booker, of, &c., taken on oath, &c., touching the place of the last legal settlement of John Booker, aged about seventeen years, Sarah Booker, aged about thirteen years, Ann Booker, aged about eleven years, James Booker, aged about nine years, and George Booker, aged about seven years, children of the late George Booker, of Totley, deceased. This examinant saith—"The said George Booker, deceased, was my brother, and died on the 1st day of May 1843, at Totley aforesaid, leaving eight children, viz., Mary, John, Elizabeth, Sarah, Ann, James, George and William. The said George Booker's wife died the day before. The said children were all residing with their said parents, George Booker and his said wife, until their deaths as aforesaid, and none of the said children has since done any act to acquire a settlement in his or her own right." The examination then shewed a settlement of George Booker in Unston, and proceeded thus:—"The above-named children are now receiving relief from and are actually chargeable to the said township of Totley, and are severally inhabiting in that township of Totley."

The second ground of appeal was, that the examination of William Booker was not sufficient to warrant the order of removal, as it did not shew that the paupers named in the order were the legitimate children of the said George Booker, deceased, or that the said George Booker was ever married to the mother of the said children, or that he was ever married to her before the birth of the said children.

The fourth ground of appeal was, that the examination contained no sufficient statement of the chargeability of the paupers.

The Court of Quarter Sessions, after argument, decided in favour of the appellants on the second ground, but expressed no opinion on the fourth ground, and quashed the order upon the objection to the examination, subject to the opinion of the Court. If the Court should think the objection decided on by the Sessions fatal to the order of removal, or that the objection upon which the Sessions expressed no opinion was available and fatal to the order of removal, the order of Sessions was to be affirmed, otherwise to be quashed, and the order of removal affirmed.

Clarke, Serj. and Denison, in support of the order of Sessions.—It is consistent with these examinations that these children were born before the marriage of their parents.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—Are we to presume bastardy?]

Not where the presumption of bastardy would affect the interest of the party; but here it is indifferent in what parish the children are settled. If perjury were assigned upon this examination, the examinant might urge that he had used the word children in its popular sense, as including bastard children. There is no statement of the fact of marriage.

[PATTESON, J.—Is it necessary except in cases of crim. con. and bigamy that the fact of marriage should be proved? For the purpose of this inquiry, would it not be quite sufficient to prove the marriage by general report or by cohabitation?]

The examination is insufficient, as giving no information to the appellants which might enable them to ascertain whether the parties were married. For this purpose it should have stated when and where the marriage took place. The Sessions must be taken to have decided that in this respect the examinations were deficient in particularity, and the Court will not overrule their decision upon a point of fact. The statement of chargeability is insufficient.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We have held that the receipt of relief cures that objection.]

Wildman and Wilmore, contra, were stopped.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The argument which has just been addressed to us would raise a different question from that which has been submitted to us by the Sessions. The question put to us is not, whether sufficient information has been given to the opposing party; of that the Sessions are the only judges, it being a question of fact rather than of law. But when the Sessions quash an order subject to a case, and ask our opinion, as they have done here, whether the objection was a fatal one, we must see whether the Sessions have done wrong, and decide it as a question of law. Now, no one at all accustomed to legal language can doubt that this examination contains a sufficient statement that the paupers were the legitimate children of George Booker. The law does not contemplate the relation of illegitimacy at all. A statement that a person is the child of another is a sufficient averment that he is his legitimate child. The examination, therefore, was quite sufficient in this respect. If the Sessions had decided as a matter of fact that it was insufficient, as not enabling the appellants to ascertain whether the parties were ever married, we might have considered ourselves bound by their decision; but that was not the objection raised and decided on by the Sessions, nor is it submitted to us.

PATTERSON, J.—I cannot in the least doubt that it sufficiently appears on this examination that the relation of husband and wife subsisted between these parties, and that these children were their legitimate children.

There is no statement, in so many words, that there was an actual marriage; and whether there was an actual marriage was not what the Sessions had to determine upon the objection taken. If there was sufficient to satisfy the mind of the removing Justices, the Sessions could not say there was no evidence of it.

WILLIAMS, J.—The ground of appeal does not point to the objection now made. The appellants do not say that the examination does not give sufficient information to enable them to ascertain whether these persons were married or not, but they say that the removing Justices, upon the facts contained in the examination, had no evidence before them of the marriage. I think, however, the examination as it stands does fairly lead to the conclusion that the parties were married; and how it can be said there was not at the least presumptive evidence for the removing Justices that the paupers were the legitimate children of George Booker, I am, I confess, at a loss to understand.

OF MIDDLESEX.

Appeal—Notice—Time.

By a local act, an appeal was given to the Quarter Sessions, on the appellant giving seven days' notice, at least, of his intention to bring such appeal. Notice of appeal was served on the respondents, at half-past nine o'clock, A.M., on the 31st of December. The Sessions commenced at ten o'clock A.M., on the 7th of January, at which time the appeal was entered, but by the practice of the Sessions the hearing of the appeals was adjourned until the 30th of January:—Held, that the notice of appeal was given one day too late, as the words "at least" exclude both the day of giving the notice and the first day of the Sessions.

Held, also, that the fraction of a day could not be considered, so as to render the service of the notice good.

Held, also, that the time within which notice of appeal was to be given ought to be computed up to the day on which the appeal

By the 121st sect. of 53 Geo. 3. c. cxii. (local and personal, public), intituled, 'An Act for the better relief and employment of the poor, and for the enlargement of the burial ground in the parish of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, in the county of Middlesex, and for other purposes relating to the said parish' (1), an appeal from the determination of the trustees is given to the party aggrieved to a General or Quarter Sessions for the county of Middlesex, holden within three months next after such determination of the trustees, the appellant giving seven days' notice, at least, in writing, of his intention to bring an appeal. Henry Thomas, being rated under the above act, applied to the trustees for relief, who, on the 26th of September, came to a determination, which was confirmed, in pursuance of the act, on the 16th of October. On the 31st of December following, at half-past nine A.M., the appellant served the clerk of the trustees with a notice of appeal, in writing, against this determination of the trustees. The ensuing sessions commenced at ten P.M., on the 7th of January, when, according to the practice of the Sessions, all appeals intended to be tried were obliged to be entered; but the hearing of appeals was adjourned to the 30th of January. Upon that day, the appeal being called on, the respondents applied to have it adjourned for the convenience of counsel, and it was accordingly adjourned at their instance to the April sessions, when it came on for hearing. The respondents then called upon the appellant to prove his notice of appeal, and a witness was called for that purpose, when the respondents objected that it was insufficient, as seven clear days had not elapsed between the day of giving notice and the first day of the sessions. The affidavits stated that no waiver of the proof of notice by the respondents was urged or intimated by the appellant, and the Sessions, being of opinion that a sufficient notice had not been proved, dismissed the appeal.

Pashley had obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus to the Justices of the Peace for the county of Middlesex, commanding them to enter continuances and hear the appeal, on the grounds that the day upon which the notice was given ought to be included in the computation of the time, or, if the fraction of a day was considered, there would be seven whole days intervening; and also that the respondents, by applying to have the appeal adjourned, had waived the objection to the notice.

Prendergast and Hodges shewed cause against the rule.—If the meaning of the act is that there are to be seven whole days intermediate to the time of giving notice to the Sessions, then undoubtedly the notice is out of time; and it is contended that such is the true interpretation. This construction has been put upon the words "fourteen days at least before the first day of the sessions," in the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 81, and there is no difference between the two cases. The meaning of the words "at least" has been considered in a variety of cases—The Queen v. the Justices of Salop (2), Zouch v. Empsey (3), Young v. Higgon (4), Mitchell v. Foster (5), Chambers v. Smith (6).

[WIGHTMAN, J.—In Chambers v. Smith the word was "between," which obviously excludes both days.]

The correct rule is, that where the time is to be computed against the party doing an act, the day on which the act is done may be included; but where the party against whom the time runs is not privy to the act, both days are to be excluded. Here the respondents are not privy to the notice, and are entitled to seven clear days to prepare for trial—Lester v. Garland (7). Then it is said that the fraction of the day may be considered, and that, with reference to the time of day at which the notice was given, seven clear days have intervened; and Godson v. Sanctuary (8) is relied upon; but that case does not apply here.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—That was a question as to the priority of one of two acts, both of which were done on the same day, and it was necessary to consider the fraction of a day.]

Then the time must clearly be computed from the first day of the sessions, not from the appeal day. The law takes no notice of adjournments, but contemplates the sessions as being held on one day—The King v. the Justices of Surrey (9).

[WIGHTMAN, J.—I think the day on which the appeal was entered must for this purpose be considered as the day on which the appeal is brought.]

As to the waiver, that was never urged at the sessions; but even if it had been, the Justices were not bound by any waiver by the parties—The King v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire (10), The Queen v. the Justices of Middlesex (11).

Pashley, in support of the rule.—Young v. Higgon is distinguishable. In Legge v. Williams (12), which was under the 2 Geo. 2. c. 17. s. 6, by which notice of trial is to be given "at least ten days before trial," notice on the 9th for the 19th was held sufficient; that case was not cited in Zouch v. Empsey. But here the Court will consider a fraction of a day; and if that is done there will be seven clear days, that is, seven times twenty-four hours—Symons v. Low (13), Pugh v. Robinson (14), Ex parte Farquhar (15), Ex parte Davey (16), Ex parte Senior (17), Godson v. Sanctuary, Harper v. Taswell (18), where Tindal, C.J., said, "five days is five times twenty-four hours"—Cowie v. Harris (19). But even if this cannot be done, the appellant has a right to compute the time up to the day of hearing appeals, the 30th of January.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—The act says seven days at least before bringing the appeal; and the printed list attached to the affidavits shews that appeals must be entered on the 7th.]

The first of the seven days ought not to be included. When time runs from the doing of an act, then the day upon which that act is done may be included,—but it is otherwise when the time runs from a given day—Bellasis v. Hester (20), citing Clayton's case (21), Co. Litt. 46, b, 255, a, Com. Dig. 'Temps,' 4, Norris v. the Hundred of Gawtry (22), Glassington v. Rawlins (23), Ex parte Farquhar, Godson v. Sanctuary, Hardy v. Ryle (24), in which case the distinction is taken between those who are privies and strangers to an act—The King

WIGHTMAN, J. now (June 12th) delivered judgment.—This was a mandamus to enter continuances, and to hear an appeal by Henry Thomas against a rate for the parish of St. Leonard, Shoreditch. The proceedings were under a local act, 53 Geo. 3. c. cxii., regulating the parish, by which it was provided that there should be an appeal to the Quarter Sessions holden within three months next after the determination of the trustees, and at least seven days' notice of appeal was to be given before the sessions at which the appeal is brought. Here the appeal was entered on the first day of the sessions, the 7th of January, and the notice of appeal was served at half-past nine o'clock on the 31st of December preceding; and the question is, whether the seven days' notice which was to be given was to be exclusive of the day of giving notice, and also of the day on which the appeal was entered or not. If this were the first case on the point, I confess I should be inclined to think that the notice was given in sufficient time; but it has been so frequently decided that the words "at least" exclude the day on which the notice is given, and also the day on which the act is done, that it seems to me to be too late to revive this question, especially as it appears that in the two latest cases the Court recognized the previous cases, and held themselves bound by them. Zouch v. Empsey, The Queen v. the Justices of Salop, and Mitchell v. Foster, are direct authorities to this effect. It was then contended, that the fraction of the day upon which the notice was given might be taken into consideration, and that if that was done the notice would appear to be given in time; but no authority was cited for that proposition. Where the question is, which of two acts takes precedence of the other, a fraction of a day may be considered, but that is not the case here. In cases such as this, where one act is to be done a certain number of days at least before another act, the general rule, excluding the day on which each of the acts is done, is applicable; and the precise time at which either of the acts is done does not become material. I am therefore of opinion, that in this case the notice of appeal was served one day too late, and that the Sessions were consequently warranted in refusing to hear the appeal. There were other points, some of which were disposed of in the course of the argument, and others have, by the view which I have taken, become unnecessary.

BAIL COURT.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. THE JUSTICES
May 29, 30; } OF MONTGOMERYSHIRE.
June 12.

Poor Law—Appeal—Notice of Trial—Practice of Quarter Sessions, Reasonableness of.

By the practice of a Quarter Sessions notice of trial was required to be given by the appellants to the respondents in the case of an entered and respited appeal twenty-eight days before the Sessions at which the appeal was to be tried. Where the appeal was entered and respited at the Easter Sessions, and notice and grounds of appeal were sent fourteen clear days before the July Sessions, but twenty-eight days' notice was not given, and the Sessions consequently refused to entertain the appeal, a rule for a mandamus to compel them to hear was discharged, as the rule of practice, although unnecessary, did not appear to be so unreasonable as to compel the Court to interfere with it.

A rule nisi had been obtained for a mandamus directed to the Justices of the Peace for the county of Montgomery, commanding them to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order for the removal of Hughes Hughes, Mary his wife, and their children, from the parish of Carno, in the said county, to the parish of Llanecil, in the county of Merioneth. The order of removal, made on the 18th of December 1843, and a copy of the order and notice of chargeability, was sent to the appellant parish on the 20th of the same month; the paupers were removed on the 13th of January 1844. The next Sessions for the county of Montgomery were held on the 7th of April, when an appeal against the above order was duly entered and respited; and an order of the Court was thereupon drawn up, that the appellants should cause the respondents, or some of them, to be served with a copy of the order of Sessions adjourning the appeal, at least twenty-eight days before the next Quarter Sessions. On the 19th of June, being fourteen clear days before the day upon which the Midsummer Sessions were holden, notice and grounds of appeal were sent, but no notice of the entry and respite given to the respondents. The rules of practice of the Montgomeryshire Sessions, a copy of which was annexed to the affidavits, directed "every notice of appeal to be given in writing by the appellants or their solicitors to the respondents or their solicitors, eight clear days before the Sessions, if the cause of appeal shall have arisen or happened time enough to admit thereof, unless otherwise directed by statute. Notice of prosecuting adjourned appeals to be given in like manner twenty-eight clear days before the Sessions; and unless the appellants prosecute the said appeal with effect at the said then next Sessions, the order of removal to stand confirmed." There were affidavits in support of the rule, which stated that the practice of the Sessions in enforcing the rule as to notice of trial had been disused, and referred to two particular instances where it had not been enforced. The affidavits, in answer, referred to the copy of the rules of the Sessions, and denied that the practice had been discontinued, the required notice of trial having been given in the two cases referred to, but proof of it waived by the respondents. The Sessions confirmed the order of removal, with costs, on the ground that notice of trial had not been given twenty-eight days previous to the July Sessions.

Bodkin shewed cause.—The contention by the other side must be that this rule of practice is absurd and unreasonable. The King v. the Justices of Wiltshire (1) and

The King v. the Justices of Norfolk (2), will be relied on to shew that this Court will interfere with the discretion of the Sessions; but in The King v. the Justices of Monmouthshire (3), Patteson, J. says, the observations of Lord Ellenborough, in the first case, go further than the Court would now go; in fact, that case rested entirely upon the 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. s. 8, which is wholly inapplicable to the case of respited appeals. It is not necessary to give notice of the entry and respite to the respondents. This rule, however, is not so unreasonable as to call upon the Court to interfere. Six months elapsed after the execution of the order without anything being heard of it by the respondents; twenty-eight days, therefore, is not an unreasonable time for them to get up their case and collect their witnesses.

Townsend and Pashley, in support of the rule.—The Sessions have no right to impose such a condition as that twenty-eight days' notice of trial shall be given. In The King v. the Justices of Norfolk, Taunton, J. says, the Sessions have no right to impose such a condition as notice of the entry; and in The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire (4) a rule of practice requiring that on entry of an appeal the original order should be filed, was held invalid.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—Was the ground of refusal by the Sessions in this case that the order had not been served, or that notice of trial had not been given?]

The objection was to the notice; but it appears on the affidavits that service of the order was required by the order of the Sessions. In The King v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire (5), Parke, J. says, the Sessions are judges of their own practice, but this Court is also judge of whether that practice is reasonable. In The Queen v. the Justices of Merionethshire (6), this Court reviewed the practice of the Sessions as to costs. Rudyard's case

(7), and The Queen v. Durr (8), shew that the Court will exercise an authority in reviewing the discretion of Magistrates. The Sessions have no power to impose a new condition of appeal—The King v. the Justices of Staffordshire (9). The King v. the Justices of Monmouthshire is a very different case from the present; there the appellants admitted that they had not complied with the reasonable practice of the Sessions in the case of a respited appeal, and the Court was asked to adjourn, which, in their discretion, they refused to do. Reasonable time is matter of law for this Court to determine: "it ought to be adjudged by the Justices,"—Co. Litt. 56, b.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—"By the Justices before whom the cause dependeth." If then the question of reasonable time is one within the discretion of the Sessions, and they decide upon it, we do not sit as a court of error to review their discretion.]

Such a length of notice as this is quite unknown in legal proceedings. Notice of a trial at bar even is much shorter. By the 14 Geo. 2. c. 17. s. 4. ten days' notice of trial for the assizes is considered sufficient. At these very Sessions eight days' notice is sufficient where there has been no entry and respite. The act of parliament, by making a general provision for fourteen days' notice, has declared the opinion of the law as to what is reasonable.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—That is fixed only as a minimum.]

It is analogous to the practice as to awards; a certain time for setting aside awards is fixed by statute, but in cases where the statute does not apply that time is taken by the Courts as a reasonable time—Veale v. Warner (10). If twenty-eight days is reasonable, there is no saying what limit can be imposed. Fourteen days is the utmost time that has ever been held reasonable for notice of trial—The King v. the Justices of Lancashire (11), The King v. the Justices of Wiltshire, The King v. the Justices of Norfolk. It is not clear from the affidavits whether this rule, as to the twenty-eight days' notice, has usually been exacted by the Sessions: we contend it is obsolete.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—I must take the rules of the Sessions which are before me as authority on that point.]

It may be this rule has not been adopted since the New Poor Law Act has passed.

WIGHTMAN, J., now (June 12) delivered judgment.—This was a mandamus to Justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order of removal, which was made in December 1843, and under which the pauper was removed in January 1844. The appeal was entered and respited at the April Sessions, and the notice and grounds of appeal were given by the appellants fourteen clear days before the July Sessions. It appears that the practice of these Sessions required twenty-eight days' notice of trial to be given in the case of entered and respited appeals; and the question which is raised is, whether the practice of the Sessions in this respect is so unreasonable that this Court will interfere with it. Several cases were cited on this point—The King v. the Justices of Wiltshire, The King v. the Justices of Monmouthshire, The King v. the Justices of Lancashire, The King v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, and the result of all of them is, that the Quarter Sessions are the proper judges of their own rules, and that this Court will not interfere with these rules unless they appear so unreasonable that they cannot be supported. Here the rule requiring twenty-eight days' notice, though it seems to be unnecessary, is hardly so unreasonable that I ought to interfere.

the township of Wolverhampton, in the county of Stafford, to the parish of Worthenbury, in the county of Flint, the Court of Quarter Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a case, the material parts of which were as follows:—The order of removal commenced thus—"Whereas complaint hath been made unto us whose names are hereunto set and seals affixed, being two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace acting in and for the said county of Stafford (one whereof being of the quorum,)"—[then followed the complaint] "we the said Justices, upon due proof, &c." [then followed the adjudication and order of removal]. "Given under our hands and seals the 26th day of July, A.D. 1844.

The examination which accompanied the order of removal was stated in the heading thereof to be "taken upon oath before us, two of her Majesty's Justices of the said county," and the jurat was, "Sworn before us the said Justices,

"W. Mannix.

"Geo. Briscoe."

The notice of appeal, served by the appellants, stated their intention "to appeal against an order of W. Mannix and George Briscoe, two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace acting in and for the county of Stafford;" and the ground of appeal was, "that the order and examination were bad and insufficient on the face thereof."

At the trial of the appeal the appellants objected that the names of the Justices who made the order, and before whom the examination was taken, did not sufficiently appear on the face of the order and examination. This objection was overruled by the Court of Quarter Sessions.

If this Court should be of opinion that the objection should have prevailed, then the order of removal and the order of Sessions were to be quashed, otherwise to be confirmed.

situate in the parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, and taking the goods of the plaintiffs. The defendants having pleaded Not guilty, and issue having been joined thereon, the facts were, by a Judge's order, stated for the opinion of this Court, in the form of a special case.

The plaintiffs are the proprietors in possession of Covent Garden Theatre; and the defendants, at the time of the trespass, were the churchwardens of St. Paul's, Covent Garden. The statute 51 Geo. 3. c. cl., local and personal, public, enacts, section 1st, as follows:—"Whereas an act was passed in the 12 Car. 2, intituled, 'An Act for making the precinct of Covent Garden parochial,' whereby it was, amongst other things, enacted that the yearly sum of 250*l.* should from thenceforth be and the same was thereby charged upon the houses of the inhabitants of the parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, in the county of Middlesex, except the house then commonly called Bedford House, with the appurtenances, for the support and benefit of the rector, curate, clerk and sextons, for the time being, of the said parish; and whereas, from the very great advance in price of the articles of necessary consumption, it is expedient that the said sum of 250*l.* should be increased," &c. The act then repeals the charge of 250*l.*, and all the powers and provisions relating thereto. Sect. 2. enacts, "That, in lieu of the said sum of 250*l.*, the yearly sum of 520*l.* shall, from the 25th of March next before the passing of this act, be and the same is hereby charged upon all houses within the said parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden." It then enacts, that the said sum shall yearly be assessed by the churchwardens, "after a formal vote, according to the fair and yearly rent, or improved value of such houses respectively." That such rates and assessment shall be borne and paid by the respective "occupiers of such houses respectively," and shall be collected by the persons appointed by the churchwardens. Section 3. enacts, that in case of neglect or refusal by parties liable to pay the sums "rated and assessed upon the house or houses in his or their occupation, or upon him, her, or them, in respect thereof," the same may be levied by distress. The statute 12 Car. 2. c. xxxvii. and 51 Geo. 3. c. cl. and the 10 Geo. 4. c. lxxviii, local and personal, public, are to form part of this case. The plaintiffs were assessed in the yearly sum of 33*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.* as the occupiers of Covent Garden Theatre, described as a certain house, situate in Bow Street. The premises in question were used by certain persons, with the permission of the plaintiffs, for dramatic exhibitions for money, which money was received by the said persons on their own account: they paying a large sum to the plaintiffs for the use of the premises. No person slept or resided on the said premises; none of the proprietors were resident in the said parish; nor did any of them, by themselves or any other person, occupy the said premises, or any part thereof, otherwise than as aforesaid. The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether the Theatre Royal Covent Garden was, at the time of the making of the said rate, properly liable to assessment, under stat. 51 Geo. 3. c. cl. If the Court should decide in the affirmative, judgment was to be entered for the defendants; if in the negative, for the plaintiffs, in such form as the Court should direct.

Jervis, for the plaintiffs.—The question is, whether Covent Garden Theatre is to be considered a house, within the meaning of the local act of parliament. The plaintiffs submit that it is not. The argument turns upon the meaning of the word "house" coupled with the word "occupier" in the act of parliament. The intention of the act was, that payment should be made by those houses only which were capable of being occupied as dwelling-houses. In Aldred's case (1), it is said that the habitation of man is the principal end of a house.

[ROLFE, B.—Or rather, the capability of its being inhabited.]

In 2 Russell on Crimes, p. 488, 2nd edit. 'Arson,' the word "house" is defined to mean a dwelling-house and all outhouses which are parcel thereof. In Elsmere v. St. Briavell's (2) it was held, that a building intended for, and constructed as a dwelling-house, but which had not been completed or inhabited, and in which the owner had deposited straw and agricultural implements, was not a house. The context of the act of parliament shews that rates were to be payable on those houses only which were capable of occupation; and that the personal care and spiritual superintendence of the rector were the consideration for the payment; but that consideration fails where, as in the present case, there is no occupation. He cited The King v. Adlard (3).

(1) 9 Rep. 58, a.

(2) 8 B. & C. 461; s.c. 6 Law J. Rep. K.B. 372.

Bodkin, contra.—The question turns upon the construction of the two acts of parliament, the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. xxxvii., and the 51 Geo. 3. c. cl., the objects of which are quite distinct. The statute 12 Car. 2. c. xxxvii. directs the sum of 250*l.* to be raised annually, not only for the ministers, but for the sexton and parish clerk also, so that the services of the rector are not the only consideration for the payment. The state of property has been materially changed since the passing of that statute; and therefore the statute 51 Geo. 3. c. cl. repeals all previous provisions on the subject, and as a larger annual sum had become necessary, the intention of the act of parliament was, that no buildings whatever should be exempted from assessment. A house may be defined to be every building that, by its structure, is adapted to human beings. In this case there was beneficial occupation.

Jervis, in reply, was stopped by the Court.

POLLOCK, C.B.—We all think that the term “houses” primâ facie means dwelling-houses. The act of Car. 2. confined the charge to the inhabitants of the parish. That act was repealed, and a new arrangement substituted, by which the charge was made upon all occupiers of houses within the parish. The act was intended to apply to dwelling-houses occupied by individuals, and warehouses and counting-houses were not included within it. Nor can we construe it to extend to other buildings which, strictly speaking, are not houses, although popularly called so. Our judgment must be for the plaintiffs.

ALDERSON, B.—If both acts are considered together, the meaning of the last is plain.

It meant to impose a charge on dwelling-houses only, or those which are capable of being made such. The first act is a key to the second, and shews that those parties were to be rated who would derive benefit from the services of the rector, curate, clerk or sexton. The first act contains an exception of the house of the Duke of Bedford; the second act is more comprehensive, and repeals that exception, but does not alter the description of houses that are made liable to the rate; it tends, however, to shew that the other houses intended to be rated were such as were occupied in a similar manner.

ROLFE, B.—The word “houses” primâ facie means dwelling-houses, and this is in accordance with the meaning of the first act of parliament. The presumption arising from both acts is, that the same description of property was intended to be rated; and although the words are somewhat different, yet if such an alteration had been contemplated as the rating of theatres, the meaning would have been expressed clearly, and would not have been left to inference.

PLATT, B.—The statutes 12 Car. 2. and 51 Geo. 3. have the same object in view; the former makes the houses of the inhabitants of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, liable to be rated; and the only object of the latter is to increase the stipend of the rector. The second section of the last act points out the subject and the persons liable to be rated; it mentions “all houses within the said parish,” that is, all dwelling-houses capable of being inhabited by man. Other acts of parliament relating to the same subject mention expressly outhouses, warehouses, and other buildings, as subjects of local taxation, which seems to shew that the word “houses” was not considered by the framers of those acts sufficiently comprehensive to include all those descriptions of buildings. The difference between the acts of 12 Car. 2. and 51 Geo. 3. is, that by the former, the houses of inhabitants are rateable, and by the latter, those of occupiers. In both cases, however, the word “houses” means those dwellings which are fit for the habitation of man.

P. was wholly unable to work as aforesaid; and that the said Justices did in and by their said order, in pursuance of the provisions of the said act of parliament, duly direct the guardians of the poor of the said union to give relief to the said E. P, without requiring that she should reside in any workhouse. The writ then stated that the order was duly served on the guardians at their general weekly meeting, on the 24th of August 1844, and delivered to the presiding chairman; but that the said guardians at their said weekly meeting declined to order any such relief; and that afterwards, on the 31st of the same month, the said E. P. applied to them for relief under the said order, and requested them to give relief to her without requiring that she should reside in any workhouse, but that the said guardians wholly refused and still refuse to comply with the said order.

To this writ the guardians returned as follows:—

“We, the guardians of the poor of the Totnes Union, in the county of Devon, in the writ hereunto annexed mentioned, do most humbly certify and return to our sovereign Lady the Queen, &c., that the order in the said writ mentioned under the hands of T. K. and H. P, in the said writ mentioned, was and is in the words and figures following, that is to say—

“Devon, to wit. To the guardians of the poor of the Totnes Union. Whereas, by an act, &c., 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76, intituled, &c., it is among other things enacted (1), ‘That in any union which may be formed under the said act, it shall be lawful for any two of his Majesty’s Justices of the Peace usually acting for the district wherein such union may be situated, at their just and proper discretion, to direct by order under their hands and seals that relief shall be given to any adult person who shall from old age or infirmity of body be wholly unable to work, without requiring that such person shall reside in any workhouse: Provided always, that one of such Justices shall certify in such order, and of his own knowledge, that such person is wholly unable to work as aforesaid; and provided further, that such person shall be lawfully entitled to relief in such union, and shall desire to receive the same out of a workhouse.’ And whereas Elizabeth Pering, widow, an adult person, of the parish of Berry Pomeroy, in the said county of Devon, cometh this day personally before us, Thomas Kitson, clerk,

(1) 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 27.

and Henry Cranmer Marsh Phillips, whose hands and seals are hereunto set, two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, acting in and for the county of Devon, and usually acting at Paington, within the district of the Totnes Poor Law Union, in the said county, and complaineth to and informeth us, the said Justices, that she, the said Elizabeth Pering, is aged seventy-seven years and upwards, and that she is the widow of Peter Pering, labourer, deceased, and from old age and infirmity of body she is wholly unable to work; that her place of residence is in the parish of Berry Pomeroy, in the county of Devon, and in the Totnes Poor Law Union, and she is lawfully entitled to relief therefrom; that she has been in the receipt of out-door relief as a pauper of the said parish of Berry Pomeroy for several years prior and up to or about the month of May last, when the said relief, amounting to two shillings and a loaf per week, was discontinued, as she was informed and believed; and a workhouse order was thereupon directed by the guardians of the said union to be given to her, and the said order was offered to her by a relieving officer of the said union, and she declined to avail herself of the said workhouse order, from a dislike to live in the union house; and the said guardians had refused and still do refuse to give, grant or order her relief out of the said workhouse, and she desired to receive relief out of the said house; that she, the complainant, had been for many weeks past supported by the charitable contributions of the inhabitants in the neighbourhood in which she was living, and she had no means or resources whatever of her own to support herself, and therefore the said complainant prayed for justice in the premises, and that an order may be made on the guardians of the said Totnes Poor Law Union to grant her relief out of a workhouse. And whereas proof hath been this day taken before us, upon oath, in support of the said complaint, and it doth appear to us, the said Justices, that the said Elizabeth Pering is from old age wholly unable to work, and that she hath desired and doth desire to receive relief out of a workhouse, and that the said Elizabeth Pering is lawfully entitled to relief in such union, and desires to receive the same out of a workhouse; and that you, the said guardians of the said Totnes Union, have refused and continue to refuse to give, order and grant unto the said Elizabeth Pering relief out of a workhouse: and whereas proof hath also been made, upon oath, this day, before us, that the said Elizabeth Pering is lawfully entitled to relief in the said union; and I, the said Thomas Kitson, Justice of the Peace, do hereby certify of my own knowledge that the said Elizabeth Pering is from old age wholly unable to work; we, therefore, the said Justices, whose hands and seals are hereunto set, in pursuance of the said statute in that case made and provided, do direct by this our order, you, the said guardians of the poor of the said Totnes Union, forthwith to give relief to the said Elizabeth Pering, without requiring that the said Elizabeth Pering shall reside in any workhouse. Given under our hands and seals the 22nd day of August, in the year of our Lord 1844.

" H. C. Phillips." (L.S.)

" And we, the said guardians, do further most humbly certify to our sovereign Lady the Queen, that no summons or warning was issued by the said Thomas Kitson and Henry Cranmer Marsh Phillips, or either of them, or by any other Justice of the Peace, to us the said guardians, or to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Berry Pomeroy, in the said writ mentioned, or to any or either of them, requiring us, the said guardians or the said churchwardens and overseers, or any or either of them, to appear before the said Thomas Kitson and Henry Cranmer Marsh Phillips, or any other Justices, to answer the complaint of the said Elizabeth Pering, in the said writ and in the said order mentioned, or to attend the hearing of the complaint in the said order mentioned; and that the said hearing of the said complaint in the said order mentioned was had, and the said proof and evidence in the said order mentioned was taken, and the said order was made by the said Thomas Kitson and Henry Cranmer Marsh Phillips, without any summons first issued by them or either of them, or by any other Justice of the Peace, to us, the said guardians, or to the said churchwardens and overseers of the said parish of Berry Pomeroy, or to any or either of them, touching or concerning the said complaint of the said Elizabeth Pering; and that neither we, the said guardians, nor the said churchwardens and overseers, or any or either of them, were ever summoned or required by any Justice of the Peace to attend the hearing of the said complaint or to answer the same; nor were we, the said guardians or the said churchwardens and overseers, or any or either of them, present at the making of the said order, or at the taking of the evidence on which the same was made, nor any person on their or our behalf. And we, the said guardians, further most humbly certify to our sovereign Lady the Queen, that the said parish of Berry Pomeroy is a parish duly maintaining its own poor, and having churchwardens and overseers of the poor, and that for the present year of office, and at the time of the making of the said order, Thomas Tracey and Lawrence Lezard were and still are the churchwardens, and George Ford and John Turpin and William White the overseers of the poor, respectively and duly appointed and acting in and for the said parish of Berry Pomeroy. And we, the said guardians, further most humbly certify that the said parish of Berry Pomeroy, and the several other parishes forming the said Totnes Union, have always been and are distinct parishes for the purposes of settlement, and do not nor at any time did raise in common the necessary funds for the relief of the poor of such union, and that each of the said parishes hath always been and is separately chargeable with and liable to defray the expense of its own poor, whether relieved in or out of the workhouse of the said union; and we, the said guardians, further most humbly certify that we, the said guardians, both before and since the making of the said order by the said Thomas Kitson and Henry Cranmer Marsh Phillips, did offer relief to the said Elizabeth Pering, in the workhouse of the said Totnes Union, but such relief was refused by her. The answer," &c.

Demurrer by Elizabeth Pering, and joinder.

Watson (Greenwood was with him), in support of the demurrer.—The principal objection raised to the order by the return is, that no summons was issued by the Magistrates to the guardians or to the overseers; but this is a matter entirely ex parte. No doubt the party must be legally settled in some parish in the union; but the order with respect to this sort of relief merely rests on the fact of the incapacity of the party, and that the Magistrate is to certify of his own knowledge. It is also objected that the order should have been on the overseers. The 27th section only uses the word "direct," without saying who are to be directed; but the 54th section throws the duty of relief on the guardians.

Montague Smith, contra.—As to the second point, the immediate giving of relief is the duty of the overseers, even by the 54th section; and the legislature, in the 27th section, may have meant to substitute the Justices for the guardians. This view is corroborated by section 95; the 54th section also excepts cases where Justices order relief.

[PATTESON, J.—There appears to be some difficulty as to the fixing the amount of relief to be given; no discretion is given to the overseers, and if the Magistrates are right in making the order on the guardians, the discretion is in their hands.]

The first objection is at all events fatal; whether the order was rightly made on the guardians or not, neither they nor the overseers were summoned. The order ought to find, as is done here, that the party is entitled to relief in the particular union; it therefore affects the interest of parties who had no opportunity of opposing it, or of being present when it was made. The principle is laid down in Painter v. the Liverpool Oil Gas Company (2), and is not confined to convictions. Whenever a charge of any kind is to be imposed either on individuals or bodies of persons, they ought to be summoned.

[COLERIDGE, J.—How could the guardians be summoned?]

The relieving officer might attend. This burden will ultimately fall on a particular parish.

(2) 3 Ad. & El. 438; s. c. 5 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 108.

[WILLIAMS, J.—I observe that the old form of orders of relief recite that the overseers had been summoned.]

The summons is made necessary by statute.

Various other objections were taken to the form of the order.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I think the principle on which the first objection is founded ought to prevail. The object and nature of this order is to affect in some way the interest of the parties on which it is made, and in a matter of which they have knowledge. It is true that there is the certificate of the Magistrate, that, of his own knowledge, the poor person is unable to work. But it might be that those well acquainted with her might at once have satisfied the Magistrate that she was a mere impostor, within their own knowledge. This principle has been adopted in other cases; and I think a summons was necessary, though it may not be in terms required by the particular act of parliament on which the order is founded.

PATTERSON, J.—I think that it is most important to adhere to the principle laid down by my Lord, and that there should have been a summons on the overseers or guardians. I wished to know how the law stood before the late act, and I find there is a statute, 9 Geo. 4. c. 7, which directs by s. 1, that no Justice shall order relief to any poor person until oath be made before him of some matter which he shall judge to be a reasonable cause, &c., “and until such Justice hath summoned two of the overseers of the poor to shew cause why such relief should not be given.” If that course was directed by law before the late act, certainly these extraordinary powers should not have been exercised by the Justices in this case without bringing the parties before them.

WILLIAMS, J.—It certainly is a safer rule to abide by the principle, which is still the same, whatever the amount by which the interest of the parish is likely to be affected may be. I think there should have been a summons on the overseers before the order was made.

COLERIDGE, J.—The principle to which we adhere is a most salutary one, that whenever the interests of any person or body of persons is likely to be affected by a proceeding of this nature, they ought to be summoned to attend it. In this case the order was compounded of two important matters: first, the settlement; secondly, the inability of the party to work. We cannot but see that to a certain extent the question of settlement was involved. As to the second question, either the certificate of the one Magistrate is sufficient, or both should be satisfied of the fact of inability; and in that case, evidence would be necessary as to the one who is to be so satisfied. In either case, I think it ought to be open to the parish to contest the fact, for, even if personal knowledge only is sufficient, still the matter must be open to such light as may be thrown upon it; and, at all events, if imposture was proved, then the Magistrate might be prevented from issuing his certificate.

1845.
June 2, 9.

THE QUEEN v. THE JUSTICES OF LINDSEY.

Certiorari—Appeal—Statute, Construction of.

By a local act it was enacted, that no proceedings in pursuance of the act should be removed by certiorari: this clause followed immediately after several others relating to summary proceedings before Magistrates. By a subsequent clause, an appeal to the Quarter Sessions was given to parties aggrieved by the decision of the commissioners under the act:—Held, that the clause taking away the certiorari applied to all proceedings under the act, whether on appeal or otherwise.

A rule nisi had been obtained for a certiorari to remove an order of Quarter Sessions, which was made on an appeal against an assessment made by the Fen Courts under stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. lxxvi. (local and personal, public,) “An Act for draining, embanking, and improving the fen lands and low grounds within the parishes, hamlets, townships, or places of Bardney Southrow, otherwise Southry, Tupholme, Buchnall, Horsington, Stixwould, Edlington, and Thimbleby, in the county of Lincoln." The act contains several clauses relating to summary convictions before Magistrates, immediately following which is section 158, by which it is enacted, "that no proceeding in pursuance of this act shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, nor shall the same be removed, by certiorari or otherwise, into any of the superior courts." Section 161. enacts, "that if any person shall think himself aggrieved by the rating or taxing of the said fen lands or low grounds, or by any other act of the said commissioners, or by any determination or adjudication of any Justice under the provisions of this act, he may appeal to the General Quarter Sessions for the parts of Lindsey, in the said county of Lincoln."

Wildman shewed cause.—There can be no removal of any proceedings under the act by certiorari, as the clause taking it away applies to proceedings upon appeal as well as to summary convictions.

The COURT then called upon—

Willmore, in support of the rule.—The clause taking away the certiorari applies only to the proceedings before Magistrates; in all acts where proceedings on appeal are intended to be affected, the clause taking away the certiorari is subsequent to the appeal clause, and the word "proceeding" is always connected with "orders." Very express words are necessary to take away a certiorari. In the 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 6. s. 7, (Recovery of Small Tithes Act,) an appeal is given to the Sessions, who are to reverse or affirm the judgment of the Justices; and the same clause subsequently enacts, that no proceeding or judgment shall be removed by certiorari. In the Malicious Trespass Act, (7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30,) the words are "no proceedings or adjudication of the Sessions thereon:" that shews that the word "proceeding" will not include a judgment of the Quarter Sessions.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—Supposing section 158. had followed section 161, or the very first clause of the act had enacted that no proceeding had, pursuant to the act, should be removed, would that have made any difference?]

That might have altered the case; but it is contended, that being placed where it is in this act, the clause has something definite to apply to, and its operation ought not to be extended. If the construction of the act is at all doubtful, the certiorari ought not to be taken away.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The question raised in this case was, whether the order of Sessions made upon an appeal by the party aggrieved against an assessment by the commissioners, under a local act, the 6 & 7 Vict. c. lxxvi, is removable by certiorari, which depends upon whether the clause of that act taking away the certiorari, applies to proceeding on appeal at Quarter Sessions. Section 158. enacts, that no proceedings in pursuance of the act shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, or be removed by certiorari or otherwise. This clause in the act comes after others which relate to summary convictions before Magistrates, and before the clause giving a right of appeal to a party aggrieved by the acts of the commissioners. It was contended, that the clause taking away the certiorari must, from this collocation, have been intended to apply only to those cases where the proceedings were taken in a summary way before Magistrates, and that it did not apply to proceedings on appeal to the Quarter Sessions. But on a review of the act, it appears to me that the clause must be considered as being applicable generally to all proceedings taken under the act without distinction, for otherwise this anomaly would happen, that an order might be removed against which there had been an appeal, but one against which there had been no appeal would not be removable. For this reason it appears to me, that the intention of the legislature was to take away the certiorari equally in the two cases; and, therefore, the rule for a certiorari must be—

Discharged.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. MORTLOCK AND May 22. } OTHERS.

Order of Sessions—Indictment for disobeying—Service—Notice—Evidence.

An order of Sessions was made for dismissing an appeal against a rate, and that the appellants, "upon service of the said order or a true copy thereof, should pay the respondents the sum of 91l. 9s. 10d. for their costs and charges by reason of the said appeal." An indictment for disobeying this order stated, that a true copy of the said order was, on &c., served on the defendants, and that they then and there had notice of the said order:—Held, on motion in arrest of judgment, that such statement was sufficient.

Held, secondly, that such allegation was sufficiently proved by proof of service of a copy of a formal document, containing the terms of the order drawn up from the minutes of the Sessions, such document being shown to the defendants at the time of service.

Held, thirdly, that no notice to produce such copy was necessary.

Held, lastly, that it was no objection to the order that the amount of the costs was inserted in it, at an adjournment of the Sessions, on a day subsequent to that on which the order was made; as both parties must be taken to have assented that the exact amount of costs should be fixed at a day subsequent to the making of the order.

The indictment charged that on the 1st of October, A.D. 1842, at &c., a rate was made for the relief of the poor of the parish of W, and that the defendants afterwards, and more than ten days before the commencement of the Quarter Sessions, gave notice, in writing, to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of W, of their intention to enter and prosecute an appeal against the said rate at the sessions, and of the causes and grounds of their appeal; and that on &c., before &c., being the next sessions, the appeal was entered, and came on for trial and was determined; and that, upon hearing counsel, &c., the Court dismissed the appeal and confirmed the rate, and did order that the defendants immediately "upon service of the said order, or a true copy thereof," should pay unto the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said parish of W, the sum of 91l. 9s. 10d., for their costs and charges by reason of the said appeal (prout patet, &c.) The indictment then alleged that the sum of 91l. 9s. 10d. so ordered to be paid by the defendants to the said overseers, &c., for their costs and charges, was a reasonable sum for such costs and charges; and that a true copy of the said order was afterwards, to wit, on the 29th of May A.D. 1843, personally served on each of them, the said defendants, and each and every of them had notice of the said order, and of the contents thereof, and were then and there requested to obey the same, as therein mentioned, and to pay the said sum of 91l. 9s. 10d. to the said churchwardens, &c., for their costs, &c.; yet the said defendants did wilfully and contemptuously neglect and refuse, &c.

There were several other counts in the indictment, varying the statement in the inducement, but all alleging the making of the order of Sessions, the service on the defendants, and their refusal to pay the costs, in the same manner.

Plea—Not guilty.

At the trial, before Lord Abinger, C.B., at the Summer Assizes for Cambridge, 1843, the minutes of the Sessions of the 6th of January 1843, in which was entered, in the usual way, the dismissal of the appeal with costs and their amount, were put in; and the following document, drawn up on parchment, was also given in evidence:—

"Cambridgeshire, to wit.—At the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, holden at the County Courts, on Friday the 6th day of January, in the 6th year &c., before &c., and other their companions, Justices &c.

"Robert Mortlock, Luke Staples, James Wing Dennis and John Dennis, appellants; and "Churchwardens and Overseers of Wicken, respondents.

"This day an appeal was entered by Robert Mortlock, L. S. J. W. D. and J. D., against a certain rate or assessment made for the poor of the parish of Wicken, in the county of Cambridge, and bearing date the 31st of October last; and, now upon hearing counsel and allegations on both sides, and the evidence produced, this Court doth dismiss the said appeal, and doth confirm the said rate or assessment so made as afore-said; and doth order that the said R. M, L. S, J. W. D. and J. D, immediately upon service of this order or a true copy thereof, do pay unto the said churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said parish of W, the sum of 91*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.*, for their costs and charges by reason of the said appeal.

"By the Court,
"Christopher Pemberton,
"Clerk of the Peace."

The order for dismissing the appeal, with costs, was made on the 6th of January; yet it was merely entered at the time in the minute book as an appeal dismissed with costs, without any sum being mentioned as the amount of the costs. The costs were taxed subsequently by the clerk of the peace, at his own office, and the amount reported to the bench of Magistrates at a Sessions, which was an adjournment of the Sessions of the 6th of January, and the amount then entered in the minutes. It was proved by a witness that he served a true copy of the parchment order above set out on each of the defendants, at the same time reading over to each of them a verbatim duplicate copy on paper of the parchment order.

It was objected, at the trial, that no notice having been given to the defendants to produce the copy served on them, secondary evidence could not be given of the contents of it; secondly, that the order itself was irregular and void, as it did not appear that the Magistrates present at the time the costs were allowed were the same as those who were present on the first occasion; thirdly, that there was no proof that this order or any copy of it was served, the order being, in fact, the entry in the minute book of the Sessions, of which that which was served was not proved to be a copy, and that that minute book itself was not produced to or read over to the defendants at the time of service. Lastly, it was objected that no notice had been given to the defendants to attend the taxation of costs; in reference to which objection, it was stated by the clerk of the peace that he gave each party an opportunity of attending, and made some statements about letters which he had written. No letters, however, were produced, nor was there any evidence of notice to produce them.

Lord Abinger, C.B., refused to stop the case, but reserved leave to the defendants to move to enter a verdict for them, and they were all found guilty.

Gunning, accordingly, obtained a rule nisi for entering a verdict for the defendants, or for a new trial, on the above objection, or for arresting judgment on the ground of the objections taken to the form of the order itself; and, on this point, in moving for the rule, he cited The King v. Smithies (1), Reed v. Deere (2), Garden v. Cresswell (3), The King v. Alnwick (4).

Byles, Serj. and Worledge shewed cause. —The indictment alleges service of a true copy of the order, and notice of the order itself. There was clearly no occasion to give notice to produce the copy, and if the defendants had notice of the order it is sufficient. The minute book of Sessions, which, in fact, contained the original order, could not be carried about to be exhibited to the parties—The King v. Yeoveley (5), Alivon v. Furnival (6). The order is part of the judgment—The Queen v. Stoke Bliss (7); and it was, in fact, made in open court, after hearing both sides, so that there was in effect notice to the defendants independent of the service of the copy of the order. There has been no case in which the indictment has contained an allegation of the service of the original order. In The King v. Wade (8) there was only the allegation that the defendants had notice of the order. The same form was adopted in The King v. Gilkes (9), The King v. Gash (10). In The King v. Soper (11), and The Queen v. Crossley (12), it was held sufficient to allege a due sending of the copy of an order. The cases referred to in moving for the rule were cases of attachment. The case of The King v. Kingston (13) may, perhaps, also be cited on the other side. In that case the question turned on the want of any service on some of the defendants. Then, secondly, as to the question of notice to produce. The proceedings themselves are in the nature of notice—Colling v. Treweek (14), How v. Hall (15), Jolley v. Taylor (16); and the notice cannot be put upon a higher ground than a duplicate original. The indictment distinctly alleges the receipt of a copy of the order. Then, thirdly, it is said that the Magistrates who composed the adjourned Sessions were not the same as those who were present at the original Sessions.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We cannot inquire into that question. We must take it to be the same Sessions, but adjourned.]

And the Court will not look out of the order itself. In The King v. Mitton (17) Lord Mansfield says, "The foundation of the indictment is the order of Sessions." Nothing appears to shew they had no jurisdiction, and until the order is reversed it ought to be obeyed. We cannot hear objections to the conviction which do not appear on the face of it, on a motion in arrest of judgment, for disobeying the order made on it."

[COLERIDGE, J.—Suppose only one Magistrate were present?]

Even then it could not be taken as an objection to the indictment. The proper course would be to quash the order, in which case, perhaps, the Court would receive affidavits as to the constitution of the Court—The King v. Gilkes (18).

[COLERIDGE, J.—The objection, if it amounts to anything, goes to the jurisdiction.]

In Sellwood v. Mount (19) it was held, that the proper course was for the Sessions to direct their officer to tax, and then to adopt the taxation as their own act. The whole Sessions are in fact but one day, and as the clerk of the peace cannot tax the costs while the business is going on, some adjournment is necessary. As to the objection that there was no notice of taxation, the answer is, first, the Court will not look out of the order; secondly, the Court of Quarter Sessions has no machinery for taxation, and whatever has been done must be taken to have been the act of the Court.

Prendergast and Gunning, contra.—The only contempt alleged in the indictment is got at by reason of the defendant being found to have been served with a true copy of a particular document; but the indictment in substance only states that they were served with a copy of the order, and so had notice of the original. If notice of the order alone had been stated, it might be taken that the original was shewn them. Then, as to the service: whatever the original was, there was the service of the copy of a copy. In The King v. Alnwick, Lord Tenterden says, that the service of an order can only be by the delivery of the order itself, or by the delivery of a copy, and at the same time producing the original.

The case of The King v. Yeoveley is in the defendant's favour, as it is not pretended that the minute book of the clerk of the peace was shewn or produced. The document furnished by the clerk of the peace was not proved to be a copy of the minutes. It comes to this: if the minute book was the original, we have had no copy of that; if the minute book was not the original, we have had no copy of anything shewn to be an original order. Then, as to the taxation, the parties should have had notice of it. It took place behind the backs of the defendants, and was irregular and void within the principle of Painter v. the Liverpool Gas Company (20), The Queen v. Hughes (21), and that class of cases. The clerk of the peace had no authority to insert the sum without hearing the parties.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The first question is, whether there is any ground for arresting the judgment, by reason of what is said to be the insufficiency of the allegation of the service of a true copy of the order. It seems to me to be a perfectly sufficient allegation. Upon the authorities, indeed, we should hold that an allegation of a refusal to pay, upon notice of the order, would be sufficient. An allegation which, in fact, might be translated into the same words, must, therefore, be sufficient, whether we take the minute book of the Sessions, or the parchment document which was afterwards drawn up, to be the order. Then, on the question of evidence, I really see no difficulty. At the time of service the party serving shews that which he calls the original order, and which is, in fact, proved to be a true copy of the order. To call for notice to produce the copy served would be to call for a proof of notice to produce a notice. The only remaining objection is to the order itself, and I think the order is good. There was a judgment by the Sessions that the appeal should be dismissed, with costs; and an order that the appeal should be dismissed, and that the appellants should pay such costs as the officer of the court should direct, would clearly be good. Then, if the taxation by the officer upon such an order was ex parte, it might be bad, but that cannot be said to have been the case here. Mr. Pemberton says that he wrote to each of the parties, in order to give them an opportunity of attending. We are not now upon the objection that no letters were produced. Had such an objection indeed been persisted in, other evidence would probably have been given to remove it. The general statement of notice must therefore stand, though this particular piece of evidence might be liable to objection. There being a dismissal of the appeal, it must be taken that the parties had consented to let the actual amount of the costs they were liable to pay be inserted at a future day. If there were anything irregular in the conduct of the officer, that would be a good ground for inquiry; but that is not suggested.

PATTESON, J.—I am of the same opinion. The statement made by the clerk of the peace removes the objection as to the conduct of the taxation. As to the indictment, it is said that the original order should have been alleged to have been shewn; but, in fact, a statement of the service of a true copy is a statement of that which is in terms a compliance with the order. I do not pretend to say which was the order, the minute book or the other document; and it is said that there was no copy of the minute book; but there is nothing to shew that the document shewn to the witness was not so, and, indeed, it is sworn to be a true copy. Then, as to the question of notice. The fallacy lies in supposing that the copy served amounted to anything more than notice. This is not a question of secondary evidence—no secondary evidence was given. That which was left with the defendants was not the original; that was, in fact, produced at the trial. If it is said that notice ought to be given to prove that certain pieces of paper were notices, then it comes back to the question of giving a notice to produce a notice.

WILLIAMS, J.—I think the question of the evidence is clear, whether the minutes or that which was handed out be considered the original document; and there is no third supposition. The witness most probably meant that which was furnished by the clerk of the peace; and then the question would be, whether a notice to produce a notice is necessary; which it clearly is not. As to the adjudication of the costs, the objection made is, that it was behind the backs of one of the parties; but that objection is only got at by deserting the report. Mr. Pemberton says he gave both parties an opportunity of attending; and, as my Lord has suggested, if the evidence was objected to, other evidence of this fact might have been supplied. Then it seems to me that the indictment is clearly sufficient, as it alleges service in the terms of the order.

COLERIDGE, J.—The objection to the order of Sessions is entitled, I think, to no weight. It is the judgment of the Court, not like an order of individual Magistrates. The only question on which I have entertained any doubt is the question of jurisdiction. You must take the order to have been made at the adjourned Sessions; and I certainly doubt much whether the adjourned Sessions could have made an order for costs in respect of matters heard at the original Sessions. You may, indeed, look to see whether the Magistrates who heard the second matter are the same as those who heard the first. But, in this particular case, on referring to the Judge's notes, it is clear that this is an order made subject to a future taxation, and we must take the whole matter to have been disposed of by consent; and no objection having been taken (and it does not appear that any was taken), that which was done with respect to the taxation must be considered as having been assented to by all parties.

Settlement—Certiorari, Who may move for—Time of Appeal—Coming to inhabit.

The rule that a certiorari to remove an order for the purpose of quashing it, ought not to issue until the time for appealing against the order has expired, applies only where the certiorari is prayed for by the party in whose favour the order is made.

A statement that the paupers "have intruded themselves into the parish, and have become chargeable to the same," is not a sufficient statement of their having come to inhabit, to justify an order of removal.

Pashley, in Easter term (April 24), had obtained a rule nisi, on behalf of the parish of Beckington, for a writ of certiorari to remove into this court, for the purpose of quashing it, an order of two Justices of the borough of Reading, dated the 18th of January 1845, for the removal of Jane Cresswell and her five children from the parish of St. Giles's, Reading, to the parish of Beckington, Somersetshire. Several objections were taken to the order, among others, that it did not shew a "coming to inhabit" by the paupers in the removing parish, within the statute of Charles II. The order stated, that the paupers "have lately intruded and come into the said parish of St. Giles, and have become actually chargeable to the same."

Carrington now shewed cause.—It appears from the affidavits that the paupers have not yet been removed in pursuance of the order. The removal, whenever it takes place, may be treated as the grievance, and the appeal be made to a future sessions.

The writ of certiorari ought not to issue when the time of appeal is not yet past. Though this is no objection to the issuing of a certiorari, when the time for appealing is not limited, yet when there is a limit to the time for appeal, no certiorari ought to issue till that time has expired—Reg. Gen. Pasch. 1 Anne (1), The King v. Harman (2), The King v. Houlditch (3), 2 Nolan's Poor Law, 587.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The rule in Sal-keld does not apply here. It applies only to cases where the party in whose favour the order is made, seeks to remove it by certiorari, and it was established that the party against whom an order is made, might not lose his privilege of appeal.]

Then as to the objection to the order. The statement, that the paupers have intruded and become chargeable, is equivalent to an allegation that they have come to inhabit—The King v. Binegar (4).

[COLERIDGE, J.—There the words were, that the paupers had "come and intruded themselves into the parish, endeavouring there to settle as its inhabitants, contrary to law." The latter words are not in this order. The paupers here may have been casual poor for aught that appears.]

The word "intruded" negatives the idea of their being casual poor.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We cannot give to that word the virtue you contend for, and the objection cannot be got over. The other point does not arise here, for the party is not, as in the cases cited, applying to quash his own order. The rule must be absolute.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Bliss had obtained a rule in Easter term (May 7th, 1845) to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue, directed to Joseph Milner, clerk, and William Hopes, Esq., two of the Justices of the Peace for the county of Westmoreland, commanding them to return into this court the following order, made under their hands and seals, in order that it might be quashed:—

"Westmoreland, to wit.—At a petty session of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the county of Westmoreland, holden in and for the division of East Ward, in the county of Westmoreland, at the Shire-hall at Appleby, in the said county, on the 18th of January 1845, before us, Joseph Milner, clerk, and William Hopes, Esq., two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said county. Whereas, one Rebecca Blackett, single woman, residing at Street House, in the parish of Warcop, within this division, did, on the 9th of January 1845, having been delivered of a bastard child within twelve calendar months prior thereto, make application to Joseph Milner, clerk, one of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, usually acting in this division, for a summons to be served upon one John Gregson the younger, of Warcop aforesaid, whom she alleged to be the father of the said child; and the said Justice thereupon issued his summons to the said John Gregson the younger, to appear at a petty sessions to be holden on this day for this division to answer her complaint touching the premises. And whereas, &c.

(Signed) "Joseph Milner, (L.S.)"

"William Hopes, (L.S.)"

The objection to the above order was, that it did not appear that the Justice, to whom application was made, had any jurisdiction to issue a summons, inasmuch as he was not stated to be a Justice acting for the division in which the petty sessions were held.

Addison now shewed cause.—The jurisdiction of the Justices, to whom the application was made, sufficiently appears; for it is stated that application was made to a Justice usually acting in the division. In The King v. Stone (1), a conviction stating that the defendant was present at the time when the information was read and the witnesses examined, and that when called on for his defence he produced no evidence and did not require further time, was held sufficient, without shewing that he had been summoned to answer. Technical objections of this kind are cured by the recent act, 8 Vict. c. 10, which passed on the day after this rule was obtained (8th of May 1845). Section 1. enacts, "that where any proceedings have been had or taken before the passing of this act, or shall hereafter be had or taken in matters of bastardy, under the provisions of the said recited act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101), and shall have been set forth according to the forms in the schedule hereunto annexed, or to the like tenour or effect, the same shall be taken respectively to have been and to be valid and sufficient in law."

Bliss, in support of the rule.—The order is defective for want of a statement of jurisdiction. The Justice ought to be one acting, "for" the division as well as in it. There is nothing here to shew that he has jurisdiction as a Justice for the particular place in which he acts. The act of 8 Vict. c. 10. only gives the form of the order, but does not dispense with the necessity of shewing jurisdiction.

COLERIDGE, J.—I think the spirit and object of the recent statute, 8 Vict. c. 10, was to cure such technical defects as the present. I do not intend to say that the words "in" and "for" are generally synonymous; but, referring to the forms given in the schedule to that statute, it appears to me that these two words are, for the purposes of this act, used as synonymous, and therefore the objection fails.

June 4. } TANTS OF ROTHWELL.

Settlement—Ground of Appeal—Emancipation.

A ground of appeal setting up a derivative settlement of the pauper in the respondent parish, averred that the pauper's father had never gained any settlement in his own right, and was unemancipated at the time his father (the pauper's grandfather) acquired a settlement in the respondent parish:—Held, that this statement was sufficient to shew a derivative settlement of the pauper in the respondent parish.

On an appeal against an order of two Justices for the removal of James Hopton, his wife and their eight children, from the township of Rothwell to the township of Shafton, the Sessions for the West Riding of Yorkshire discharged the order, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a case.

The examinations disclosed a settlement in the appellant township of Shafton, of Thomas Hopton, the father of the pauper, by evidence of relief given to his widow, the mother of the pauper, in 1841, and at other subsequent times, while she resided out of the appellant township. The appellants admitted the facts stated in the examinations, but relied upon a previous settlement, alleged to have been acquired by John Hopton, the father of Thomas Hopton, and grandfather of the pauper, and stated the following ground of appeal: "That the said John Hopton, the father of the said Thomas Hopton, and the grandfather of the said James Hopton, in or about the month of May 1806, and for two years thence next ensuing, rented and occupied a house of the yearly value of 20*l.*, and situate at Royd's Green, in your said township of Rothwell, as tenant thereof to one Stephen Elliot, late of Methley, &c.; and the said John Hopton, for more than forty days during his said occupation of the said house, &c., resided and slept in your said township of Rothwell, and the said John Hopton, after the commencement of his said occupation of the said premises, never did any other act or deed to gain a settlement. That the said Thomas Hopton, after his said father John Hopton had gained a settlement in Rothwell, &c., as aforesaid, and after his said father had resided in your said township more than forty days, whilst he so rented and occupied the said house, &c., as tenant thereof as aforesaid, was an unemancipated member of his said father's (John Hopton's) family, and that the said Thomas Hopton never did any act to gain a settlement in his own right; and that the said James Hopton never did any act to gain a settlement in his own right."

The respondents contended that the above ground of appeal was insufficient, inasmuch as the statement therein respecting the non-emancipation of Thomas Hopton, at the time when the settlement was alleged to have been gained by John Hopton, was not sufficiently averred to shew that Thomas Hopton did derive such settlement from his father, John. The Sessions overruled the objection, subject to the opinion of this Court. If the Court should be of opinion that the above ground of appeal sufficiently averred that Thomas Hopton was unemancipated at the time when the settlement was alleged to have been gained by his father John, so as to enable him to derive such settlement from his father, the order of Sessions was to be confirmed, otherwise the order of Sessions was to be discharged, and the order of Justices confirmed.

R. Hall, in support of the order of Sessions.—It is not disputed that the grandfather of the pauper gained a settlement in Rothwell: nor is it disputed that the pauper's father and the pauper himself never gained any settlement in their own right. If the pauper's father was unemancipated when the grandfather gained the settlement, he derived that settlement from the grandfather, and transmitted it to his son, the pauper. And the ground of appeal sufficiently alleges that the father was unemancipated when the grandfather gained the settlement. How could the appellants allege a negative in any other way?—(He was stopped by the Court.)

Pashley, contra.—The English law knows nothing of emancipation: the meaning of the term (borrowed from the Roman law,) is vague and uncertain. The appellants ought to have stated the facts on which they rely to shew that the pauper's father derived a settlement from the grandfather. The father may have previously acquired a settlement of his own, and still have been unemancipated—The King v. the Inhabitants of Wilmington (1). There would appear to be some discrepancy between that case and The King v. the Inhabitants of Bleasby (2).

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—Whichever be correct, what does it matter? The Sessions have had all the facts before them, and have come to the conclusion that the father had done nothing which emancipated him when the grandfather acquired the settlement. What could the appellants do more in stating a negative? Were they bound to go specifically through all the facts which constitute emancipation, and negative them seriatim? Lord Mansfield and Mr. Justice Wilmot have said, that they did not like the introduction of terms from the Roman law, into the vocabulary of English law (3). However, the term "emancipation" has been long introduced into, and incorporated with our language. This Court understands the meaning of the term, the Sessions understood it, and no doubt the respondents understood the meaning of it, in the ground of appeal, perfectly well; and being language which all parties understood, the Sessions did quite right in holding the ground of appeal sufficient. It never has been held necessary to go through all the modes by which a man is emancipated, and to negative them severally. We might just as well require that instead of stating that a man has never acquired a settlement, parties should go through all the various modes by which a settlement may be acquired, and aver that he never did any of the acts so set out.

PATTESON, J.—The only question here is really, whether the word "emancipation" has any meaning at all. It would be a difficult thing to persuade me that the respondents, who say it is vague and uncertain, could mistake the meaning of it in this ground of appeal, for a single moment.

WILLIAMS, J.—If the meaning of this word be not understood, it certainly is not for want of definitions of it. And I observe that my Lord Kenyon, who knew perhaps as much of this subject as Lord Mansfield, took considerable pains, and not entirely without success, to state the circumstances which constitute emancipation (4). I suspect that, by this time, parish officers understand the meaning of the word as well as they do that of any other in the language.

COLERIDGE, J.—I entirely agree in thinking the Sessions right. We cannot open any book on the Poor Laws for the last fifty years, without finding the word "emancipation" used over and over again in a well understood meaning.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS OF KENILWORTH.

Proof of Documents—Secondary Evidence—Hearsay.

Before receiving secondary evidence of the contents of a document on which to found an order of removal, the Justices should be satisfied that there has been a bonâ fide diligent search and inquiry for it in the place where it would most probably be found. This is a question of fact, of which the Justices are the sole judges. And, on such a question, statements made by third parties respecting the document, to the person conducting the inquiry, are properly receivable in evidence.

On appeal against an order of two Justices for the removal of Charles Dencer, his wife and three children, from Bermondsey to Kenilworth, the Court of Quarter Sessions for the county of Surrey confirmed the order, subject to a CASE, the material parts of which were as follows:—The ground of removal was an alleged settlement of the paupers in Kenilworth, by the apprenticeship of Joseph Dencer, the deceased father of the male pauper. The indenture of apprenticeship was not produced, either before the removing Magistrates or at the Sessions, and the evidence to account for its non-production was somewhat similar on both occasions. The appellants objected, under their grounds of appeal, that there was not sufficient proof to let in the parol secondary evidence of the contents of the indenture, and urged principally that a proper and sufficient search was not proved, and that the evidence consisted of the mere proof of parol declarations of third parties not upon oath. The objection was taken at the Sessions; first, with reference to the examinations annexed to the order, which it was contended were bad on the face of them, and afterwards on the occasion of the evidence being offered vidæ voce by the respondents in the proof of their case. The objection was overruled by the Sessions in each instance, subject to the opinion of the Court. The examinations, so far as they are material to this point, were as follows:—

William Cornwell, upon his oath, saith that upon information obtained from Charles Dencer (the pauper), he, in the month of August 1840, went to the parish of Kenilworth, in the county of Warwick, with the view of obtaining the apprenticeship indenture of Joseph Dencer (the father of the pauper Charles Dencer) from Susannah Dencer, the pauper's mother (in whose custody it was supposed to be); that, on arriving there, he found the said Susannah Dencer was an inmate of Warwick Union workhouse, at the charge of Kenilworth parish; that he went thither and saw the said Susannah Dencer, who stated that on her becoming an inmate of the Kenilworth workhouse, she gave her late husband's apprenticeship indenture to Mr. Squires, the master, and that she had never seen it since. That upon such information he went back to Kenilworth, when he ascertained that Mr. Squires was deceased; that he saw Mr. Squires's widow, who searched her late husband's papers, but could not find the said apprenticeship indenture. On the ex-aminant's return to London, the pauper had ceased to be chargeable, and no further search became then necessary. That, in June 1843, the pauper again became chargeable, and he (Cornwell) in July 1843, went to Kenilworth to make further search after the said apprenticeship indenture; that he again saw Mrs. Squires, who stated that the whole of the papers belonging to the parish of Kenilworth which were in her late husband's possession at the time of his death, she had delivered up to one Mr. William Sutton, the assistant-overseer of that parish. That he (Cornwell) saw the said William Sutton, who acknowledged to having had the papers of the late Mr. Squires; that when he received them he carefully examined them, but had no recollection of seeing the apprenticeship indenture of the said Joseph Dencer, and had since handed over the papers to Mr. William Hopkins, the present assistant-overseer. That he (Cornwell) waited on the said William Hopkins, who acknowledged having had the papers of the late Mr. Squires from the said William Sutton; that he had carefully gone through them, but had never seen any indenture relating to the said Joseph Dencer. That the said William Hopkins made search amongst the said papers of the late Mr. Squires, while he (Cornwell) waited, but no such apprenticeship indenture could be found. That he (Cornwell) then went to Mrs. Coates, of Tillington, near Leamington, in the said county of Warwick, the widow of the late Mr. Watts, the solicitor who prepared the said indenture, from whom he ascertained her late husband's papers were in the possession of Messrs. Poole & Haymes, solicitors, of Leamington, whose clerk searched the papers of the late Mr. Watts, but without success, as no such indenture could be found. That he (Cornwell) then went to Warwick Union workhouse (where the said Susannah Dencer died, being the person who last had the indenture of apprenticeship of the said Joseph Dencer), when the master and matron stated that no papers of any description were found in the possession of the said Susannah Dencer at the time of her death. That he (Cornwell) has made every endeavour to procure the said apprenticeship indenture, but cannot succeed; and therefore believes the said apprenticeship indenture to be lost or destroyed.

The examination of Charles Dencer, the pauper, stated that his father died in 1835, and that the last time he saw his father's apprenticeship indenture it was in the possession of his mother, in the year 1835.

The examinations then contained secondary evidence of the contents of the said apprenticeship indenture. It did not appear that it was a parish indenture. Similar evidence to that contained in the examinations was given at the trial of the appeal. The appellants, at each stage of the evidence, objected to the admissibility of the parol statements of the different parties, viz., Susannah Dencer, Mrs. Squires, William Sutton, &c., respectively, and also objected to the admissibility and sufficiency of the parol evidence of the contents of the indenture. The objection was, in each instance, overruled, and the order confirmed, subject to the opinion of the Court.

If this Court should be of opinion that the examinations did not contain, or that at the Sessions there was not given, sufficient legal proof of a proper and sufficient search for, and of the loss of the indenture, or that in the examinations, or at the Sessions, the parol evidence of the contents of the indenture was improperly received, the order of Sessions and order of removal were to be quashed, otherwise to stand confirmed.

Wallinger, in support of the order of Sessions.—The evidence was admissible, and if admissible, ample to prove the loss of the document, and to justify secondary evidence of its contents—Freeman v. Arkell (1). The King v. the Inhabitants of Morton (2), where less evidence was held sufficient, was recognized in The King v. the Inhabitants of Rawden (3). In The King v. the Inhabitants of Castleton (4), there was hearsay only: here an actual search is stated to have been made. It is not necessary the search should be for the purpose of the cause—Fitz v. Rabbits (5).

Otter, on the same side, was stopped by the Court.

W. H. Watson and Bovill, contra, contended that, upon general principles, hearsay evidence was inadmissible, and that no sufficient proof of search had been given to prove the document destroyed, and to let in secondary evidence of its contents. They cited The King v. the Inhabitants of Denio (6).

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—We should be extremely unwilling to come to any decision which could have the effect of making parish officers less careful of documents intrusted to their care, or which would introduce any laxity in the admission of secondary evidence of such documents, before a proper search has been made for the originals; but I see no danger of such a result from our saying that in this case the Sessions have come to a proper conclusion. The King v. the Inhabitants of Morton lays down this rule, viz., that there is no rule which can be made applicable to each individual case. The question in each case must be, whether reasonable evidence has been laid before the Justices to satisfy them that a bonâ fide and diligent search has been made for a missing document, so as to lead them to the reasonable conclusion that it has been either lost or destroyed. Before receiving secondary evidence of the contents of a written instrument, Justices making an order of removal should be satisfied that there has been a sufficient, bonâ fide and diligent search for it, in the place where it was most likely to be found. But all these are matters of fact, upon which it is worse than useless to attempt to lay down any general principle of law. To what employment indeed are we bound, if we are to be called upon to decide such matters as these upon the varied circumstances of each individual case? The Court below are bound, as I, sitting at Nisi Prius, should be bound, to exercise a discretion as to whether reasonable evidence has been given to account for the non-production of the instrument; and it is manifest that whether that evidence be sufficient or not, must depend upon the nature of the instrument, the custody in which it was last seen, and a variety of other circumstances, to which it would be impossible to apply an inflexible rule. I cannot forbear from saying, that I think it would have been quite as well if The King v. the Inhabitants of Denio had been decided otherwise. I am not satisfied with the distinction taken between that case and The King v. Morton; and I think it would have been as well if the Court had held themselves bound by the decision to which the Sessions had come. But it is objected, that these examinations contain hearsay evidence, and that the Sessions received it. True; but it was natural hearsay; hearsay, which was a necessary part of the transaction, a part of the proof that the witness had made a proper and diligent search. And I am distinctly of opinion, that upon such an occasion hearsay is properly receivable. The questions put by the witness in search of the document were put to the proper parties; and it would be madness not to act upon the answers given to such questions. The Sessions came to the conclusion that those answers, and the searches made in consequence, shewed that the document in question was lost, and I should have come to the same conclusion. Upon the whole, I am satisfied, in the first place, that it would have been sufficient to have stated only that the pauper's mother had given the deed to the master of the workhouse, and that it had never been seen since, and that there was no necessity for going further, and giving any further account of it; but in the second place, I am also satisfied, that what was afterwards stated, in answer to the inquiries of the witness, was properly received in evidence, and that there was quite sufficient to justify the Sessions in receiving secondary evidence of the contents of the deed. I can only regret, in this, as in some other cases, that the Sessions should have thought it necessary to submit their decision upon a question of fact to be reviewed by us. As in the case of a verdict by a jury, unless we could clearly see that they had done wrong, we should not interfere with their decision.

PATTERSON, J.—It is not necessary to say that every word in this examination was receivable in evidence. If there was enough to satisfy the Justices that a proper search had been made, and that the document was lost, evidence of its contents was receivable. No person is living into whose possession the document is traced. The only person in whose possession it is shewn to have been is the pauper's mother; and she is dead. She is applied to, in her lifetime, about it, and she gives an answer, which is clearly receivable in evidence, that she had given it to the master of the workhouse. He, it is to be observed, had no right to it. It was not a parish indenture; it was a mere voluntary act of the woman to hand it over to him. He was simply her agent. Then he is dead, and they go to his widow, and make search for it amongst his papers. True, she is not stated to be executrix, but it appears she had charge of the papers, and there is an actual search made among them, not a hearsay statement about them. Then it appears nobody knows anything more about the deed. This was abundantly sufficient to prove the loss. But if the answer of Susannah Dencer was not receivable in evidence, and was excluded—what then? Why, it appears the deed was seen last in her possession. An inquiry is made about it from her; and it is not produced or accounted for. The fair presumption from these facts alone would be that it was lost.

WILLIAMS, J.—The question is not, whether there be absolute proof that the document was lost or destroyed, because that proof cannot be given, unless the man be produced who put it in the fire or tore it in pieces, but whether due and reasonable diligence has been used in the search and inquiry for it. The pressure of this case is upon the answer given by Susannah Dencer to the inquiries made of her. If her answer was admissible, then the non-production of the document was sufficiently accounted for. In The King v. Morton two answers to somewhat similar inquiries were received by Lord Ellenborough, and upon the same rule and principle it seems to me that the answer of this woman in the present case was admissible.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of the same opinion. This objection has been argued on principles which do not apply. The question is not to be determined by the strict rule, as to the inadmissibility of evidence of declarations made by persons, who might themselves be called as witnesses. This is a preliminary inquiry for the satisfaction of the Court; and, from the necessity of the case, a less strict rule may, without danger, be introduced, than would be applicable in other cases. The question is, whether there has been a diligent bonâ fide search for a document in the proper quarters, so as to satisfy the Court that it has neither been negligently overlooked nor fraudulently kept back. That being so, in every case, all the particular circumstances must be taken into account, to assist those who are to decide the question. In the present case, the document is of little or no value, one in which no one had an interest, and not likely to be preserved with particular care. Suppose the answer of the pauper's mother had been "Yes, I had it; but I burnt it in the presence of so and so," naming ten persons: can it be said that such a declaration would not be admissible, and that those persons must be called as witnesses to prove the fact? She states that she gave it to some other person, and of that person or his representatives further inquiry is made. As to their not being the legal representatives of the party to whom she gave it, I remember that in a case of great importance in the House of Lords, The Bishop of Meath v. the Marquis of Winchester, it was held, that it was unnecessary to search for a document in the place in which, in strictness, the muniments in question should have been kept, but that it was sufficient to prove a search for it in a private collection of papers, because, under the circumstances of the case, that appeared to be the most likely place to find it; and that principle applies to the objection raised here. But let us assume that improper evidence was received. In the case of a trial at Nisi Prius, we grant a new trial if any improper evidence has been submitted to a jury; but we never grant a new trial on the ground that on a preliminary point, which it was for the Judge alone in his discretion to determine, some evidence was received by him, to which an objection may be raised.

May 3. } THE QUEEN v. WILLIAMS.

Indictment — Statutable Punishment — Conclusion contra formam statuti.

Where a statute provides that a matter which was a felony before shall be a felony, and creates a new punishment for every offender guilty thereof, it is not therefore necessary that the indictment should conclude contra formam statuti; and the recording of the statutable punishment, where the indictment does not contain those words is no ground of error.

The prisoner was convicted on an indictment for stealing a horse, a bridle, and a saddle; the indictment not concluding "contra formam statuti;" and sentence of transportation for fifteen years was recorded.

A writ of error having been brought on the judgment,—

Edwards, for the prisoner.—If the sentence as it stands on the record is correct, transportation for the same period might be awarded for the slightest felony. The stealing a horse was larceny, at common law; the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 25. made it a capital felony; the punishment of death was taken away by 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 62. s. 1, and by 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 90. s. 1. it is made transportation for fifteen years; but suppose the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. had been in force, the prisoner might have appeared, by the record, to be sentenced to death, though he might have been only convicted of stealing the bridle. The indictment, not containing the words "against the form of the statute," must be taken to be an indictment at common law, and would apply to the offence of stealing the saddle or bridle alone. In 2 Hale, P.C. 191, it is said, "If an offence be at common law, and also prohibited by statute, with a corporal or other penalty, yet it seems the party may be indicted at common law; and though it conclude not contra formam statuti, it stands as an indictment at common law, and can receive only the penalty that the common law inflicts in that case;" and further on (p. 192,) he observes, "If perjury be committed that is within the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9, but concludes not contra formam statuti, that is a good indictment at common law, but not to bring the party within the corporal punishment of the statute." If the prosecutor seeks to inflict the statutable punishment, he should not adopt the general form of indictment—The Queen v. Polly (1). The question was raised in The King v. Chatburn (2), The Queen v. Radcliffe (3). In The King v. Lucy Berry (4) the question arose, on application to quash the indictment. In indictments under the statute, greater strictness of proof is required, as in The King v. Puddifoot (5), where it was held, that an indictment for stealing a sheep, under the statute, was not supported by proof of stealing one ewe. All the precedents conclude contra formam. The difficulty might, perhaps, be got over, if it had only been alleged that the prisoner stole the horse.

[PATERSON, J.—Looking at the record, it tells us that the jury have found that the prisoner stole everything mentioned in the indictment.]

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—Your objection amounts to this, that the indictment is bad, because it does not conclude contra formam statuti.]

M. D. Hill, contra, was not called upon.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The question is, whether, where an indictment which charges an offence at common law, and does not conclude contra formam statuti, the judgment for the statutable punishment is good. I have never had any doubt on the subject, and have frequently held such indictments sufficient to support the statutable sentence. It is to be remembered that it is the offence which is the subject of the indictment, not the punishment. The unqualified proposition, as quoted from Lord Hale, cannot be considered law.

PATTESON, J.—I never understood that when the offence was one at common law the indictment need ever conclude contra formam statuti. It would, no doubt, be so, if the words of the statute created the offence; but, by the particular words of the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 25. stealing a horse is not made a new offence. In that section several words are introduced, which have no effect whatever as regards the crime of stealing: it enacts, that “if any person shall steal any horse, mare, gelding, &c., or shall wilfully kill any such cattle, with intent to steal the carcase or skin, &c., every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall suffer death,” &c., and the punishment is altered by the subsequent statutes. It is meant, I suppose, to be contended, that because the statute makes something a felony which was a felony before, namely, stealing horses, &c., the offence is a statutable felony; but that clearly is not so, and the words “shall be guilty of felony” would have no meaning, but for the part of the section which relates to killing, &c. The killing animals, with intent to steal the carcase, was not a felony before the statute, and therefore an indictment for such an offence must contain the words in question.

WILLIAMS, J.—The argument must go the length of contending that, whenever an act of parliament alters the punishment, the allegation of contra formam statuti is necessary. That is clearly not so, and Lord Hale, vol. 2. p. 190, in a passage just before that which has been cited, with reference to the statute of stabbing, 1 Jac. 1. c. 8, and other cases, where a special act of parliament, under certain circumstances, ousts the offender of some benefit (which the common law allowed him) says, “though the body of the indictment must express such circumstances according as they are prescribed in the statute, yet the indictment must not conclude contra formam statuti,” and further on, he says, “I have known it held sufficient that the indictment bring the case within the purview of the statute, though it conclude not contra formam statuti, for it was felony before, and the statute only takes away clergy.”

WIGHTMAN, J.—The principle is clear, and the authority cited by my Brother Williams is expressly in point.

June 4. } WHITEHEAD v. THE QUEEN.

Writ of Error—Sentence of Transportation—Statutable Felony—7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 90.—Jurors, Description of.

A prisoner convicted on an indictment framed under the stat. 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 90, for breaking into a dwelling-house, and stealing therein above the value of 5l., was sentenced to seven years transportation:—Held, on writ of error, that the judgment was bad, and that the prisoner was entitled to his discharge.

Semble, per Patteson, J., that an indictment which omitted to describe the jurors as jurors of the county, was bad.

The plaintiff in error was convicted at the York Winter Assizes 1844, before Coleridge, J., upon an indictment framed on the statute 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 90, for breaking into a dwelling-house, and stealing therein above the value of 5l. He was thereupon sentenced to be transported for the term of seven years. The caption of the indictment described the Court before which the indictment was found to be commissioned for the county of York, but it stated the presentment by the oath of the grand jurors, “W. R. C. S, C. P, B. R. L,” naming them and their residences, without stating them to be jurors of the county of York. A writ of error was brought, and the grounds of error alleged were, first, that the indictment did not appear by the caption to have been found by a grand jury of the county of York, in which the offence was charged to have been committed; and, secondly, that the judgment was erroneous, as by the stat. 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 90. s. 1, an offender convicted is liable to transportation for any term not exceeding fifteen years, nor less than ten years.

Bliss, for the plaintiff in error, was stopped by the Court, who called on—

Waddington, for the Crown.—As to the first objection, the whole of the record sufficiently shews that the jurors were good and lawful men of the county. The commission is to inquire, &c., by good and lawful men of the county of York. The venue is “to cause to come good and lawful men of the said county,” and the venue is “Yorkshire, to wit.” Then, the indictment states, that it was by the oath of A, B. and C. &c. presented, &c. It was unnecessary to repeat after their names that the jurors were of the county. But, at any rate, this objection is removed by the stat. 7 Geo. 4. c. 64. ss. 20, 21, which cures not only omissions but even misdescriptions in an indictment. There is no misdescription here; the objection is only that the description is insufficient.

[PATTESON, J. — It may possibly be matter of indentment; but I confess I do not see how it can be collected from the record that these jurors were jurors of the county of York.]

As to the other objection, the judgment may be supported. Previous to the stat. 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 90, the punishment for stealing in a dwelling-house property of more than the value of 5*l.* was, by the stat. 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 62. s. 1, transportation for life. That was the only punishment which could be awarded. Now the offender is “liable to be transported for any term not exceeding fifteen years, nor less than ten years.” If the offence were not divisible, the sentence of transportation for seven years could not be maintained. But here the offence of which the prisoner has been convicted includes a simple larceny, for which alone he might be convicted, and of which, in fact, he has been convicted, with the additional aggravating circumstances, which constitute the whole of the statutable offence. For the simple larceny, therefore, the prisoner might be transported for seven years. The statute says, not that the offender “shall be transported,” but that he “shall be liable to be transported.”

[COLERIDGE, J.—Being convicted, he is liable to be transported for any term not less than ten years. Then he is in this predicament, that he is not liable to be transported for seven years. The conviction places him so far in a state of safety, that he cannot be transported for a lesser term than the statute mentions.]

[PATTESON, J.—Can any instance be found where a man has been found guilty of the whole offence charged, and the sentence has been for something which the offence includes? Where a jury have found a man guilty of an aggravated statutable offence, for which a specific punishment is imposed, can a Judge throw overboard the circumstances of aggravation, and pass sentence for the lesser crime?]

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I remember an action tried before Gibbs, C.J., brought against Alderman Wood by a man whom he had sentenced to be imprisoned, and it was contended that the imprisonment was illegal, because the sentence did not direct that he should also be whipped. Gibbs, C.J., said to the jury, “Give the plaintiff the full damages he has sustained by reason of not having been whipped.”]

The King v. Fletcher (1) was referred to.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The question there was, whether the direction as to dissection was part of the sentence or not. Suppose a man found guilty of murder, could he on such conviction be sentenced to six months' imprisonment? Yet that would be a proper punishment for manslaughter, and the indictment for murder includes manslaughter. There can, I think, be no doubt in this case. The Judge has power under the statute only. The statute requires that a person convicted of the offence mentioned in the statute shall be liable to be transported for not less than ten years. The Judge, therefore, could not pass a less sentence than ten years' transportation.

(1) Russ. & Ry. C.C.R. 58.

PATTESON, J.—The statute is quite as imperative as the former statute was, or as the statute in case of rape still is, where the party, if transported at all, must be transported for life. I would not be supposed to say that the other objection is not a good one also, for I doubt very much whether the stat. 7 Geo. 4. c. 64. applies to such a case as this, where the grand jurors are not stated to be jurors of the county.

WILLIAMS, J. and COLERIDGE, J. concurred.

Poor Rate, Appeal against—Inequality of Assessment—Oxford Local Act.

The Court of Quarter Sessions for the city of Oxford have no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal against a poor-rate, made under the provisions of the local act passed in 1771, for regulating the poor in the city of Oxford, upon the ground that certain occupiers of property have been underrated, or that others have been omitted from the rate altogether.

This was an indictment against the defendants, for disobedience of an order of the Court of Quarter Sessions for the city and borough of Oxford. On the 7th of January 1843, a rate for the relief of the poor of the parish of St. Michael, in the city of Oxford, was duly published and allowed, in which the rector and fellows of Exeter College were rated in the sum of 3*l.* 15*s.*, upon chambers, &c., situate in Broad-street, and valued at the rateable value of 200*l.* William Hunt, who was rated in the same rate, in respect of his occupation of a house in the same parish, gave notice in writing to Haines and Foster (the churchwardens), and to Thurlow and Walker (the overseers of St. Michael), of his intention to appeal against the rate to the then next General Quarter Sessions for the city of Oxford, on the ground that the rector and fellows of Exeter College were underrated in respect of the year's value of the premises occupied by them, and that they were not assessed in the rate in respect of certain messuages, &c., occupied by them in the parish. The appeal was duly heard and determined in April 1843, at the Court of Quarter Sessions for the city of Oxford, before the Recorder, when it was ordered by the Court that the rate should be amended by altering the description of property occupied by and the sum assessed on the rector and fellows of Exeter College. In the amended rate they were assessed for rector's house, chambers, buildings and quadrangles, at the year's rateable value of 1,232*l.*, in the sum of 23*l.* 2*s.* The Court further ordered that the defendants (the respondents in the appeal) should pay to Hunt, the appellant, 304*l.* 3*s.*, the costs of the appeal. A copy of the order was served upon the defendants, who severally refused to pay the sum of 304*l.* 3*s.*, whereupon Hunt preferred a bill at the General Quarter Sessions for the city of Oxford against the defendants, for disobeying the order. The bill was removed by certiorari, and came on for trial at the Spring Assizes for Oxford, 1844, when the defendants Haines and Foster were found guilty, and Thurland and Walker not guilty. The facts were directed to be stated in a special case, which was accordingly done; and the first question for the opinion of the Court was, whether the Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the city and borough of Oxford had jurisdiction to try the said appeal, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 105: if not, a verdict of not guilty was to be entered. There were other objections raised, which are not noticed, as the judgment of the Court proceeded entirely on the ground first stated.

The case was argued in this term (May 28 and 31), by—

Pigott, for the Crown; and by—

Whateley, for the defendants.

The argument, which turned upon the construction and effect of the local act passed in 1771, for regulating the poor in the city of Oxford, sufficiently appears from the judgment of the Court, which was delivered (July 9th) by—

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This case was reserved from the Oxford Assizes on several points, one of which only has been argued, and the opinion we have formed upon that makes it unnecessary for us to hear the argument concluded. The question is, whether the Court of Quarter Sessions for the city of Oxford had any jurisdiction to make the order, for disobedience to which this indictment was preferred, and that will depend on whether an appeal lay to that court against the rate mentioned in the indictment. This rate was certainly in some sense a poor-rate, but it was made under the special powers of the local act which passed in 1771, for better regulating the poor in the city of Oxford. That act gave a specific mode of appeal, and does not give one to the Quarter Sessions. If, therefore, the rate is founded exclusively on this statute, then, as all appeals to the Quarter Sessions must be of express statutory creation, this appeal cannot be sustained; but if the rate can be considered as made under the statute of Elizabeth, modified only in its circumstances or application by the provisions of the local act, then, as the appeal given by the former statute is not taken away expressly or by necessary implication, it may still exist concurrently with that given by the latter; and in this case the appeal might be sustained. To clear this point, many sections of the local act must necessarily be examined.

The general scheme of the statute is to consolidate a number of parishes into one, for the purpose, amongst others, of the maintenance and government of the poor, as to which the overseers and churchwardens of the several parishes are eventually superseded, and a corporation of guardians substituted. By the 25th section it is enacted, "That the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said several parishes, from and after the 24th of June 1771, shall not by virtue of any law then in being, make (save as hereinafter mentioned) or cause to be made, any other rate, assessment, or taxation whatsoever; or rate, collect or gather any other sum of money within any of the said parishes, or from the inhabitants thereof or otherwise, for the relief, maintenance and employment of the poor within the said parishes, other than such rates or taxation for the clothing, maintaining, employing and otherwise providing for the poor of the said parishes, as should and might from time to time be ordered and directed to be rated and raised by the said corporation of guardians, pursuant to the powers therein given, and for the purposes therein expressed." Out of this general prohibition are excepted "rates or sums of money which by any special law they, the parish officers, are obliged to pay for the relief and provision of families of militiamen or for any other particular purposes arising within and falling to the part of the several parishes, and particularly directed by other acts of parliament." The special framing of this exception seems to shew that the ordinary rating of the poor under the statute of Elizabeth for the general purposes of such rating is within the general prohibition. We use the words "general purposes" advisedly, because the exception seems to keep the ordinary rating under the statute of Elizabeth alive for the special purposes named in the exception. For example, allowances to the families of militiamen were made as early as poor-rates (1), and the effect of this saving would be to authorize and compel the overseers and churchwardens to make a poor-rate in the ordinary way, and requiring the ordinary allowance, and subject to the ordinary appeal for the purposes of this charge. Both these rates—a rate under the statute of Elizabeth and one under the local act,—may therefore be in existence at the same time, which shews clearly that they are separate and distinct. The former might be made by the overseers on their own responsibility; they would determine the amount to be raised, and the proportions of individual assessments. With regard to the latter, they would exercise no discretion and incur no responsibility, as to the necessity of the rate or the amount to be raised: they would act under the orders of the guardians, and be ministerial except as to proportioning the assessment. It is observable that one of the earlier acts made for the providing for families of militiamen, the 33 Geo. 3. c. 8, apparently to meet the inconvenience of this double rate, makes a special provision (by sec. 8,) for the payment of the charge on the treasurer of the guardians of the poor in Exeter, where a local law, similar in many respects to the present, has long been in force, for the relief and maintenance of the poor generally in that city. The case of Oxford seems to have escaped notice,—at least at that time.

The powers of the guardians and the purposes of the rate are next to be considered. By the 30th section it is enacted, after reciting that it would be attended with great trouble and perplexity to keep separate accounts of the poor, and apportion the sums necessary for their support and employment in each respective parish, that the necessary sums shall be raised by a regular pound rate, without distinction, throughout all the parishes. By the same section the guardians are to set down and ascertain the sums necessary to be raised for maintaining and employing the poor, and for other the uses of the corporation, pursuant to the design of the act. Having so done, they are to issue a precept to the parish officers of each parish, requiring them to make and levy the rate accordingly. And the parish officers are, by the same section, empowered to proceed in obedience to the precept. Thus it appears that, without entirely abolishing the distinct existence of the parish or the functions of the parish officers, the rate is to be made equally on all, without any regard either to the different aggregate property in each, or the charge which may be brought on the common fund by each,—all for these purposes are treated as one parish. The same section requires expressly certain things to be done with regard to this rate, not the same as, but analogous to, that required by the statutes of Elizabeth and George the 2nd, with respect to the ordinary poor-rate. The ordinary poor-rate must be allowed by two parties and then published in the parish church: the rate under this act is not to be published, but only the sum intended to be raised, and the allowance by two Justices is to follow, not precede, the publication. Particulars such as these are unimportant in themselves, but they concur with others in shewing that the rate under consideration is the creature of the local act, and not made under the powers given by the general statute. But when thus made, what are the purposes to which it is to be applicable? To ascertain these we must turn to the earlier sections of the act. By the 10th section the guardians are authorized to rent or purchase premises to be used as workhouses or houses of industry. By the 13th they may purchase and provide such goods, cattle, chattels, provisions, clothing, utensils and materials as they should think proper, for effectually setting to work, receiving, employing, maintaining and clothing of the poor under their care and power: they have besides the care and power over, and are to provide for the maintenance and employ and other management, according to the act, of all the poor in Oxford wanting or seeking relief; and of such other poor as shall be taken into the house of industry, or under their care, some are to be relieved, and some are to be compelled to come into the house. These last are idle and disorderly persons who neglect or refuse to maintain or shall leave or threaten to leave their families, not being afterwards able to maintain themselves; and also all other people who beg, seek or want relief for the time being, and who belong to and ought, according to the act, or by any law in force, to be relieved and provided for by any of the parishes in Oxford. All these may be compelled to come into, work and dwell in the house, and to remain so long as the guardians are of opinion they are unable to maintain themselves or cannot be otherwise sufficiently provided for. They may be forced to work, and the idle and disorderly detained until by their labour they have indemnified the said corporation of guardians for the expense they have occasioned. By the 15th section poor children, who at any time shall be maintained by the said guardians shall be under their government until the age of fourteen, and then, or sooner, may be bound apprentices to any respectable person in England, or to any two of the guardians as trustees for the benefit of the corporation, and be employed in any trade or occupation, or in the sea service, as the guardians should think most proper; and the guardians have full power to maintain and provide for every such apprentice; they have also by this act full power and property over such apprentice, who shall be so bound to any two guardians, and by warrant under the seal of the corporation may apprehend him if he desert or does not duly perform the service, in any city, county or place in Great Britain, and imprison or punish, assign or discharge him. Further, they may hire out any of the poor children before the age of fourteen, and also any of the other poor within the said house to work in time of hay and corn harvest, or at any other time, for the benefit of the corporation, under such payment and for such time as they please: the poor persons are to labour to the best of their power, and after the expiration of the contract to return with their apparel, allowance being made for its necessary wear, to the house of industry; if not, they may be apprehended, and are liable to have such reasonable punishment and of such sort as the guardians shall direct; and in each and every case or occurrence whatever, wherein any of the poor shall not work and labour, and obey the rules and ordinances of the said corporation, from time to time, the guardians, or any five or more of them, shall have authority at any court to order such poor person or persons so misbehaving to be whipped in the house of correction, and to do such task-work, or to inflict such confinement or other reasonable punishment on him, her or them so misbehaving, as any such Court shall think fit or reasonable." By the 18th section in order to carry into execution the trusts reposed in them, the guardians are empowered to raise the sum of 10,000*l.* by the sale of life annuities, which by sect. 19 are to be paid out of the rates.

It appears then the rates made under the local act are applicable to the payment of annuities sold for the expense of providing the house of industry and other expenses incidental thereto, among which may be mentioned the salaries of officers to be appointed in any office or place thought needful by the guardians; and further, as regards the poor themselves, the rate is made applicable to a variety of purposes, connected, indeed, with their relief and maintenance, but yet going far beyond that to which the ordinary poor-rate is by law applicable. We have had occasion in passing to mention some extraordinary powers vested in the guardians: to these among others might be added the enactment in section 42, the main object of which is the settlement of bastards, but which provides also for the punishment of the parent, and enables any two of the guardians (being Justices of the Peace) at the end of a calendar month from the birth, and at any time after the mother shall on oath have declared who is the father of the child, if he be one of the poor under their care, to punish both father and mother by whipping, confinement or hard labour, or by distinguishing him or her by some badge or token of the offence to be fixed on the most conspicuous part of his or her outside garment. We notice powers such as these, not for the purpose of passing any opinion as to the wisdom or justice of such enactments, but because all these instances of unlimited confidence confided and placed in the guardians make it a more consistent interpretation of the whole scheme of the act that it was not intended that there should be any appeal against acts done under their authority beyond themselves. In the same (42nd) section the overseers and churchwardens are especially allowed to pursue the ordinary remedy against the father and mother of the bastard child for indemnity; whence the argument arises of the same sort as that noticed above, in respect of the families of militiamen, that the general parochial law as to the poor prevails only where it is expressly so stated. The 41st section is very material in the present inquiry. By it the guardians, and the parish officers of any parish out of the pale of those united under them, may contract for the maintenance and employ of the poor of any such parish in the house of industry; and, in case this be done, the poor of such parish are compellable to go to this house, and cannot be otherwise relieved; and they become subject in all respects to the rules and powers and punishments of the corporation. To indemnify the guardians, the overseers of the parish may make a rate; against which an appeal lies, not to the Quarter Sessions of the county, but to any two Justices residing next the parish within such time after such notice, and in such form as the act prescribed as to appeals against rates made under it in Oxford. The decision of the two Justices on the appeal is expressly declared to be final. We hardly know how a stronger indication of intention to take the whole matter out of the general law otherwise applicable to it could have been given.

We now arrive at the appeal clause itself—the 37th section. It applies in terms to cases only where any one apprehends himself to be unequally taxed, charged or rated. In this case the overseer is bound on request to shew the precept directing the rate and the rate itself, and permit copies or extracts to be made. Upon this, whether the party is aggrieved by the total amount to be levied on the city, or by the portion assessed on the individual, he may then, within a given time, complain to two Justices of the city, who are to issue their summons for the appearance of the parish officers before any three Justices of the city, (of whom the mayor or recorder is to be one), and any two of the guardians joined with them, and on the production before them of the precept and rate, the three Justices and two guardians, not being Justices, form the court of appeal. They are to examine all parties, and their evidence taken on oath, and make a final order in the premises, binding on the appellant and on all parties rated and liable to be rated in the same assessment, and on all other persons. In case, therefore, of alleged inequality in rating, a final court of appeal is expressly established, the decision of which is final. To this extent it seems clear that there can be no appeal to the Court of Quarter Sessions; unambiguous words or a necessary implication would be required for the establishment of two concurrent and final courts of appeal on the same subject-matter; and, whatever may be the extent of the term "inequality of rating," it is an argument that there is by a local act a court of appeal established, which shews that the subject of appeal was present to the minds of the framers of the act, and considered to be within the scheme of their legislation. What the extent of the term was much discussed in the argument, and it ought to receive a liberal interpretation. We think that a party appealing on the ground of inequality might certainly object, not only to the excess of his overrating and the too small rating of other individuals, but also to the total omission of rateable property; for this, as well as the former, occasions him to bear an unequal or too great a proportion of the common burthen. It is more doubtful whether he could object that he was rated for property not properly within the rate; that may be considered as not properly the subject of appeal but of an action, for, in such case, the overseers have rated him without jurisdiction. The unsatisfactory nature of the court of appeal was also made the subject of comment. That objection may be answered first, thus: a court which must contain at least three Justices of the Peace, of whom one must be the mayor or recorder, was, at the time at least, as competent a tribunal as the Quarter Sessions of the district, probably even of the county at large, at one or other of which an ordinary appeal against the rate might have been tried, and it was not the less satisfactory mode of trial on a question of rating, because there was power to examine parties on oath. But, secondly, it must be answered, that the arguments drawn either from the extent of the jurisdiction of the court or its competency are but of a secondary nature, and must not be relied upon as really concluding the matter. The first question would really remain the same if there was no court of appeal granted by the local act, and that is—Do the makers of the rate act under any authority given by the statute of Elizabeth? If they do, their act must be subject to the appeal given by that statute; if they do not, its appeal clause does not apply, and cannot be made by implication to operate on what has been done altogether under another statute. The examination of the local act shews that the rate does not take its inception from the parish officers; they neither determine when it shall be made, nor what shall be its amount, nor have they anything to do with its employment; when collected and paid over, it is appropriated, not to merely parochial purposes, not to such objects only as the ordinary poor-rate is confined to by the statute of Elizabeth, nor again can it be directed to many collateral and special purposes to which that rate has been made applicable by the subsequent statutes. It has been the manifest object of the act to take the city of Oxford out of the controul of the general poor law of the realm, and to vest the management of the poor (taking both those words in the largest sense,) in the hands of certain officers specially created, to whom larger powers are intrusted than have been intrusted to parish officers, or Courts of Quarter Sessions generally. Lastly, we find from examination that, whether wisely framed or not, the system is at least so complete, that, if the statute of Elizabeth had never existed, or was expressly repealed, every thing would have gone on in the city of Oxford without the slightest difficulty; except indeed that the local act takes the overseers and churchwardens as it found them, existing officers, and, as they were still to perform other functions of their office than those vested in them by the statute of Elizabeth, uses them for its own purposes, and deals with them as it does with Justices of the Peace, constables and other officers already known to the laws. To this extent, and no further, the statute of Elizabeth seems necessary to carrying on the system created by the local act.

These results of our examination lead directly to the conclusion that the Quarter Sessions had no jurisdiction to entertain this appeal, and that our judgment must be for the defendants.

1845. } KING AND ANOTHER v. THE May 9; } QUEEN, at the relation of June 14. } WILKINSON AND OTHERS.

Conspiracy—Indictment, Sufficiency of—Judgment—11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 70. s. 9.—Imprisonment, Reversal of Judgment of—Discharge.

The first count of an indictment charged, that the defendants did unlawfully combine, conspire, confederate and agree together to cheat and defraud certain liege subjects of our Lady the Queen, being tradesmen (not naming them), of divers large quantities of their goods and chattels. It then set out several overt acts, namely, the purchase by one of the defendants of goods of several tradesmen (naming them) upon credit, and of other tradesmen whose names were unknown, with directions that the goods should be delivered at the house of that defendant; that no payment was ever made for them; the pretence that certain debts were due from that defendant to the others, setting out the debts; that actions on account of these fictitious debts were commenced against such defendant by the others, and judgment signed for want of plea, and writs of fi. fa. sued out upon the judgments, by virtue of which the goods and chattels so fraudulently obtained were taken in execution; concluding with an averment, that so the defendants did cheat and defraud the tradesmen who supplied the goods, &c. All the overt acts were alleged to have been done in pursuance of the conspiracy:—Held, (reversing the judgment of the Court below), that the count was bad as containing a defective statement of the crime of conspiracy, as either the names of the objects of the conspiracy ought to have been given or an excuse made for not naming them; or if the intention was to cheat a certain definite class, the individuals of which were to be afterwards ascertained, it should have so described them:—Held, also, that this defective statement was not cured by referring to the whole of the count, none of the overt acts being shewn to be themselves indictable offences at common law; and that the averment that they were done in pursuance of the conspiracy would not help the want of a positive and direct statement, that the defendants did conspire to cheat and defraud the persons named in the overt acts.

On the trial of an indictment at Nisi Prius, judgment being pronounced by the Judge before whom the trial was had, under 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 70. s. 9, the entry on the postea was that the Judge "did order and adjudge," &c. Semble, that it is more proper that the established form of "it is considered," &c. should be adopted.

On the reversal by a court of error of a judgment of imprisonment pronounced by the Court of Queen's Bench, the Court declined to make an order that the plaintiff in error should be discharged out of custody, as the application ought to be made to the Court below.

Error from the Queen's Bench.

*Indictment for conspiracy. The defendants below having been convicted on the first count of the indictment, judgment was pronounced under the statute 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 70. s. 9, by Williams, J., before whom the indictment was tried, at the sittings in Middlesex, after Hil. term, 1844. Rules had been obtained on behalf of the defendants below for amending the judgment so pronounced, by arresting the judgment in the prosecution, which were, after argument, discharged by the Queen's Bench. — See The Queen v. King (1), where the first count of the indictment is set out.*

A writ of error (2) having been sued out

(1) 13 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 118.

(2) The following were the errors assigned:—That the first count of the indictment does not contain or shew any such conspiracy as by the law and statute of this realm, amounts to an indictable offence. That the first count does not contain any misde-by the defendants below on the above judgment, it was (May 9th, 1845) argued by—

Pashley, for the plaintiffs in error.—[He took a preliminary objection to the form of the judgment (3) pronounced at the trial by Williams, J., but as it appeared that the postea, upon which the judgment was entered, was not brought before the Court by certiorari, the Court held that they could not inquire into the form of the judgment until a certiorari had issued to bring up the Nisi Prius record.] The main objection is, that the first count, upon which alone the plaintiffs in error were convicted is bad. It is not sought to overrule The King v. Gill (4), for in that case meanour or offence, which by the laws and statutes of this realm is punishable by indictment. That the alleged conspiracy is not set forth with sufficient certainty. That it is alleged in the said first count that the defendants did conspire to cheat and defraud certain liege subjects of our Lady the Queen, being tradesmen, of divers large quantities of their goods and chattels, and yet the said certain liege subjects are neither named in the said count, nor is it therein averred that the names of the said certain liege subjects were unknown to the jurors who found the said indictment. That the record fails to shew the judgment pronounced against the defendants, at the sittings at Nisi Prius, in the said record specified, to be a valid and legal judgment.

The plaintiffs in error relied upon the following points:—

1.—That the first count of the indictment is bad, and that the judgment against the plaintiffs in error is bad, as alleged in the assignment of errors.

2.—That the judgment of imprisonment is pronounced in respect of the several offences charged in the thirty-three counts of the indictment, although the plaintiffs in error were found not guilty of thirty-two of these offences.

3.—That the said judgment of imprisonment (such imprisonment being to commence on the day on which the plaintiffs in error should respectively be taken to and confined in prison, and neither of the plaintiffs in error appearing to have been present when judgment was pronounced,) is an illegal judgment.

4.—That the record fails to shew that the said Justice had authority to pronounce judgment, when and where he is alleged to have pronounced it; and also fails to shew that the same judgment was duly, and as the law requires, considered by the said Justice who pronounced the same.

(3) The judgment as entered on the postea was as follows:—And thereupon, to wit, at the same sittings of Nisi Prius, according to the form of the statute in that case made and provided, the said Sir John Williams, Knight, the said Justice so assigned as aforesaid, did pronounce judgment, and did order and adjudge, &c.

the party intended to be defrauded was named; the specific pretences used were not set out. The persons whom it is the object of a conspiracy to injure must always be named where it is possible The Poulterers'-case (5). In The King v. De Berenger (6), and The Queen v. Peck (7), the class of persons intended to be practised upon was pointed out.

[ALDERSON, B.—There the intent was to injure a class of persons the individuals composing which were to be determined by future circumstances, and when those circumstances arose the class would be sufficiently designated. You may distinguish a class, although you do not name the individuals of which that class is composed, as persons resident in London or Westminster; but the question here is, whether the indictment would not be supported by evidence of a conspiracy to cheat persons at Liverpool.]

This count would be equally well supported by evidence of an intent to defraud persons at Hong Kong or any other place within the dominions of the British Crown. He referred to O'Connell v. the Queen (8). In The Queen v. Biss (9), an indictment for the murder of a male child of the age of six weeks, and not baptized, was held insufficient.

[POLLOCK, C.B.—The rule is, if a particular individual is pointed out by the indictment who is not named, it must either be stated that he had no name or that his name is to the jurors unknown.]

[ALDERSON, B.—There must always be such a reasonable certainty, that the accused party may know of what he is accused.]

He referred to Starkie, Crim. Pl., 188, Williams v. Bryant (10), The Queen v. Parker (11).

[CRESSWELL, J.—There the defendants might only have been endeavouring to get their own goods by false pretences.]

The King v. Spragg (12), which will be relied on by the other side, goes upon the ground that rejecting the allegation of the conspiracy, there still remained an indictable offence at common law. Here, from the mode in which the overt acts are stated, there is nothing from which it can be inferred that the parties intended to be defrauded were the parties from whom the goods were obtained.

[POLLOCK, C.B. referred to Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown, lib. 1. c. 72. There is a general term in the statute which has been overlooked. The particular kind of conspiracy mentioned in the act is to indict a person falsely, which is itself a misdemeanour.]

The King v. Eccles (13), The King v. Turner (14), The Queen v. Kenrick (15), The King v. Fowle (16), The King v. Biers (17), Archbold's Crim. Pleading, 716, were referred to.

[The argument on the other objections is omitted, as the judgment of the Court proceeded solely on the validity of the first count of the indictment.]

Cleasby, for the Crown.—As to the sufficiency of the offence charged: the difficulty of proving the offence of conspiracy as laid, has led to a generality of statement, which although it has sometimes been regretted by the Courts, has been sanctioned by usage. Here the conspiracy alleged is an agreement to go about defrauding certain liege subjects, being tradesmen.

[MAULE, J.—Suppose the indictment had been for conspiracy to cheat a certain liege subject, not naming him, and without any excuse for omitting the name: would that have sufficed?]

There may be a confederacy to defraud a person not yet fixed upon by the conspirators. It is enough if the person intended is afterwards ascertained by subsequent events.

[PARKE, B.—If you rest upon the conspiracy you ought to have stated it according to its effect, and to have named the persons actually defrauded as the persons intended to be defrauded.]

The conspiracy is to defraud such persons as they can get an opportunity of defrauding; it may be read as a conspiracy to defraud tradesmen, that is to say, such as they are enabled to practise upon. The statement is helped by the averment of what takes place afterwards—The King v. Spragg.

[CRESSWELL, J.—Strike out all about the overt acts, and suppose evidence given of a conspiracy to defraud A. and B, tradesmen, &c., would that have sustained the indictment as laid? How could the party plead autrefois acquit or convict?]

[ALDERSON, B.—If by the same statement you cover two different states of facts, on either of which the party is indictable, that cannot be convenient certainty.]

The cases cited on the other side do not apply, or are in favour of the indictment. In O'Connell v. the Queen, there was no statement of an illegal act, as intimidation need not be taken in a bad sense. The King v. Biers has no bearing upon the present case; it turned upon the misrecital of a statute. The King v. De Berenger and The Queen v. Peck are very similar to the present case, for there the indictment referred to a definite class of persons who were intended to be injured by the conspiracy, and no objection was made that the particular individuals were not named. But if the overt acts are read together with the allegation of the offence of conspiracy, there is no uncertainty; and The King v. Spragg is a strong authority that this may be done.

[PARKE, B.—I do not think you can draw up the latter part of the count to aid the generality of statement in the former part; and even if you did so, would you get a statement of an indictable offence, which there must be according to that case?]

[ALDERSON, B.—The only decision in The King v. Spragg was, that it was an executed conspiracy. Here the indictment states the offence generally, and then splits it into parts. The intention seems to have been to defraud any persons from whom the parties could get goods. If then you were to read the conspiracy as one merely to defraud the persons actually defrauded, you would have been exceedingly hampered at Nisi Prius.]

The overt acts are alleged to be done in pursuance of the conspiracy, and the first part of the count may be incorporated with the statement of the overt acts.

[POLLOCK, C.B.—The indictment contains a distinct allegation that the defendants below did defraud the persons mentioned in the different averments of the overt acts. If then the charge had been for a conspiracy to do those particular acts, it would have been a good indictment for the conspiracy.]

[PARKE, B.—Because the count contains a charge that they did these acts in pursuance of a conspiracy, you say it is equivalent to an allegation that they conspired to do the thing which they afterwards did. Now every indictment must contain a direct averment of the offence; the offence of conspiracy consists of an illegal agreement to do an act, and the act itself. Is it therefore enough to say that in pursuance of a certain conspiracy they did obtain goods?]

If necessary, it is contended that taking the whole of the count together it does contain a charge of conspiracy to defraud certain definite persons named in the count.

Pashley was heard in reply.

The judgment of the Court (18) was now (June 14) delivered by—

TINDAL, C.J.—In this case the learned counsel for the plaintiff in error relied mainly upon two objections:—First, that the judgment of the learned Judge pronounced at Nisi Prius under the provisions of the 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 70. s. 9. was erroneous, inasmuch as it was entered on the postea in language which the law does not recognize as proper for that purpose, and he cited the case of The King v. Kenworthy (19), and the several authorities therein referred to. The form used in the postea is that the Judge pronounced judgment and did order and adjudge, &c. We do not think it necessary to decide whether, when the judgment is pronounced under the acts of parliament above referred to, the usual and appropriate language when judgment is given by a Court, namely, "it is considered," must be made use of; perhaps it may be better that the established words of art and form should not be omitted on all future occasions. The second and more important objection was, that the indictment itself was bad, and we are all, upon consideration, of opinion that this objection must prevail.

Mr. Pashley, for the plaintiff in error, argued, that this indictment was bad, because it contained a defective statement of the crime of conspiracy, and we agree that it is defective. The charge is, that the defendants below conspired to cheat and defraud certain liege subjects, being tradesmen, of their goods, &c.: the objection is, that these persons should have been designated by their christian and surnames, or an excuse given, such as that their names are to the jurors unknown; or, if this allegation imports that the intention of the conspirators was to cheat certain definite individuals, as, for instance, those whom they should afterwards deal with, or afterwards fix upon, it ought to have described them in appropriate terms, shewing that the objects of the conspiracy were at the time of entering into it ascertained, as was in fact done in the case of The King v. De Berenger and The Queen v. Peck. It was argued, that if on the trial of the indictment it had appeared that the intention was to cheat not certain individuals, but such as the conspirators should afterwards trade with or select, they would have been entitled to an acquittal; and we all agree in this view of the case, and think that the reasons assigned against the validity of this part of the indictment are correct.

But it was then argued by the learned counsel for the Crown that, supposing these objections to be well founded, this defect in the allegation of the conspiracy was cured by referring to the whole of the indictment, the part stating the overt acts as well as that stating the conspiracy; and the case of The King v. Spragg was cited as an authority that the whole ought to be taken together. The point decided in that case appears to have been merely this, that in an indictment for a conspiracy, although the conspiracy be insufficiently charged, yet if the rest of the indictment contains a good charge of a misdemeanour, the indictment is good; and Lord Mansfield distinguishes between the allegation of the unexecuted conspiracy to prefer an indictment, as to the sufficiency of which he gave no opinion, and that of the actually preferring of the indictment maliciously and without probable cause, which he calls a complete conspiracy, actually carried into execution; and this he holds to be clearly sufficient; and no doubt it was so, for, rejecting the statement of the unexecuted conspiracy, the indictment undoubtedly contains a complete description of the common law misdemeanour; but if we examine the allegations in the present indictment, there is no sufficient description of any act done after a conspiracy which amounts to a misdemeanour at common law; none of the overt acts are shewn by proper averments to be indictable in themselves. The obtaining goods, for instance, from certain named individuals upon credit, without any averment of the use of false tokens, is not an indictable misdemeanour at common law; and if it is said that because it is averred to have been done in pursuance of the conspiracy before mentioned, it must be taken to be equivalent to an averment that the conspiracy was to cheat the named individuals of their goods, the answer is, first, that it does not necessarily follow that because the goods were obtained in pursuance of a conspiracy to cheat some persons, the conspiracy was to cheat the persons from whom the goods were obtained; they might have been obtained from A. in execution of an ulterior purpose to cheat B. of the goods; and, secondly, another answer is, that if the averment is to be taken to be equivalent to one that the goods were obtained from the named individuals in pursuance of an illegal conspiracy to cheat and defraud those named individuals of their goods, it would still be defective, as not containing a direct and positive averment that the defendant did conspire to cheat and defraud those persons, which an indictment for a conspiracy, when a conspiracy itself is the crime, ought certainly to contain; the averment describing the offence ought to be direct and positive. The other allegations of what are termed overt acts are open to the same objection; in none of them is there a complete description of a common law misdemeanour, independent of the conspiracy, the allegation of which is insufficient, as not being direct and positive. For these reasons we are of opinion that the indictment is defective, and that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench must be reversed.

Pashley then applied for an order that the plaintiff in error be discharged from custody, and referred to The King v. Bourn (20), and The Queen v. Silversides (21).

Cleasby suggested that the proper judgment would be, that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench be reversed, and that the plaintiff in error be restored to all he has lost thereby. The transcript of the record will be returned to the Court below, and the judgment of this Court will be entered on the roll, and that Court will award execution on it.

Per Curiam.—The plaintiff in error is restored to all he has lost by reason of the judgment. All that we can do is to pronounce the judgment in the proper form, to be entered on record in that form. The cases cited are not quite parallel: these were both cases of error from an inferior court, to which the court of error had no power to send the record back to have the judgment entered up on it. We think the application should be to the Court of Queen's Bench, or, in case of long vacation, to a single Judge of that Court, at chambers. The plaintiff in error would not, of course, be kept in prison during the vacation.

1845. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS
June 27. } OF HICKLING.

Highway—Order as to Repair of, under 34 Geo. 3. c. 64.—Estoppel—Jurisdiction.

An order of Magistrates under 34 Geo. 3. c. 64, for dividing a road lying partly in one parish and partly in another, by a transverse line for the purpose of repair, such order pursuing the form given by that statute, is conclusive as to the liability of each parish to repair the portions of road respectively allotted to them. And it is not open to either parish on an indictment for the non-repair of the portion so allotted, to impeach the jurisdiction of the Magistrates by producing evidence to prove that no part of the road ever was within such parish.

The first count of the indictment stated that from the time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, there was and yet is a certain common and ancient Queen's highway, leading from the town of Newark-upon-Trent, in the county of Nottingham, towards and unto the town of Leicester, in the county of Leicester, called the Foss Road, used by and for all the liege subjects of our Lady the Queen and her predecessors, with their horses, coaches, carts and other carriages to go, return, &c. at their free will and pleasure, and that a certain part of the said highway, being so much thereof as lies between a certain turnpike road, leading from the town of Nottingham, to Melton Mowbray, in the county of Leicester, beginning at the said turnpike road and near to a certain inn, called New Inn, and extending southward to the southern boundary of the parish of Hickling in the said county, and being in length 858 yards, and in breadth 20 yards, one side of which said last-mentioned part of the said highway, being the eastward side thereof, adjoining to the said parish of Hickling, lies within the parish of Hickling aforesaid, in the county of Nottingham aforesaid, and the other part of the said highway, being the westward side thereof, adjoining to the parish of Widmerpool, in the county of Nottingham aforesaid, lies within the said parish of Widmerpool, in the said county, and that on or about the 3rd of August, in the year of our Lord 1816, upon complaint duly made before John Elliott and Robert

Padley, Esquires, then being two of His then Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said county of Nottingham, by virtue and in pursuance of the provisions of an act of parliament passed in the 34th year of the reign of His late Majesty King George III. intituled 'An act for the more effectually repairing of such parts of the highways of this kingdom as are to be repaired by two parishes,' the whole of such part of the said highway beginning at the said turnpike road as aforesaid, and extending as aforesaid, being in length 858 yards, and in breadth 20 yards, was by the said Justices divided by a transverse line into two parts, and by their order then duly made under their hands and seals it was declared, adjudged, and ordered in the following manner, that is to say, that at the distance of 478 yards, measuring from the said turnpike road, leading from the town of Nottingham aforesaid, to Melton Mowbray aforesaid, and near to the said inn called New Inn, there should be erected certain posts or stones, marked "H." and "W," on each side of the said highway; and the whole of the said highway, from the said turnpike road near to the said inn to the posts or stones, should from time to time, and at all times thereafter, be repaired by the said parish of Hickling; and that the remainder of the said highway, from the said posts or stones marked "H." to the southward boundary of the said parish of Hickling, being the distance of 380 yards, should from time to time, and at all times thereafter, be repaired by the said parish of Widmerpool; and such order and a plan of the said highway, and the allotment thereof, were afterwards, to wit, on the 14th day of October 1816, duly filed with the clerk of the peace of the said county, according to the provisions of the said statute; whereby and by force of the said statute the said parish of Hickling then became and was, and thence continually has been and now is, bound as of common right to maintain and keep in repair the said parts of the said highway so allotted to the parish of Hickling as aforesaid. That the whole of the said part of the said highway so allotted to the parish of Hickling aforesaid, situate and extending as aforesaid, containing in length 478 yards, and in breadth 20 yards, on the 14th of September, in the seventh year, &c., and continually afterwards, until the day of the taking of this inquisition at the parishes aforesaid, respectively was and yet is ruinous, miry, &c.

Second count, for the non-repair of a certain part of a common and ancient Queen's highway, called the Foss Road, situate in the parish of Hickling.

Third count, for the non-repair of a certain part of a common Queen's highway, situate in the same parish.

Plea—Not guilty.

The indictment was tried, before Coltman, J., at the Summer Assizes for the county of Nottingham, in 1844. The order of Justices for dividing the road (1) was put in and read; and it was contended, on the authority of Basten v. Carew (2), and Brittain v. Kinnaird (3), that the order was conclusive of the fact of the liability of the parish of Hickling to repair the portion of the road allotted to them. Coltman, J. held, that the order was not conclusive, and various witnesses were called to disprove the fact of any portion of the road having been ever repaired by the parish of Hickling; and there being no evidence, independently of the order, to shew that any part of the road was in that parish, the jury ultimately returned a verdict for the defendant.

In Michaelmas term—

Wildman having obtained a rule nisi for staying the judgment—

Whitehurst and Mellor now shewed cause.—First, if the question depends on the evidence of the witnesses, it will appear that there was no evidence that the part indicted was within Hickling parish, or that that parish had ever repaired it; but, secondly, it will be contended that the order of Justices is conclusive as to the liability. Now, it is not disputed that in order to give the Magistrates jurisdiction, the road must lie in the two parishes; and they cannot make facts to give themselves jurisdiction—Welch v. Nash (4). The Magistrates have a limited jurisdiction only, not to determine in which parish the road is, but to divide it in case it shall be in the two parishes. The order does not even assume to adjudicate that the road in point of fact is in the one parish or the other—Watson v. Bodell (5). The case of Brittain v. Kinnaird does not apply. There the Magistrate found the fact, which gave him the jurisdiction, and into which fact he had power to inquire. This is like the case of a warrant of distress for poor-rate, which may be impeached by proof that the lands rated are not within the parish for which the rate was made,—or for a sewer rate, which may be impeached by shewing that the lands are not within the jurisdiction of the commissioners, or receive no benefit—Carratt v. Morley (6).

Willmore and Hayes, contra.—It is impossible to look at the act of parliament without seeing that the Magistrates have in effect jurisdiction to say how the road shall be repaired in future; and if this order is not conclusive, parties may at any time practically repeal the act, and cancel everything that has been done under it, by merely suggesting that the road is not in the parish. The statute 34 Geo. 3. c. 64. s. 2. enacts, "That after the order and plan have been filed with the clerk of the peace, the parishes shall be bound to keep in repair the parts allotted as of common right, and shall be liable to be indicted for neglecting to do so." Section 7. gives an appeal to the Sessions.

[PATTESON, J.—I observe that the form given by the act of parliament does not state in terms the fact of the road being in the one parish or the other.]

In this case the form given by the act has been exactly pursued; and, in fact, the order does set out the information, which states the fact of the road being part in one parish and part in the other. The Court will look at the whole proceedings. This is not like a case in which it might, perhaps, be shewn by affidavit, that the Magistrates had in fact travelled out of their jurisdiction—The Queen v. Bolton (8), but comes within the principle of Brittain v. Kinnaird, Aldridge v. Haines (9), Basten v. Carew.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It appears to me that the question as to the road being in one parish or the other for the purpose of repair was a matter within the jurisdiction of the Magistrates, and that they have exercised their jurisdiction.

PATTESON, J.—The whole proceedings shewed that it was a necessary part of the inquiry to ascertain the parish in which each part of the road was. I think therefore that the order was conclusive within the principle of all the decided cases. I think the question comes within the principle of Brittain v. Kinnaird. The Magistrates of necessity find the fact in order to proceed to divide the road. Here they pursue the form given by the act: that form does not in terms say that the road is in the one parish or the other, but the act gives the Magistrates power to inquire into that, and they are in fact bound to pursue the form which the act gives. If the form had been that of the Magistrates, I should have been of a different opinion.

WILLIAMS, J.—I cannot distinguish the case from that of an order made in a matter in which the Magistrates are in terms directed to inquire, and everything appears on the face of the order to give them jurisdiction. Here the fact of their having inquired is not disputed; and if we are now to inquire into the fact of the road being in the parish, it is hard indeed to say where we must stop.

The rule for a certiorari to remove an indictment for a misdemeanour, is not necessarily absolute in the first instance.

Peacock applied, on behalf of the defendants, for a certiorari, to remove an indictment for a nuisance, which had been found at the Middlesex Sessions. He submitted, that as it was a misdemeanour, he was entitled to a rule absolute in the first instance, and cited The Queen v. Spencer (1), where Littledale, J. says, "In cases of misdemeanour, the rule for a certiorari is absolute in the first instance; but in cases of felony, it is a rule nisi."

COLERIDGE, J.—The Master says that is not the practice; and I have known many cases myself where cause has been shewn on such a rule. It seems right that the prosecutor should have an opportunity of giving an answer to the application. As to the case cited, taking it altogether, the learned Judge seemed to think it was discretionary. Take a rule, therefore, to shew cause. Cause to be shewn in two days.

Poor Rate—Rateability—Occupation—Shareholders of Rateable Property.

Where a bridge and lands, and premises connected with it, had been, in 1729, conveyed to trustees, upon trust to permit certain subscribers (who had built the bridge) and their heirs, &c., to receive the tolls, and to have the sole management of the bridge, and the shares of the subscribers had been subdivided into a large number of shares; and A. B, one of such shareholders, resided in parish C, at one end of the bridge, and a toll collector was stationed at the other end of the bridge in parish D:—Held, that the subscribers were the occupiers of the bridge and tolls, and that the rate was well made upon them; and that a warrant of distress might well issue against A. B. for the whole of the rate.

A rule had been obtained for a writ of mandamus, directed to Thomas Paynter, Esq., one of the magistrates of the police courts of the metropolis, sitting at the police court of Wandsworth, in the county of Surrey, commanding him to issue his warrant of distress against the goods of H. Chasemore, for 48*l.* 10*s.*, being the amount assessed upon him, jointly with others, in a rate made for the relief of the poor of the parish of St. Mary, Putney, in the said county, within the metropolitan police district, on the 3rd of October 1844. The affidavits in support of the rule set out an indenture of the 11th of November 1729, between the commissioners and trustees appointed by certain acts of parliament, for building a bridge from Fulham to Putney, of the one part, and Sir Robert Walpole, and twenty-nine other parties therein named, being all contractors and subscribers for building the said bridge, of the second part; and the Right Hon. Arthur Onslow, Esq., Speaker of the House of Commons, and thirteen other persons therein named, of the third part, by which, after reciting that it had been contracted and agreed that the thirty subscribers and contractors should make and construct the bridge, according to the provisions of the several acts of parliament, and keep it in repair for ever, and that the commissioners and trustees, and their successors, when the bridge should have been built, would convey over in perpetuity all the tolls, revenues and income of the said bridge, &c. to the subscribers, to hold as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, or as such subscribers should appoint; and also, after reciting that the subscribers had subscribed the sum of 30,000*l.*, and had paid such other sums as they had contracted to pay, and had built the bridge, the said commissioners and trustees granted and assigned to the said A. Onslow, Esq. and the said thirteen other trustees, the said bridge, tolls, revenues, &c., in fee, upon trust, to permit and suffer the said Sir R. Walpole and the other twenty-nine subscribers, their heirs and assigns, to have, receive, and take the tolls and profits of the said bridge, and to have the sole management thereof; the tolls to be divided among the subscribers, with a proviso, that, in case of default made by the subscribers, in the payment of certain annual sums, stipulated to be paid by them, the said A. Onslow, Esq. and the other said trustees, their heirs, &c., or any five of them, should receive and take the tolls, and have the management thereof. The original thirty shares had been subdivided amongst a great number of persons. The bridge united the parish of Fulham, in the county of Middlesex, with the parish of Putney, in the county of Surrey, the abutments, foundation and toll-house on the Surrey side, being in the parish of St. Mary, Putney; and the abutments, foundation and toll-house on the Middlesex side, being in the parish of All Saints, Fulham. Chasemore was the owner or proprietor of a share or shares in the bridge, and resided in the toll-house on the Middlesex side, a collector being stationed in the toll-house on the Surrey side; and, prior to the month of November 1842, the proprietors of the bridge had been from time to time rated to the relief of the poor of the parish of St. Mary, Putney, and such rates had been paid by the said Henry Chasemore, on behalf of the said proprietors. On the 3rd of October 1844, an assessment was made for the relief of the poor of the parish of St. Mary, Putney, of 1*s.* in the pound; and the name of Henry Chasemore appeared amongst ninety-eight others in the column set apart for the names of the occupiers of that part of Putney Bridge situate in the parish of Putney, and land, upon which the same is built, together with the toll-house and other buildings, the amount of the rate being 48*l.* 10*s.*, the rate being on all the proprietors jointly. The rate having, on the 22nd of November, been demanded of Chasemore, who refused to pay it, a summons, under the hand and seal of one of the Magistrates of the district, was issued on the 16th of January, directed to all the proprietors of the bridge, ninety-nine in number, requiring them to appear before the sitting Magistrate, on a day therein named, to shew cause why they should not pay the said rate, and on the given day the names of all the persons named in the rate having been called over, three only, of whom Chasemore was one, appeared; and evidence was then given before the Magistrate of the meeting and allowance of the rate, and of a demand on Chasemore; and that there had been no appeal against the said rate, and that Chasemore was the general agent on behalf of the proprietors of the bridge. Chasemore, by his attorney, took several objections to the rate, which were overruled by the Magistrate, who, however, declined to issue a distress warrant, without the direction of this Court. Chasemore made an affidavit in answer to the rule, in which he stated that he acted as secretary to the proprietors, but not as general manager; that he paid all the tolls received by him into a bank, to be divided among the shareholders; that he resided in a part of the tollhouse on the Middlesex side; that the furniture was his own, and that the shareholders as a body had nothing on which a distress could be made.

Montagu Chambers and C. Clark shewed cause, in behalf of Chasemore.—The Magistrate was right in refusing a warrant against Chasemore alone for the whole rate, there being ninety-eight others mentioned in the summons.

[WILLIAMS, J.—Would not the question of amount be matter of appeal?]

If the Magistrate considered that he was not the occupier, he was right in refusing the warrant—Milward v. Caffin (1). Chasemore was entitled to have the exact amount due from him demanded of him—Hurill v. Wink (2), Harper v. Carr (3); and the Court will not interfere where the Magistrate has decided the question—Ex parte Ackworth (4).

Crompton and Pashley, contra.—Several objections were urged before the Magistrate as to the allowance and publication of the rate, but those were properly overruled by him. The rate has not been appealed against. Milward v. Caffin was decided on the ground that the party had no rateable property whatever.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—My difficulty is to see who the bridge belongs to.]

It appears that the subscribers, of whom Chasemore may be considered one, jointly received the tolls. It does not appear that there are any trustees at present in existence. This is a question of occupation, not of inhabitancy; and, therefore, not like the case of partners.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—Is it distinctly made out that Chasemore has rateable property in the parish?]

The whole property is rateable, and the amount for which it is rateable in the parish of Putney is not disputed. It is immaterial that this party resides in a toll-house in another parish.

Moody, for Mr. Paynter.—The Magistrate was under a difficulty in issuing a warrant, as prayed, against Chasemore only, the summons being directed against all the ninety-nine shareholders.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This rule must be made absolute. It is true that the original trustees do not now appear to exist, but if they did, they would hold the property for the benefit of the shareholders at large: the latter are the occupiers, and are properly rated. As to the objection to the warrant being issued against one, the answer is, that here is a tenant in common, who is rated with others; if he pays the rate, he may get his contribution from the other tenants in common.

PATTESON, J.—I thought at first that the subscribers had had nothing to do with the bridge, but that the trustees appointed under the act of parliament took the legal estate, in order to pay over the shares; but it turns out that they were originally the owners, but assigned over to the subscribers or contractors to hold as tenants in common, the words used being to "hold to the subscribers, &c., as tenants in common, &c., or as such subscribers shall appoint," and that the trustees are not to have a right of occupation, unless default is made by the subscribers in the payment of certain sums they are charged with the payment of, and then, during the time of default, the trustees are to have the management. I think there is a sufficient occupation shewn by the proprietors, of whom Chasemore is one.

WILLIAMS, J.—This property is clearly rateable. Is it then occupied by anybody? and if so, are the trustees the occupiers, or the other parties who are called the subscribers? The trustees are out of the case altogether; the deed shews that they have no interest as occupiers. The only doubt is, whether Chasemore is or is not liable to the warrant for the whole rate. I do not wish to speak with confidence on the point; but it strikes me that the question of occupation is the only one open to him here, and that the other questions could only be matter of appeal. If he is occupier at all we cannot here inquire into the extent of his occupation.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The only doubt which could even exist in this case was, whether Chasemore and the others were occupiers at all, and, therefore, whether they were rate-

Mandamus—Return—Demurrer.

After a demurrer to a return made to a mandamus by the party to whom it is directed, the Court will let in the party really interested to make a return.

A writ of mandamus issued to Mr. Paynter, in pursuance of the decision in the preceding case, on the 15th of May, to which, on the 23rd of May, Mr. Paynter made a return. To this return the prosecutors demurred. A rule nisi was subsequently obtained on the part of Chasemore calling on the prosecutors to shew cause why he should not be permitted to frame an additional return to the mandamus.

Crompton and Pashley (June 12) shewed cause.—The application is too late. Chasemore appeared by counsel to shew cause against the issuing of the writ, and, if he desired to make the return, should have applied to do so at the time the rule for the mandamus was made absolute; or at least he should have made the application before the return was demurred to. By the stat. 1 Will. 4. c. 21. s. 4, the Court is empowered to grant relief, and make rules as to third parties against whom a writ of mandamus is not directly issued, as they may to parties, under the Interpleader Act. An application under the Interpleader Act must be made before plea. No grounds are stated for the application, nor is there any affidavit negating collusion with the Magistrate, for the purpose of delay.

Montagu Chambers, contra, was not heard.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I cannot see that the prosecutor can lose anything by consenting to this application. If we saw that any unfair advantage was given to Chase-more, who is the substantial defendant in the case, even if the prosecutors lost any time by allowing him to join in the return, or if there was any reason to apprehend any frivolous objection was to be raised, I should be disposed not to accede to this application. We should look narrowly at these cases, to see that prosecutors are not damnified by our allowing parties to come in and frame the return to the mandamus. As I do not see this in the present case, I think the application should be granted.

PATTESON, J.—The application is for an additional return. The act of 1 Will. 4. c. 21. gives us no power to allow that. It is true that it could not very well have been asked that the applicant should frame the return, the return having already been made. The return must be framed, stating the facts, and incorporating the Magistrate's return.

WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

COLERIDGE, J.—The demurrer need not be done away with. The prosecutor can still demur to the return of the Magistrate.

Settlement by Estate—Payment of Acknowledgment to Lord of Manor.

A, in 1769, inclosed a piece of land from the waste, and built a cottage thereon, in which he resided sixty years. During the whole time a yearly rent of 2s. 6d. was paid by A. to the lord of the manor for the cottage; and on a further inclosure of land for a garden, the rent was increased to 3s.:—Held, that A. gained no settlement thereby.

On an appeal against an order of two Justices of the county of Chester, whereby the township of Cuddington was adjudged to be the last legal settlement of William Tomlinson, a pauper lunatic, and the overseers of that township were ordered to pay certain sums of money for his removal to the county lunatic asylum, and for his maintenance therein, the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court on the following—

CASE.

The grandfather of the pauper, some time previous to the year 1769, had inclosed a piece of ground from the waste lands in the township of Cuddington, belonging to the lord of the manor, and had built a cottage thereon, in which he continued to reside till his death, in the year 1828 or 1829. It appeared by the production of receipts, which were proved by the mother of the pauper to have been found amongst her husband's father's papers at his death, that for some time a yearly rent of 2s. 6d. was paid to the lord of the manor, William Drake, Esq., which, on a further inclosure of land for a garden, had been increased to 3s., sixpence being added for the garden. One of the earlier receipts so produced was as follows:—

"September 26, 1769. Received of James Tomlinson the sum of 2s. 6d., being a year's cottage rent due to William Drake, Esq. at Lady-day next.

"Thomas Roylance."

It was also proved by the mother of the pauper that her husband was the only son and heir-at-law of the grandfather, after whose death, about the year 1829, she and her husband's family went to live in the said cottage, and resided there for thirteen years; that her husband was working in another township, and came over to the cottage every Saturday, and remained there till the Monday morning; and so continued to reside, from the Saturday to the Monday, for several years, down to the time of his death. During the whole of this time the yearly rent of 3s. was always paid to the lord of the manor; she had latterly paid it herself to the agent, and during the last year the agent had spoken of raising the rent. Upon this evidence the respondents contended that the pauper had a derivative settlement in the appellant township, neither he nor his father having gained any settlement in their own right.

The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether, under the circumstances stated, the Sessions were right in deciding that the pauper was settled in the appellant township. If this Court should be of opinion that he was so settled, then the order of Sessions was to be confirmed. If not, the order of Sessions was to be quashed.

Townsend, in support of the order of Sessions.—The Sessions drew the proper inference from the evidence. Payment of an unvaried rent for a long series of years to the lord of a manor is evidence of a title in him to the rent only, and not to the land, for the presumption is that the rent is a quit rent—Doe d. Whittick v. Johnson (1). The present case is still stronger than Doe d. Whittick v. Johnson, for here the payment has been for nearly seventy years.

[PATTESON, J.—The authority of that case has been shaken, if not overruled. Besides, here the origin of the payment of the rent is shewn: it was a compensation to the lord for the inclosure from the waste.]

The Court will be slow to remove a pauper, after a possession of more than twenty years—The King v. Bitton (2). In The King v. Garway (3), although a pauper had paid an acknowledgment of 2s. 6d. to the lord of the manor for thirty years, in respect of a cottage erected on the waste by his father, he was held to have gained a settlement thereby.

[PATTESON, J.—What state of things do you suppose the Court below to have presumed?]

A licence from the lord may be presumed.

[PATTESON, J.—But in The King v. Hornodon on the Hill (4), it was held that the grant of a licence from the lord to erect a cottage and inclose a piece of ground, rendering an annual rent, did not confer a settlement on the grantee, though he built the cottage and resided therein more than a year. Is the Court to presume a grant by deed, reserving a rent-charge? Can any instance be found of the creation of a quit-rent?]

Whateley and Egerton, contra.—The payment in this case was not a quit-rent, but an acknowledgment of the lord's title; the sum paid was increased when the garden was added. But even if it was a quit-rent, no settlement was acquired, for in the absence of a custom for that purpose the lord cannot make a new grant of copyhold—The King

(2) Burr. S.C. 631.

(3) Ibid. 632.

(4) 4 Mau. & Selw. 562.

v. Hornchurch (5). In The King v. Bitton, there had been adverse possession without any payment whatever, for more than twenty years. And in The King v. Garway, the pauper's father had been in possession for thirty years without any payment of rent. The pauper in that case, therefore, had a good settlement by descent, though he afterwards by some mistake paid an acknowledgment for the premises. (They were then stopped.)

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—The Sessions here had no materials on which to found the decision to which they came. The origin of these payments was proved, and they were clearly an acknowledgment of the lord's title during the whole time the grandfather was in possession. There was, therefore, no adverse possession, as there was in the case of The King v. Garway.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Order quashed.

At the trial, before Coleridge, J., at the Summer Assizes for Devon, 1843, it appeared that the plaintiff, who was a toll collector, had been imprisoned under the following warrant of commitment under the 4 Geo. 4. c. 95. s. 30 (1); the defendants

(1) Which enacts, "That if any collector of the said tolls shall demand and take a greater or less toll from any person than he shall be authorized to do by virtue of the powers of any act, or of the orders and resolutions of the trustees or commissioners made in pursuance thereof.....then in every such case every such toll collector shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 5l. for every such offence." The 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 147. provides, "That if any action or suit shall be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of this act, then and in every such case such action or suit shall be commenced or prosecuted within three months after the fact committed, and not afterwards, and shall be brought in the county or place where the cause of action shall have arisen, &c., and the defendants in such action shall and may plead the general issue and give the special matter in evidence, &c. .... and if the matter or thing complained of shall appear to have been done under the authority and in the execution of the act .... then the jury shall find for the defendant or defendants," &c.

who signed the warrant being two magistrates for the county of Devon.

The following conviction was also put in:—

"County of Devon (to wit).—Be it remembered, that on the 10th day of October, in the sixth year, &c., Joseph Stamp, of &c., collector, &c., is convicted before us, J. S. and G. S. C., two &c., for that he, the said Joseph Stamp, on &c., at &c., being then and there collector of tolls at a certain toll gate, then called &c. upon a certain turnpike road, then leading from &c. to &c. did demand and take from one John Lee, at the said gate, a certain toll, to wit, the toll or sum of 4*d.* as and for a toll then and there payable by the said John Lee, at such gate, for a certain horse then and there drawing a certain cart upon two wheels only, and which said cart was then and there drawn by such one horse only, and driven by him the said J. Stamp was then and there authorized to take for the cause aforesaid, by virtue of the powers of any act, or of the orders and resolutions of the trustees or commissioners of the said turnpike road, made in pursuance thereof, contrary to the form of the statute made in the 4 Geo. 4. intituled, &c. And we do hereby declare and adjudge that the said J. Stamp hath forfeited for his said offence the sum of 5*l.* Given under our hands and seals, &c.

"J. S. (L.S.)

"G. S. C. (L.S.)"

For the plaintiff it was objected, that the commitment was wholly bad, as it did not follow the words of the act of parliament, or describe an offence within it, nor indeed refer to any act of parliament with certainty; secondly, that it was not supported by the conviction; thirdly, that the conviction itself was bad, for not setting out the order of the commissioners, fixing the toll at 6*d.* —Newman v. the Earl of Hardwicke (2), The King v. Nield (3).

The Judge overruled the formal objections on reference to the 137th section of the act; and, with reference to the 147th section, he told the jury that if they thought the defendants bond fide believed that they were putting the power of the act in force, they must, at all events, find for the defendants.

A verdict having passed for the defendants,

Rogers, in Michaelmas term, 1843, obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection; against which, at the sittings after Easter term, 1844,

Cockburn, Bevan and Montague Smith shewed cause.—First, the commitment is correct in form. It substantially describes an offence under the act of parliament. The substance of the offence is the taking of less than the legal toll. That offence is substantially stated in the commitment—

(2) 8 Ad. & El. 124; s. c. 7 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 101.

(3) 6 East, 417.

Goff's case (4), Rogers v. Jones (5). The conviction states, that the defendant took a toll less than was required, and it further goes on to state what the larger toll was that he ought to have taken.

[COLERIDGE, J.—How could we see, upon the conviction being brought up, that the toll which he took was not the proper toll?]

That would be matter of proof. The conviction follows the form given in the statute as far as it goes; it may indeed be said to set out more than was necessary, as it is not necessary to set out that which is matter of evidence, and not required by the statute—Chaney v. Payne (6), The King v. Judd (7). If the conviction be good, the commitment, which need not be so precise as the conviction, is supported by it—Daniell v. Philipps (8), The King v. Taylor (9), The King v. Rogers (10). But, lastly, the Magistrates having clearly acted in the bond fide belief that they were acting in the execution of the power of the act of parliament, are entitled to a verdict under the 147th section.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—That bond fide belief might entitle them to notice of action.]

Here the 147th section operates as a defence to the action, in addition to the requisition of notice. The cases which have been decided on the subject of notice, therefore, apply to the defence on the merits—Weller v. Toke (11), Davis v. Capper (12), Beechey v. Sides (13), Jones v. Gooday (14), Cann v. Clipperton (15), Norris v. Smith (16), Lord Oakley v. the Kensington Canal Company (17), Wells v. Ody (18). Magistrates never would be safe in acting under the statute, unless the statute were held to protect them where they act bond fide.

Rogers and Cornish, contra.—First, the commitment is bad, and is not supported by the conviction. The commitment does not state anything which amounts to an offence. The words or the substance of the act should be adhered to; the offence is the “demanding and taking.” The commitment stated an offence of omission, not of commission, and is a material and fatal variance from the statute—Davison v. Gill (19), Wickes v. Clutterbuck (20), Griffith v. Harris (21). It should at all events bring the offence within the statute—The King v. Judd. The commitment also varies from the conviction, and is therefore bad; and the Court will make no presumption to support it—Re Elmy and Sawyer (22), Rogers v. Jones, The Queen v. Chaney (23). It is not identified as a commitment under this particular conviction; as for anything that appears it might be for something done under some other act of parliament. But, secondly, the conviction is also bad for not setting out the order of the commissioners, if such there were, giving the minimum toll.

[COLERIDGE, J.—If it had set out an order for a less sum to be taken, still it must have gone on further to state that there was no act or order giving a still less toll.]

Enough should be stated to shew a departure from the acts of parliament, and the orders of the commissioners. In Newman v. the Earl of Hardwicke (24), a conviction under 11 Geo. 4. c. 64. and 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. against a party for selling beer to be consumed on his premises “at a time declared to be unlawful by an order of the Justices for the county,” was held bad in The King v. Nield (25), as was also a conviction for entering into an agreement “for controuling A. B. a manufacturer, &c.” without stating the agreement. The cases of The Queen v. Nott (26), The Queen v. Chaney, The Queen v. King (27), The King v. James (28), are clear authorities that whether the conviction be right or wrong, the Court will not support a commitment which on the face of it is not supported by the provisions of the statute under which it is drawn. Then, lastly, the defendants are not protected by the 147th section. To hold them protected would be to render nugatory all the acts which have been passed, making notice to Magistrates necessary before bringing action, and giving them the opportunity of tendering amends. To give immunity to Magistrates was not the object of the act. When a Magistrate acts under a bond fide belief that he is proceeding in pursuance of a statute, he is undoubtedly entitled to notice—Read v. Cowmeadow (29), Ballinger v. Ferris (30); but whether a defendant is entitled to a verdict on the merits, and whether he is entitled to notice, are very different inquiries—Wedge v. Berkeley (31). No case has yet gone the length of deciding that a bond fide belief by the Magistrate that he is acting in pursuance of a statute, is a defence on the merits. Such a construction would do away with the necessity for notice in almost every case, and saddle a plaintiff with treble costs.

The judgment of the Court was now delivered by—

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This was an action tried before my Brother Coleridge, at the Devon Summer Assizes for 1843. The defendants were Magistrates of the county, who pleaded the general issue, by statute, to a declaration for assault and false imprisonment. The cause of action was a commitment on a conviction on an alleged offence against the Turnpike Act, 4 Geo. 4. c. 96. s. 30. The defendants relied, first, on the conviction, to which, as well as to the commitment, objections were made; and, secondly, on the 147th section of 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, which is incorporated with 4 Geo. 4. c. 95. The Judge overruled the objections to the commitment and conviction, but he thought the defendants would be entitled, at all events, to a verdict, by virtue of the section above mentioned, if the jury thought that they acted bond fide in the belief that they were putting in execution the first-mentioned act. The jury found very properly that they were so, and the verdict passed for them. A new trial was moved for, on objections to both rulings. The latter was principally discussed on the argument, but both were discussed, and we were willing to decide the case on that latter point as one of very general importance; but, after much consideration and long delay, we have found difficulty in agreeing on the proper conclusion to come to, and we therefore proceed to the examination of the other point. The conviction passed on the 30th section, and the offence is thus described therein:—"Shall demand and take a greater or less toll from any person than he shall be authorized to do by virtue of the powers of that act, or of the orders and resolutions of the trustees or commissioners made in pursuance thereof." By the 37th section it is provided, that "no proceeding taken in pursuance of the act shall be quashed or vacated for want of form." The warrant of commitment stated the offence thus:—"He did suffer and permit three persons (named) to pass through the said turnpike gate with a cart drawn by one horse, on payment of the sum of 4d. as toll for the said cart drawn by one horse, the legal toll due and payable in respect of the said cart drawn by one horse being the sum of 6d., contrary to the statute." It was objected that this disclosed no offence against the statute, for that to suffer and permit one to pass on payment of a smaller toll was not to demand and take it. It may be doubted, perhaps, whether the words "demand" and "take" are to be referred severally to the two cases which follow, of greater or less toll, or whether they do not altogether express a complete act of asking for and receiving; but in either way the word take will denote no more than receive, without any notion of force or compulsion. Nothing bound the Magistrates to use the very words of the statute, although it is always better to do so when they themselves sufficiently describe the offence, and giving to the words the sense of simply receiving. We think the language of the commitment quite equivalent. The toll-keeper who suffers a traveller to pass on payment of a smaller toll than the legal one, does, in fact, ask for and receive that toll. But it is, perhaps, not necessary to decide this point, because the defect in question, assuming it to be one, is certainly cured by the conviction, if that be itself sustainable, for in that the words of the act are followed, and the statement is that he did "demand and take," &c. But then it was argued, that both the warrant and conviction were open to another objection. The statute, it has been seen, prohibits the taking a greater or less toll than the collector shall be authorized to do by virtue of the powers of any act, or of the order and resolution of the trustees or commissioners, made in pursuance thereof. The warrant, stating that the toll taken was 4d., adds, "the legal toll due and payable, &c., being 6d." The conviction describes it thus: "for which said horse drawing such cart a certain toll, to wit, the sum of 6d., was then and there payable by the party, the smaller toll or sum of 4d. so demanded and taken by the said J. Stamp then and there being a less toll than he was then and there authorized to take for the cause aforesaid, by virtue of the powers of any act, or the orders and resolutions of the trustees or commissioners of the said turnpike road, made in pursuance thereof." Assuming it is not enough in the warrant to say the legal toll was 6d., here again it is clear that the conviction, if itself sufficient, will cure the defect. The objection to the conviction was not very clearly put. We understand it to be, that some reference should have been made on the face of the instrument to the local act, or to the resolution of the trustees, which fixed the minimum toll, so that it would have appeared that 6d. was that minimum, below which the plaintiff could not legally demand and take.

Now, it is to be observed, if the resolution had been set out at length, fixing the toll at 6d., still the nature of the offence described in the act would have required something more in extreme strictness, the description being by negative, extending to any act or any order or resolution of the trustees. It would in extreme strictness be still necessary to negative the existence of any such, because, however strong the words of the resolution set out, there might be still some other resolution or some other statute allowing the taking of a less sum under some supposable circumstances, or from some supposable class to which the traveller in question might belong. These considerations seem to shew the objection itself is not well founded; and that when the offence by the statute is taking more or less than any statute authorizes, or any resolution of the trustees, it is sufficient to state the sum taken and the sum legally payable, and to negative generally that any less sum than that has been sanctioned by statute or resolution. It is matter of defence to produce the statute or resolution that does sanction the smaller sum, if there be one that can be produced. The question really is, whether the statute uses words which sufficiently describe an offence; for the conviction has used them, and something more, and we think that it does.

Upon these grounds we are of opinion that the learned Judge was right in overruling the objection taken to the conviction; and, consequently, the rule for a new trial must, on that ground, be discharged.

Rule discharged.

1845. } Ex parte WAKLEY in re J. D.
June 9. } COOKE.

Coroner—Habeas Corpus.

The Court will not on the mere instance of the coroner, and without a strong case of necessity being made out, issue a writ of habeas corpus to bring a prisoner who has been committed for trial on a charge of the murder of A. B. before a coroner's jury who are sitting on the body of A. B.

Kelly moved for a writ of habeas corpus, directed to the governor of Newgate, to bring up the body of J. D. Cooke to appear before the coroner of Middlesex upon an inquest holding on the body of A. B. It appeared that Cooke was committed by the Magistrates on a charge of murder, and the object of the writ of habeas, as was suggested, was that Cooke might be identified before the coroner's jury. Witnesses had been produced before the coroner, who deposed that a person had been seen in company with the deceased shortly before her death, and had frequently been seen with him before; but none of these witnesses were able to say what his name was. A paper, however, had been produced, on which this person had signed his name as J. D. Cooke. He contended that it was the duty of the coroner's jury to find a verdict of wilful murder against the person who they were satisfied had committed the murder; but, in the present case, unless the party is identified, they could only return a verdict against some person unknown.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It would be easy for the witnesses who identified Cooke before the Magistrates to identify him also before the coroner.]

The affidavits state that he can only be identified by being produced before the jury. The coroner knew nothing of what took place before the Magistrates, and if he was identified before them, it does not follow that the witnesses (who have not seen him in prison) can now speak positively as to his being the same party who was so identified. This Court has the power to issue the writ—Daniel v. Thompson (1), Ex parte Griffith Griffiths (2), In re Sir Edward Price (3). In The Attorney General v. Fadden (4), the Court of Exchequer granted a habeas to bring up a prisoner, who was confined in Lancaster Castle, in order to establish his identity—Jervis on the Office of Coroner, 21.

[PATTESON, J.—I think the proposition that this Court can upon any occasion bring up a prisoner in custody on a criminal charge, is too large; and if it be taken for granted that a coroner may bring any one before him as a witness, still this party is not a witness.]

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—If this Court has the power to grant the writ, still it is a matter of discretion; but here the prisoner has already been identified before the Magistrates.]

Cases of collusion might be suggested, in which it might be of the highest importance that the party charged should be produced before the coroner. It can hardly be said that when a prisoner is once committed, the functions of the coroner's jury are at an end.

[LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I by no means say that; but here there is no collusion, or, indeed, any other ground suggested. From the facts, it would appear that you do not really want the prisoner, but the witnesses who have already sworn to his identity.]

The Court will presume that a public officer would not make the application except on good grounds, and will not drive him to take any particular steps, when they may at once assist him by granting the writ.

[PATTESON, J.—The affidavits should go further, and shew at least that all practicable means have already been taken.]

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—Though I have the greatest respect for the office of coroner, and am fully sensible of its importance as regards the lives of Her Majesty's subjects, I own I do not in this instance see any necessity for our interference. We cannot but be alive to the great mischief that might arise by removing a prisoner committed under such a charge from the safe custody in which he is now lodged. Still, if it appeared that the coroner's jury could not proceed without the presence of the prisoner, I, for one, should apply my mind to consider in what way the object could be attained; but here no necessity whatever is made out. It appears that a paper was found containing the name of the party, and there does not appear to be any difficulty in tracing him.

PATTESON, J.—I do not see the difficulty suggested on the part of the coroner. We must take it that some of the witnesses have seen the prisoner before the Magistrates; and if so, they can speak to the fact of his being committed.

WILLIAMS, J.—This seems at present a question of comparative inconvenience, namely, whether it is more inconvenient that witnesses should go to look at the prisoner, or the prisoner be brought from prison to be looked at by the witnesses.

COLERIDGE, J.—I come to the same conclusion in this case, though not without doubt. It seems to be admitted that the Court have the power to grant the writ; and I agree that in some cases it might be most inconvenient to grant it. At present, it is sufficient to say that I do not feel the necessity for granting the writ sufficiently made out to warrant my differing from the rest of the Court.

1845. { THE QUEEN v. GREENAWAY AND June 11. { ANOTHER.
THE QUEEN v. CAREY.

An attachment will lie against an overseer of a parish, and also against the solicitor of the parish, for refusing to produce the rate-books of such parish at petty sessions, in obedience to a Crown Office subpœna, in an inquiry touching the settlement of a pauper.

Application for a rule calling on Mr. Mitchell Greenaway, one of the overseers of the poor of the parish of St. Giles, Camberwell, and Mr. Charles Arthur Dodd, solicitor and vestry clerk of that parish, to shew cause why an attachment should not issue against them for disobeying a writ of subpœna duces tecum, issued from the Crown Office, requiring them to produce before the Magistrates in petty session the rate-books of their parish, for the purpose of shewing by legal evidence that Mr. Alexander Smith had been for several years past duly assessed to the relief of the poor of that parish. The application was made at the instance of the overseers and guardians of the poor of the parish of St. Ann's, Westminster, on affidavit, which stated that on the 24th of May, on the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of that parish, before the Magistrates sitting at petty session in the board-room at the Strand Union, inquiry was made touching the place of the last legal settlement of C. F. Smith and her infant child; and that the rate-books and assessments mentioned in the said subpœna duces tecum contained evidence which it was material and necessary to give and produce at the said petty session, in order to shew that the said parish of St. Giles, Camberwell, was and is the last place of lawful settlement of the said C. F. Smith, and that the said M. Greenaway and the said C. A. Dodd, who were both sworn to have been served with a subpœna, attended pursuant thereto, but refused to produce the rate-books, contending, first, that a Crown Office subpœna, returnable to a petty session of Justices, could not be legally issued; secondly, that C. A. Dodd, being the attorney professionally concerned and employed for the parish of St. Giles, Camberwell, and having, as such attorney, the custody of the book in question and other documents, was bound to protect its interests, and was not liable to produce any documentary evidence adverse thereto; and thirdly, that M. Greenaway was not compellable or liable to produce documents to establish a settlement in a parish of which he was the overseer. The affidavits stated that the settlement of the said Alexander Smith, from whom the settlement of the paupers was stated to have been derived, was acquired by him since the year 1834, by renting and occupying a tenement in the parish of St. Giles, Camberwell. On moving for the rule—

Pashley (Corner was with him) referred to Corner's Crown Office Practice, The Queen v. Lydeard St. Lawrence (1). This is not like the case of title-deeds, which it has been considered a party is not compellable to produce—Pickering v. Noyes (2), and an attachment will clearly lie for disobeying the subpœna—The King v. Ring (3), The King v. Brownall (4). The case of The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Orton (5) shews that the production of the rate books was necessary, and that secondary evidence of their contents is not admissible. With respect to the objection taken by Mr. Dodd, the answer is, that the privilege of the attorney is nothing, if the client is compellable to produce the books, as the privilege of the attorney cannot be greater than that of his client—Doe d. Courtail v. Thomas (6), Geery v. Hopkins (7), Blakey v. Porter (8). Besides, this does not affect parish property, but is an inquiry into the rights of third parties—Sampson v. Swettenham (9), May v. Gwynne (10).

Montagu Chambers and Bovill shewed cause, in the first instance.—First, it is very doubtful whether a Crown Office subpoena can be legally issued in such a case as this; secondly, the inhabitants of a parish are not compellable to produce their rate-books, and thereby furnish evidence against themselves—The King v. Woburn (11), The King v. Hardwick (12), Worrall v. Jones (13). The churchwardens are trustees of the parish. The evidence may be got at in the ordinary way, by notice to produce, but in no case, whether civil or criminal, can a party to the proceeding be compelled to produce documents in evidence.

THE QUEEN v. CAREY.

In this case a rule nisi for an attachment had been obtained against a party for refusing to produce the rate-books under similar circumstances.

Creasy and Cobbett shewed cause against it.

LORD DENMAN, C.J., on a subsequent day, delivered the judgment of the Court in both cases.—In the former of these cases an attachment was moved for against a parish officer, for his contempt in disobeying a subpoena issued from this Court, which required him to produce before Justices of Peace in petty sessions a rate-book in his custody, in order to its being made evidence of the settlement of a pauper then about to undergo examination. In the second case cause was shewn against a rule which had been obtained for a similar contempt. The course of practice during a long period was certified to us by our officer, and it is necessary for the due administration of justice. This Court has in all times lent its aid to inferior tribunals, where they have wanted the means of enforcing the attendance of witnesses. If vivd voce evidence is alone required, the ordinary subpoena ad testificandum will attain the object; if documents are wanted, recourse must be had to the equally well-known writ of subpoena duces tecum. The principle is well and forcibly asserted in the important judgment delivered by Lord Ellenborough in Amey v. Long (14). The opposition to our proceeding for contempt was indeed principally rested on the ground, that the particular officer in each of these cases, though summoned as a witness to produce, was, in truth, a party not bound to do so. He was said to be privileged from disclosing that evidence against the interest of his own parish, which was expected to be derived from its rate-book. The object of those who called for it was said (most probably with truth) to be the discovery of a settlement by rating, which would fix the pauper in that parish. It was ingeniously argued, that the production of the document would thus have the double effect of rendering the parish a party in the litigation, and depriving them of the right of a party to protect their muniments from inspection by their adversaries. None of these considerations, however, afford any answer to this complaint. No cause was pending, but a cause was expected to come on for trial, in which the documents might throw light on the truth. The person summoned was no party, but was bound to attend as a witness, and bring the paper called for, in obedience to the writ. Whether he would have been bound to submit it, when produced, to examination, is a question altogether different. This consideration suffices to make the one rule absolute, and to grant the other.

Appeal—Notice of, under sect. 79. of 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. against an order of removal after lapse of more than twenty-one days from service of copies and notice required by that section on the appellant parish, though pauper has not been removed, 11

— Examination stating a birth settlement of pauper in appellant parish, and also disclosing facts which shew a subsequent settlement gained by pauper in respondent parish, by apprenticeship under an indenture, a copy of which is sent with examinations. Grounds of appeal, that examinations are insufficient, and that pauper is settled in respondent parish by apprenticeship and service under indenture, as stated in examinations. Respondents, at trial of appeal, not estopped or precluded from going into evidence of birth settlement, by reason of statement of subsequent settlement by apprenticeship. Birth settlement having been proved, binding of pauper is not admitted, on examinations and grounds of appeal, so as to render proof of it by appellants unnecessary; but appellants, if they rely on such apprenticeship, bound to prove execution of indenture, 20 — Quarter Sessions no power to enter, under 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, at instance of respondents, 33

— As to Q.B. not presuming that Quarter Sessions were wrong in refusing to enter and try appeal, where, for anything that appears, a rule of practice of Sessions might alone have well justified such refusal, 39

— Where personal service of notice of, on Justices, not necessary, 91

— Order of removal served on 7th of August. Notice and grounds of appeal (dated September 6), "for the then next Sessions," served on 14th of October. Next Sessions held on the 17th of October. By the practice of Sessions eight days' notice of trial of an appeal required. Neither party attends at October Sessions, and it is stated on affidavit that deponent (respondent's attorney) was informed and believed that no appeal was then entered. At Epiphany Sessions, in absence of respondents, no further notice of trial having been given, order of removal is quashed, with 5*l.* costs. This is a grievance entitling respondent to have order of Sessions quashed; and no jurisdiction to entertain appeal, 92

Appeal—Statement in ground of, against order of removal that pauper was rated for and in respect of tenement in township of H, consisting of two dwelling-houses of the value of 10*l.* insufficient, by reason of its omitting to state that dwelling-houses were "separate and distinct," pursuant to words of 6 Geo. 4. c. 5. s. 72, 102

— Sufficiency of notice signed by majority of parish officers without proof of concurrence of all. Presumption in favour of notice, 119

— Where the fraction of a day cannot be considered, so as to render service of notice good. Where time within which notice of appeal is to be given ought to be computed up to the day on which appeal is entered, and not to day on which appeal is heard. Where words "at least" exclude both day of giving notice and first day of the sessions, 139

— Practice of Quarter Sessions requiring notice of trial to be given by appellants to respondents in case of entered and respited appeal, twenty-eight days before sessions at which the appeal was to be tried: appeal entered and respited at Easter Sessions, and notice and grounds of appeal sent fourteen clear days before July Sessions: rule for mandamus to compel Sessions to hear, discharged, as rule of practice, although unnecessary, did not appear to be so unreasonable as to compel Court to interfere with it, 142

Apprenticeship—Indenture of apprenticeship purporting to be made between John B. of the one part, and J. R. of the other part, to the effect that John B. bound himself apprentice to J. R., and covenanted with him; and in a subsequent part of the indenture J. R., the master, covenanted with the said Joseph B., apprentice, indenture purporting to be executed by Joseph B. Removing magistrates take examination of Joseph B.; in which he states that he is the person who executed the indenture, and served under it, and that he is called John B. in the indenture by mistake. This is not such an ambiguity as to render deed void, and facts stated by Joseph B. properly taken in his examination, and legal evidence to prove that he is the person who executed indenture and served under it. It being stated in the deed that apprentice was bound till he attained twenty-one, and age of Joseph B. appearing on examination, and also it being therein stated, that he served under deed, and resided with his master until he was twenty-one, a forty days' binding, service, and residence sufficiently appear, 13

Arrest—Warrant of the Court of Quarter Sessions for Tipperary, dated 20th of October, 1804, stated, that A. B. stood indicted, in the peace office of that county, for a rescue and a riot, and commanded the police of that county to apprehend, "and him so apprehended in safe custody keep, so that you may have his body before Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace at the next Sessions, at &c., to be held in the said county on the 13th of January next:"—Held, not to disclose jurisdiction, as words "peace office" do not shew in what court indictment was pending; also bad, as Sessions had no power to authorize police to keep defendant in their custody till next sessions. Court will take judicial notice that common law of England extends to Ireland, and that "a riot" is a sufficient statement of an offence; but, semble, that "a rescue" alone would not be sufficient, 30

Bastard—Order of affiliation, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, must shew upon the face of it that all the evidence was taken upon oath, though statute does not so expressly direct. Order stating, that it being proved to Justices in the presence and hearing of the said T. E. (the putative father), that said child was within six calendar months before passing of act born a bastard of the body of the said M. S. (the mother), and that the Justices having in the presence and hearing of the said T. E. heard the evidence of such woman upon oath, and such other evidence as she had produced, and evidence of said M. S. (the mother) having been corroborated in some material particular by other testimony to their satisfaction, did adjudge, &c. held bad, 45

—Mandamus granted to hear application of mother within twelve months after birth of child to petty sessions under 7 & 8 Vict. 101, when there had been a previous unsuccessful application of guardians of the poor under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, proceedings in which were pending when the last Act passed, 120

—Order of affiliation at petty sessions, reciting that application for summons on putative father of child had been made by the mother "to J. Bridge. See Poor Rate.

Certiorari—Insufficiency of affidavit upon motion for, to remove order of Quarter Sessions, stating that the notice of motion under 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 5, was served upon A. B. and C. D., two of the Justices of the county, "and that said A. B. and

C. D. were two of the Justices present at the Sessions" at which the order was made, though it appears that order was made, on an appeal against an order of removal, subject to a special case. Notice of motion stating it to be given on behalf of overseers of poor of township of Darton, and signed "G. K., attorney for overseers of the poor of said township of Darton, appellants," after describing the appeal; affidavit of service made by person describing himself as clerk to G. K., attorney at law; semble, this sufficient proof that G. K. was the attorney of appellants, and that notice was served on their behalf, 41

Certiorari—Semble, Justice giving notice in court that he does not intend to act or interfere in appeal, not a Justice within 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 5, and notice served upon him nugatory, 44, n.

—No objection to rule for, to bring up order of two Justices, that former rule has been made absolute for certiorari to remove order of Quarter Sessions confirming order of Justices on appeal, but to which no return has been made, unless it appears by affidavit that original order has been duly returned to Sessions, where on appeal to Quarter Sessions order of Justices has been confirmed. Six months within which certiorari to bring up order of Justices must issue, runs from date of order of Quarter Sessions, 75

—Where affidavit of service of notice of certiorari under 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 5, on A. and B, "two of the Justices present at the Sessions at which the order was made, and who are two of the same Justices whose names are mentioned in the heading or caption of the said order," sufficient as against appellant parish, 92

—Clause taking away, applies to all proceedings under act, whether on appeal or otherwise, where local act enacts that no proceedings in pursuance of act shall be removed by certiorari, which clause follows immediately after several others relating to summary proceedings before magistrates, and by subsequent clause, appeal to Quarter Sessions is given to parties aggrieved by decision of commissioners under the act, 151

—The rule that a certiorari to remove an order for the purpose of quashing it, ought not to issue until the time for appealing against order has expired, applies only where certiorari is prayed for by party in whose favour order is made, 157

—Rule for, to remove indictment for misdemeanour, not necessarily absolute in the first instance, 179

—See Indictment.

Chargeability—Statement of residing in parish and receiving relief from, and being actually chargeable to—sufficient, 122

—Statement that pauper is residing in the workhouse in P, and is chargeable to the township of P, sufficient, 126

—See Order of Removal.

Coming to inhabit. See Order of Removal.

Commitment—Insufficiency of commitment of foreigner, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 75, "until discharged by due course of law," 17

—Warrant of, under 6 Geo. 3. c. 25, or 4 Geo. 4. c. 34. s. 3, which does not recite a separate conviction, in effect a conviction, and must shew that on the hearing evidence was given upon oath, in presence of defendant. Such a warrant, stating that defendant was brought before Justice, and said Justice duly thereupon, then and there, in presence as well of said J. J. (complainant) as of said J. G. (defendant), did examine and inquire into proofs and allegations of said parties, touching said complaint, bad. Quere—whether such a commitment not in effect a conviction, and therefore ought to set out evidence, and have other requisite formalities of a conviction, 26

Conspiracy—Indictment for, bad for not naming objects of conspiracy or making excuse for not naming them; or, if intention was to cheat a certain definite class, the individuals to be afterwards ascertained, bad for not so describing them. This defect not cured by referring to overt acts alleged, none of them being per se indictable offences at common law. Averment that overt acts were done in pursuance of the conspiracy does not help the want of positive statement that defendants did conspire to cheat persons named in overt acts, 172

Contra Formam Statuti. See Indictment.

Conviction—What averments as to place and time, necessary in conviction under 9 Geo. 4. c. 69. s. 1, 49

— Under 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. s. 10, stating that materials used in woollen manufactures, suspected to have been purloined, had been found in the house of A. B, and that he had given no satisfactory account thereof to convicting Justices, need not state that they were found concealed in the house, nor that they were found under a search warrant. 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, so far as regards distribution of penalties thereby imposed, repealed by 58 Geo. 3. c. 56. Where information, under 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. s. 10, has been laid before two Justices, and conviction has taken place before two other Justices, this fact must appear on face of conviction, 104

— Sufficiency of commitment and conviction under Turnpike Act, 4 Geo. 4. c. 95. s. 30. Whether bond fide belief of convicting Justices that they were putting the act of parliament in execution, would be a good defence under 147th section, which provides for cases of action brought for things done in pursuance of the act? 184

Coroner—Absence of D, when inquest began, occasioned by a lawful and reasonable cause; his presence afterwards does not vitiate proceedings, which M. had authority to conduct; and inquisition properly framed and signed, where inquisition purported to be taken before R. D, coroner for county of W, and was signed as follows: "R. D, coroner, by E. M, his deputy duly appointed;" but inquisition was in fact taken, jury sworn, super visum corporis, witnesses examined, and inquisition signed by E. M, the deputy coroner; R. D. was not present when jury were sworn, being engaged in holding another inquest at a distance; but returned in time to be present during greater part of examination of the witnesses, but did not personally act as coroner, 87

— Court will not on mere instance of coroner, and without a strong case of necessity being made out, issue writ of habeas corpus to bring a prisoner who has been committed for trial on a charge of murder of A. B. before coroner's jury who are sitting on body of A. B, 188

Costs—Under 17 Geo. 3. c. 56. ss. 8. & 20, Court of Quarter Sessions no power to enter and hear an appeal at the instance of respondent, although party convicted may have given notice of appeal, and entered into a recognizance, upon failure of appellant to appear; nor has Court any power to give costs to respondents upon failure by party convicted to enter and try: the only remedy for costs by estreating the recognizances, 33

— See Highway. Order of Sessions.

Criminal Information—not granted against overseers for endeavouring to induce paupers to remove to another parish, 57

Crown Office Subpoena. See Rate Books.

Derivative Settlement. See Settlement.

Emancipation. See Examination. Settlement.

Error—Where party put to writ of, 3

Estate—No settlement gained, where A, in 1769, inclosed land from the waste, and built a cottage thereon, in which he resided sixty years. During the whole time a yearly rent of 2s. 6d. was paid by A to the lord of the manor for cottage; and on a further inclosure of land for a garden, rent was increased to 3s., 182

Estoppel. See Examination. Highway.

Evidence—That pauper is the party who executed an apprentice deed, in which his wrong christian name was inserted, properly admitted into examination, 13

— Necessity of stating, in order of affiliation, that all the evidence was taken upon oath, 45

— Secondary evidence of contents of rate-books not admissible, where overseer does not comply with summons to produce, 89

— See Examination.

— Documentary. See Examination.

Examination—Of landlord stating that, on the 22nd of July 1839, he let a house, situate, &c. to A. "at the rent of 10l. per annum," exclusive of parochial rates, and that A. occupied the house until the 22nd of July 1841, and paid him the whole of the rent during that time; and examination of A.'s widow stating, that she and her husband went to the house in July 1839, and resided in it till March 1842, when her husband died:—Held, (dissentiente Coleridge, J.) not sufficiently to disclose a hiring for a year or a residence under a yearly hiring, 8

— Sufficiency of, to shew settlement by apprenticeship, 13

— Statement in, of settlement subsequent to that relied on, not an admission by respondents of such settlement, or an estoppel against going into proof of previous settlement, 20

— Where respondents not concluded by statement of settlement in, 25

— Examinations on which an order of removal founded, shewing maiden settlement of pauper's mother in appellant parish, but containing hearsay statement that her husband (pauper's father) was born in London, but no legal evidence of fact, nor of any attempt made to ascertain it, justify the order of removal, and in the absence of other evidence Sessions right in confirming it, 78

— Validity of order of removal grounded on examinations shewing relief given by appellant parish, to pauper's father, while residing out of appellant parish, at a time when the pauper was twenty-seven years of age, containing nothing to raise presumption that pauper was at that time emancipated, and that examination not necessary, should negative fact of pauper's emancipation at the time relief was given to his father, 97

Examination—A date material with reference to state of the law at time a settlement is alleged to have been gained, must be stated precisely. Where a pauper removed to parish A, as his birth settlement, and it was alleged in examinations that such pauper was born out of wedlock in parish A, in or about the year 1833, nothing being said as to settlement of his mother:—Held, that as words "in or about" the year 1833 did not necessarily exclude 14th of August 1834 (the time when 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. came into operation), examinations were insufficient, 109

— Where the examination of a witness on which order of removal was grounded, stated that the pauper, under letters of administration granted to him, had become possessed of tenement in the appellant parish, and shewed that he had gained settlement in respect thereof; and a copy of letters of administration, corresponding in every respect with those described by the witness, was sent with examination to appellant parish:—It was held, that it sufficiently appeared that the letters of administration, a copy of which was sent, had been produced before removing magistrate, 113

— Examinations shewing maiden settlement of pauper's mother to be in appellant parish; and also shewing that her husband (the pauper's father) had acquired a settlement by renting a tenement, but in what parish was not stated—insufficient, 131

— Copies of documents produced before removing Justices, must be sent by the removing parish, with a copy of order of removal, or a sufficient reason given for the omission to send them, 135

— What a sufficient statement that pauper is a legitimate child, 138

— See Chargeability.

Game—Necessity in conviction, under 9 Geo. 4. c. 69. s. 1., of averment, that party entered land by night for the purpose of destroying game "there" or "therein," and for the purpose of taking game "by night." Quere, whether same strictness necessary in indictments for misdemeanours under section 9, 49

Guardians. See Notice of Chargeability.

Habeas Corpus—at common law, where a foreigner in custody in this country. Discharge of foreigner committed under Convention Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 75, "until discharged by due course of law," 17

— See Coroner.

Hearsay. See Secondary Evidence.

Highway—Provision in 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 95, as to Judge's certificate for costs of prosecution of indictment for non-repair of, only extends to cases where liability to repair is disputed; and where, on indictment for non-repair of a public carriage-way, defendants are acquitted, on the ground that the way was not a public highway for carriages, Judge has no jurisdiction to make this certificate, 38

Highway—Question as to local act for amending roads in Isle of Wight being continued by 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 10, and subsequent acts, so far as applied to turnpike roads. Conviction, under 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 41, adjudging that "said B. hath forfeited for the said offence the sum of 2l. 2s. good; and not necessary that payment of the penalty should be adjudged. Construction of statutes as to "toll-gate" being used as synonymous with "turnpike gate," and sufficiency of warrant of distress, reciting a conviction, which on inspection proved to be valid, and stating that B. on &c., at &c., with a certain carriage did unlawfully, &c. pass through a certain toll-gate, by means whereof payment of a certain toll, to wit, &c. then and there legally due and payable by the said B., in respect of said carriage, was avoided, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided. Warrant stated forfeiture, and adjudication that the said B. should forfeit and pay the sum of 2l. 2s., and directing distress to be made; and one moiety of penalty to be paid to informant, and other moiety to treasurer of commissioners for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight; demand of penalty not necessary under 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, previously to issuing distress warrant; and commissioners having jurisdiction over the whole of the roads in the island, penalty properly apportioned, 65 — Order of special sessions directing portion of highway rate to be paid to surveyor for repairs of turnpike road, under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59. s. 1, must appear on the face of it to be made at a special sessions holden in and for division of county in which turnpike road is situate, pursuant to 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 45. Not necessary to specify in order what proportion of rate to be paid; and it sufficiently appears that sum of 9l. 5s. is to be paid out of rate in existence under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, where order directs "that 9l. 5s., being a portion of the rate or assessment levied or to be levied by virtue of 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50," shall be paid to the surveyor of highways for the purpose of repairs, 75

— Order deemed to be made on the 23rd of April, and notice of grounds of appeal given more than six days after this day too late, where two Justices at special sessions, on 23rd of April, acting under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, after hearing evidence and examining (among other witnesses) the surveyor of roads in parish, expressed their determination to make an order on him, as such surveyor, to pay a sum of money to trustees of the turnpike road; form of an order in writing was then and there signed by them, in blank, blanks being afterwards filled up by their clerk, in conformity with their verbally expressed decision; no copy of order in writing was served on surveyor for six weeks afterwards, 84

— Personal service of notice of appeal to the Quarter Sessions, on Justices, by party convicted by Justices under the General Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, not necessary, 91

— Order of Magistrates under 34 Geo. 3. c. 64, for dividing road lying partly in one parish and partly in another, by transverse lines for the purpose of repair, pursuing the form given by that statute, conclusive as to liability of each parish to repair portions of road respectively allotted to them. And neither parish on indictment for non-repair of portion so allotted, can impeach jurisdiction of Magistrates by producing evidence to prove that no part of the road ever was within such parish, 177

Highway. See Quarter Sessions.

Houses. Meeting of, in local acts, 145

Hull Dock Company. See Poor Rate.

Indictment.—Court of Quarter Sessions power to quash indictment for forcible entry, riot, and assault, before plea pleaded: and where jurisdiction appears, this Court will not review their judgment in such case, upon its being brought before them by certiorari: the proper mode of proceeding being by writ of error, 3

—Caption of indictment for misdemeanour found by grand jury of Central Criminal Court, need not state that person presenting such indictment had been bound over by recognizance to prosecute, before Sessions at which bill was found; for grand jury have jurisdiction to find such a bill, although no recognizance has been previously entered into. Venue in indictment in Central Criminal Court, describing offence as committed "at the parish of M, in the county of Middlesex, within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court," correctly stated, where indictment removed by certiorari by defendant, who pleads guilty to it in Middlesex, 82

—Sufficiency of, charging commission of offence in Gray's Inn, &c. county of Middlesex, 118

—Wherestature provides that a matter previously a felony shall be a felony, and creates new punishment, it is not therefore necessary that indictment conclude contra formam statuti. Recording of the statutable punishment, where indictment does not contain these words, no ground of error, 164

—for disobeying order of Sessions. See Order of Sessions.

—Sufficiency of. See Conspiracy. Jurors.

Interested Magistrate. See Quarter Sessions.

Joint Tenant. See Tenement.

Judgment.—of less than ten years' transportation, bad, where conviction on indictment under 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 90, for breaking into dwelling-house and stealing therein above the value of 5*l.*, 165

—Judgment pronounced at Nisi Prius on trial of indictment, and entry on the postea that the Judge "did order and adjudge," &c. semble, established form of "it is considered," &c. is more proper, and should be adopted in future, 172 —Reversal of. See Prisoner.

Jurisdiction.—of Justices where shewn on face of order of removal, 5 —of grand jury at Central Criminal Court to find bill for misdemeanour, though prosecutor has not previously entered into a recognizance, 82

—of Justices to commit for not finding sureties upon exhibition of articles of the peace, 99

—where jurisdiction of Justices cannot be impeached, 177

—See Appeal. Arrest.

Jurors.—Semble, per Patteson, J., that indictment bad which omits to describe jurors as jurors of the county, 165

Justice of the Peace.—Power of committing party who has appealed and has failed to support his appeal, to undergo his sentence, 33

—Invalidity of order of Sessions, where interested Magistrate has taken a part in the proceedings, though he has not voted, 73

—Invalidity of order made in the absence of parties affected by it, 148

—question of protection under sec. 127. of Turnpike Act, 4 Geo. 4. c. 95. s. 147, 184

—Jurisdiction of, under 8 Vict. c. 10. See Bastard.

Local Poor Act. See Poor Rate.

Lunatic.—Justices where a county lunatic asylum has been established under 9 Geo. 4. c. 40, no power, under section 88. of that act, to remove insane pauper to a private licensed asylum, on the ground that county asylum is too full to afford accommodation for the pauper, 1 —Justices of the Peace for a borough no power to send pauper lunatic chargeable to the borough, to county lunatic asylum, under 9 Geo. 4. c. 40. s. 88. Order adjudicating as to settlement of insane person confined in county lunatic asylum, and ordering payment of expenses under sect. 42, can only be made when insane person confined there under order of two Justices of county. Order of two Justices, adjudging settlement of a pauper lunatic to be in P, and ordering overseers of P. to pay 5*s.* 6*d.* weekly to treasurer of county lunatic asylum (where pauper was confined), or such other sum as should be thereafter fixed on by visitors of the said county lunatic asylum, bad, for not shewing that 5*s.* 6*d.* was the sum fixed on by visitors of lunatic asylum, 46

Mandamus.—Where Court will not interfere by mandamus to compel Sessions to enter and try appeal, if consistent with facts stated that application was not made in time, according to practice of the Sessions, 39

—Rule nisi for, discharged with costs, when obtained upon affidavits stating imperfectly the grounds upon which the Sessions proceeded in their judgment; and the facts omitted were material to the case, 119

—After a demurrer to a return made to a mandamus by party to whom it is directed, Court will let in party really interested to make a return, 162

—See Appeal.

Master and Servant.—Semble, where defendant has not been imprisoned before an appeal under 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, upon his failing to support appeal, convicting Justices may commit him to gaol to undergo his punishment, 33

—See Commitment.

Notice of Chargeability.—by whom signed—guardians—union of parishes, 133

Order of Justices.—What amounts to making, 84

Order of Removal.—sufficiently shews jurisdiction of Justices on the face thereof, and in what county parish B. is situate, where a county is named in margin, the order is addressed "to the overseers of the poor of the parish A. and to the overseers of the poor of parish B, in the said county," and recites a complaint by the overseers of the poor

- "to us whose names are hereunto affixed, being two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the said county," 5
- Order of Removal*—Time for giving notice of appeal against, 11
- not sustainable on secondary evidence of contents of rate-books, where overseer does not comply with summons of Justices to produce, 89
  - Impression made on order with ink, by means of a wooden block, a sufficient sealing, 109
  - Conclusiveness of former order. Quashing of first order for omission of signatures of Justices in copy sent not conclusive between the parties; and respondents not precluded from obtaining fresh order by parties having applied for and obtained a case upon the decision of the Sessions as to the first order, 122
  - Conclusiveness of former order. Quashing of order on appeal, for insufficiency of examination, as disclosing no settlement on face thereof," conclusive between the parties, upon the point of settlement, 126
  - Mother and bastard child under seven, removable on order grounded on notice of chargeability of mother only. How jurisdiction of Justices must appear on, 128
  - Names of Justices to, need not be signed at full length, 144
  - Statement that the paupers "have intruded themselves into the parish, and have become chargeable to the same," not a sufficient statement of their having come to inhabit, to justify an order of removal, 157
  - See Appeal. Examination.
- Order of Sessions*—Where vitiated by interested Justice taking part in proceedings, 73
- for dismissing appeal against a rate, and that appellants, "upon service of the said order or a true copy thereof, should pay respondents the sum of 91*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* for their costs and charges by reason of the said appeal; statement, in indictment for disobeying the order, that a true copy of order was, on &c., served on defendants, and that they then and there had notice of the said order, sufficient. Such allegation proved by proof of service of copy of formal document, containing the terms of the order drawn up from the minutes of the Sessions, such document being shewn to defendants at time of service. No notice to produce copy necessary. No objection to order, that amount of costs was inserted in it, at an adjournment of the Sessions, on a day subsequent to that on which order made, 153
- Overseers*—Refusal of criminal information against overseers for endeavouring to induce paupers fraudulently to remove to another parish, ordinary remedy being by indictment, 57
- As to production of rate-books on summons by Justices making order of removal, 89
  - Where compellable to produce rate-books, 190
- Place*—Averment of, 49
- Poor Law*. See Bastard.
- Poor Rate*—Construction of local acts as to rateability of trustees who have purchased land and buildings, and converted them into a butcher's market, and occupied premises, and collected tolls by means of a clerk, and no surplus revenue has ever existed after paying annual expenses and interest on mortgages for market-building, stalls, &c. in that parish, and as to clause of former statute being incorporated into the latter, so as to limit the proportion of rate on the buildings in the parish, 58
- Poor Rate*—As to rateability of Hull Dock Company, in respect of tonnage duties received by them, for ships using their docks or entrance basin, and in respect of tonnage duties received by them for ships entering harbour, but not using docks or entrance-basin, 114
- Quarter Sessions for the city of Oxford no jurisdiction to entertain appeal against poor-rate, made under the provisions of local act passed in 1771, for regulating poor in city of Oxford, upon the ground that occupiers of property have been underrated, or that others have been omitted from the rate altogether, 167
  - Subscribers occupiers of bridge and tolls, and that rate well made upon them; and a warrant of distress may issue against A. B. for whole rate, where a bridge and lands and premises connected with it, in 1729, conveyed to trustees, upon trust to permit certain subscribers (who had built the bridge) and their heirs, &c., to receive the tolls, and to have the sole management of the bridge, and shares of the subscribers had been subdivided into a large number of shares; and A. B., one of such shareholders, resided in parish C, at one end of the bridge, and a toll collector was stationed at the other end of the bridge in parish D, 179
- Presumption*. See Appeal.
- Prisoner*—On reversal of judgment of imprisonment pronounced by Queen's Bench, application for discharge of plaintiff in error should be made to Court below, 172
- Production of Documents*. See Rule Books.
- Proof of Documents*. See Secondary Evidence.
- Quarter Sessions*—Power to quash indictments before plea, 3
- Order of Sessions, where any Justice interested has taken a part in proceedings at hearing, although he may not have voted, bad, and set aside by the Court. On appeal against order made at special sessions, directing parish surveyor to pay money to turnpike trustees, Justice who is a creditor of turnpike trust is a party interested, 73
  - Reasonableness of practice requiring twenty-eight days' notice of trial of an appeal entered and respited, 142
- Questions of Fact*. See Secondary Evidence.
- Rate*—Meaning of the word "houses" in local acts of St. Paul, Covent Garden, for support of rector, curate, clerk and sexton, 145
- See Highway. Poor Rate.
- Rate Books*—Attachment will lie against overseer of parish, and against solicitor of the parish, for refusing to produce rate-books of such parish at petty sessions, in obedience to Crown Office subpoena, in inquiry touching settlement of a pauper, 190
- See Evidence. Order of Removal.
- Relief*—Objection on return to mandamus to enforce order of two Magistrates on guardians of union, under 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 56. s. 27, to give relief to an infirm pauper, without requiring that she should reside in any workhouse, that neither

they nor overseers of parish in which pauper was stated to be residing, and entitled to relief therefrom, had been summoned to attend, nor were present, at hearing of complaint or making of the order, a good and valid objection to the order. Quere—on whom such an order ought to be made, 148

Secondary Evidence—Justices should not receive secondary evidence of contents of document, on which to found an order of removal, until they are satisfied there has been a bond fide diligent search and inquiry for it where it would most probably be found. This a question of fact, of which Justices are sole judges. And, on such question, statements by third parties respecting document, to person conducting inquiry, are properly receivable in evidence, 160

Sessions—Where they cannot refuse to go into evidence, on ground that the examinations disclose subsequent settlement in parish C, on order of removal made from parish A. to parish B, upon examinations which shew evidence of a settlement in the latter parish, 25

Settlement—Examinations stating that pauper's father gained a settlement in appelland parish in 1790, and in 1838 removed to appelland parish, by an order unappealed against; that pauper was emancipated in 1823, and that neither pauper nor his father had gained any other settlement in their own right, contains evidence of pauper's derivative settlement in appelland parish, on which Sessions are bound to act, 137

— Statement that A. is the child of B, a sufficient allegation that he is his legitimate child, 138

— Where a ground of appeal sets up derivative settlement of pauper in respondent parish, statement that pauper's father had never gained any settlement in his own right, and was unemancipated at the time his father (pauper's grandfather) acquired a settlement in the respondent parish, sufficient to shew derivative settlement of pauper in respondent parish, 169

— by estate. See Estate.

CAP. III.

AN ACT for the Appointment of Constables or other Officers for keeping the Peace near public Works in Scotland.

(18th March 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Additional constables or officers may be appointed by the sheriff.
  2. Expense thereof to be paid by the companies or parties carrying on such works.
  3. Remuneration may be recovered by distress.
  4. Act may be amended, &c. this session.

By this Act,

After reciting that great mischiefs have arisen by the violent and unlawful behaviour of labourers and others employed in the construction of railways and other public works in Scotland, by reason whereof the appointment of additional constables or officers for keeping the peace, and for the protection of the inhabitants, and security of the property, in the neighbourhood of such public works, is often necessary; and it is expedient that provision should be made for the appointment and payment of such additional constables or officers:—

It is Enacted,

I. That from and after the passing of this Act it shall be lawful for the sheriff of any county in which the works of any railway, canal, or other public work of a similar nature shall be in progress of construction, upon the application of the company or other parties carrying on any such public work, or of any two Justices of the Peace of the county, and usually acting in the district in or through which any such public work may be in the course of construction, to appoint from time to time such fit and proper persons as he may think fit to nominate for that purpose to be constables or peace officers in and for such county within the limits of such public works, and within a mile therefrom, during the construction of such public works; and every person so appointed shall make oath or solemn declaration, to be administered by such sheriff, duly to execute the office of constable or peace officer as hereinafter mentioned; and every person so appointed, and having made such oath or declaration, shall have full power to act as a constable or peace officer for the preservation of the peace, and for the security of persons and property against crimes and unlawful acts, within the limits of that part of the public works for which he shall be so appointed, and within a mile therefrom, and shall have, use, exercise, and enjoy all such powers, authorities, protections, and privileges in the execution of his office as belong by law to the office of constable or peace officer within the limits or district for which he is appointed to act, and shall, when required so to do, obey all orders and put in execution all warrants issued by the sheriff, and to be executed within such limits or district, or within any other part of the county; and it shall be lawful for the sheriff, when he shall think fit, to dismiss or remove any such constable or peace officer who may have been so appointed, and to appoint another fit and proper person in his stead; and upon every such dismissal or removal all the powers, authorities, protections, and privileges vested by virtue of such appointment in any person so dismissed or removed shall wholly cease and determine.

II. That every person so appointed by any sheriff to act as constable or peace officer as aforesaid shall, during such time as he shall so act as constable or peace officer, receive from the company or other parties carrying on such public works a reasonable remuneration, not exceeding what is in use to be given to constables on duty within the same county; and the amount and the time and manner of payment of such remuneration shall be fixed and directed by the sheriff.

III. That in all cases where the company or other parties carrying on any such public work shall refuse or neglect, during fourteen days next after demand thereof, to pay any such remuneration, or any part thereof, as shall by any sheriff as aforesaid have been directed to be paid, it shall be lawful for such sheriff forthwith to cause the same to be levied, together with the expenses of levying the same, by poinding and sale of the goods and effects of the company or other parties liable to pay such remuneration.

IV. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in the present session of Parliament.

CAP. IV.

AN ACT to continue for Three Years the Duties on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades, and Offices.

(5th April 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. The rates and duties granted by the recited Act continued for three years.
2. The several Acts continued in force.
3. Assessments under Schedules (A.) and (B.) for the year 1845 to be in force for three years.
4. Power to compound for duties under Schedule (D.) continued.
5. Act may be amended this session.

By this Act, the Commons grant, and it is Enacted,

I. That the several rates and duties by the Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, granted shall be and the same are hereby continued, and shall be charged, raised, levied, collected, and paid, unto and for the use of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for the term of three years, to be computed from the 5th of April 1845, and until the assessments made or which ought to be made for the last year of the said term, or for any preceding year, shall be completed, collected, levied, and paid.

II. That the said recited Act, and all and every other Act and Acts now in force in relation to the duties granted by the said recited Act, shall severally be continued and remain in full force, and be of the like effect in all respects, in relation to the duties hereby continued and granted, as if the said duties had been originally granted by the said recited Act for a period which did not expire before the end of the term for which the same are continued and granted by this Act; and all and every the powers, authorities, rules, regulations, directions, penalties, forfeitures, clauses, matters, and things contained in the said Acts, or any of them, and in force as aforesaid, shall severally and respectively be duly observed, practised, applied, and put in execution in relation to the said duties hereby continued and granted, as well during the term herein limited as after the expiration thereof, for assessing, levying, recovering, paying, deducting, and accounting for the said duties, and all arrears thereof, and for re-assessing the same in default of payment, and for the suing for, adjudging, and recovering any penalty which shall have been or may be incurred in relation to the said duties, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if the same powers, authorities, rules, regulations, directions, penalties, forfeitures, clauses, matters, and things were particularly repeated and re-enacted in the body of this Act with reference to the said duties hereby granted.

And after reciting that by the said recited Act it was enacted, that the first assessment of the duties chargeable under either of the Schedules (A.) or (B.) of the same Act should be and remain in force for the space of three years, which will expire after the 5th of April 1845;—

It is Enacted,

III. That the assessments of the same duties to be made for the year commencing from and after the said last-mentioned day shall in like manner be and remain in force for the space of three years, under and subject to the same rules, regulations, and conditions as are specified in the said recited Act with reference to the assessments made under the same Schedules for the period of three years in the said Act mentioned.

And after reciting that the contracts entered into for compositions for the duties chargeable under Schedule (D.) of the said recited Act for the term thereby limited will expire after the 5th of April 1845, and it is expedient to renew and continue the powers of the Commissioners to enter into new contracts for such compositions for the term limited by this Act;—

It is Enacted,

IV. That it shall be lawful for the Commissioners for special purposes, in the said Act mentioned, to contract and agree for a composition for the said last-mentioned duties, with any person who may be desirous of compounding for the same, for the period of three years, to commence from the 5th of April 1845, under and subject to the conditions, rules, and regulations specified in the said Act with reference to the compositions thereby authorized to be made for the same duties for the term of three years in the said Act mentioned.

V. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

Candy, brown, for every hundred weight	5 12 0
Candy, white, for every hundred weight	8 8 0

And so in proportion for any greater or less quantity than a hundred weight.

11. That it shall and may be lawful for Her Majesty, and she is hereby empowered, from time to time, by any Order or Orders in Council, to declare, with respect to any foreign country or countries, that it having appeared to Her Majesty, upon sufficient evidence, that the sugars of such country or countries are not the produce of slave labour, such sugars shall (from and after a day to be named in such order) be deemed and taken not to be the produce of slave labour; and from and after the day so to be named in such order the brown, muscovado, or clayed sugar (not being refined) of the country or countries mentioned in such order shall be admissible to entry for home consumption at the said respective duties of 1*l.* 8*s.* or of 1*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* per hundred weight respectively, in like manner as sugars the growth and produce of China, Java, or Manilla.

111. That no sugar shall be admissible to entry for home consumption at the said duties of 1*l.* 8*s.* or 1*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* per hundred weight respectively unless the master of the ship importing the same shall have delivered to the collector or comptroller at the port of importation such certificate or certificates as hereinafter are mentioned, nor unless such master shall also make and subscribe a declaration before such collector or comptroller that such certificate or certificates was or were received by him at the place where such sugar was taken on board, and that the sugar so imported is the same as is mentioned therein.

iv. That in case such sugar shall be imported from China, Java, or Manilla, or from any other of the countries named in such Order in Council as hereinbefore is mentioned, the certificate so to be given to the collector or comptroller at the port of importation shall be under the hand and seal of the British consul, vice-consul, consular agent, or other officer appointed in that behalf by Her Majesty, at the place where such sugar was taken on board, and shall certify that a declaration in writing had been made and signed before such consul, vice-consul, consular agent, or other officer, by the shipper of such sugar, that the same was really and bond fide the growth of the country in which the same was so taken on board, and shall also certify that such consul, vice-consul, consular agent, or other officer had examined the contents of such declaration, and believed the same to be true.

v. That in case such sugar shall be imported from any British possession abroad the master of the vessel importing the same shall deliver to the collector or comptroller at the port of importation, firstly, a certificate under the hand and seal of the principal officer of Customs at the place where the same was taken on board, certifying that a declaration in writing had been made and signed before such principal officer by the shipper of such sugar, that the same was really and bond fide the growth of China, Java, or Manilla, or of some other of the countries named in such Order in Council as hereinbefore is mentioned, and had been imported thence into such British possession abroad as aforesaid, and also certifying that such principal officer of Customs had examined the contents of such declaration, and believed the same to be true; secondly, a certificate under the hand and seal of the British consul, vice-consul, consular agent, or other officer appointed in that behalf by Her Majesty (if any such there be), at the place whence such sugar shall have been imported into such British possession abroad, certifying that a declaration in writing had been made and signed before such consul, vice-consul, consular agent, or other officer, by the shipper of such sugar from such place, that the same was really and bond fide the produce of the country from whence the same shall have been so imported into such British possession abroad, and also certifying that such consul, vice-consul, consular agent, or other officer had examined the contents of such declaration, and believed the same to be true: Provided always, that in case such sugar, shall be imported into the United Kingdom from any British possession abroad, being part of the territories of the East India Company, the certificate and declaration hereby required to be given and received by the principal officer of Customs may be respectively given and received by any officer appointed for that purpose by the respective governments of such territories.

VI. That with regard to sugar the growth of any foreign country between which country and Her Majesty there is now subsisting any treaty or convention binding Her Majesty to grant to such country, either conditionally or unconditionally, the privileges of the most favoured nation, or to permit, either conditionally or unconditionally, the produce of such country to be imported into the United Kingdom at the same duties as are imposed upon the like produce of any other country, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, and she is hereby empowered, from time to time, by any Order or Orders in Council, to declare that from and after a day to be named in such order, brown, muscovado, or clayed sugars (not being refined) the growth of such country, in case such treaty shall continue to subsist, shall, if imported from such country, or from any British possession abroad, having been imported into such British possession from such country, be admitted to entry for consumption in the United Kingdom at the aforesaid respective rates of duty of 1*l*. 8*s*. and 1*l*. 8*s*. 4*d*. per hundred weight respectively, in like manner as sugars the growth and produce of China, Java, or Manilla; and from and after the day so to be named in such Order the sugars therein mentioned shall, if so imported as aforesaid, be so admitted accordingly, subject, nevertheless, to the production of the like certificates and the making of the like declaration as are hereinbefore required with respect to sugars the growth of China, Java, or Manilla.

VII. That in case the privileges granted by any treaty to any foreign country, in respect of which any Order in Council shall be issued under the enactment lastly hereinbefore contained, shall have been granted conditionally, such order shall expressly declare that such foreign country hath duly fulfilled the said conditions, and is entitled to the said privilege.

VIII. Provided and enacted, That if at any time satisfactory proof shall have been laid before Her Majesty in Council that as respects any British possession within the limits of the East India Company's charter the importation of foreign sugar has been prohibited, it shall and may be lawful for Her Majesty, and she is hereby empowered, from time to time, by any Order or Orders in Council, to declare that sugar and molasses the growth or produce of any such British possession may be imported from thence into the United Kingdom, and entered at the lower rates of duty hereinbefore imposed on sugar and molasses the growth or produce of British possessions within the limits of the East India Company's charter in which the importation of foreign sugar is prohibited; and from and after the publication of such order, whilst the same shall continue in force, the sugars and molasses therein mentioned may be so imported and entered accordingly.

IX. Provided and enacted, That any sugars or molasses the produce of any British possession within the limits of the East India Company's charter in which the importation of foreign sugar is or shall be prohibited, which shall be entered for home use at the lower rates of duty hereinbefore imposed on sugar and molasses the produce of such possessions, shall be entered in the same and the like manner and under the same or the like conditions in and under which sugar the growth of the Presidency of Bengal might be entered for home use under the provisions of 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 26, intituled 'An Act for granting to His Majesty, until the 5th of July 1837, certain Duties on Sugar imported into the United Kingdom, for the service of the year 1836,' at the lower rate of duty therein mentioned.

X. That the respective bounties now payable on the exportation of certain descriptions of refined sugar from the United Kingdom, by 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 58, intituled 'An Act to grant certain Bounties and Allowances of Customs,' and also by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 33, intituled 'An Act for granting to Her Majesty, until the 5th of July 1839, certain Duties on Sugar imported into the United Kingdom, for the service of the year 1838,' and by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 28. shall, from and after the 14th of March 1845, cease and determine; and that in lieu thereof there shall be paid and allowed the following bounties; that is to say,

Upon double refined sugar, or sugar equal in quality to double refined, for every hundred weight . . . . .	1 0 0
Upon other refined sugar, in loaf, complete and whole, or lumps duly refined, having been perfectly clarified and thoroughly dried in the stove, and being of an uniform whiteness throughout, or such sugar pounded, crashed, or broken, for every hundred weight . . . . .	0 17 0
Upon bastard or refined sugar, broken in pieces, or being ground or powdered sugar, pounded or crashed or broken, for every hundred weight . . . . .	0 14 0

XI. That the several duties, bounties and allowances by this Act imposed and allowed shall be under the management of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs, and shall be ascertained, raised, levied, collected, paid, recovered, allowed, and applied, or appropriated under the provisions of 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 56, intituled 'An Act for granting Duties of Customs,' and of 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 58, intituled 'An Act to grant certain Bounties and Allowances of Customs,' and of any other Act or Acts in force relating to the Customs.

XII. That the Commissioners of Customs shall forthwith provide samples of white clayed sugar, and of sugar rendered by any process equal in quality to white clayed sugar, with reference to colour, grain, and saccharine matter, which samples shall be deemed to be standard samples, for the purpose of comparing therewith such white clayed sugar, or sugar rendered by any process equal in quality to white clayed sugar, as from and after the 14th of March 1845, may be entered for home consumption; and such standard samples shall from time to time be renewed whenever the said Commissioners may deem it expedient; and no sugar shall, as regards the payment of duty, be deemed or taken to be white clayed sugar, or sugar rendered by any process equal in quality to white clayed, unless it shall, with reference to colour, grain, and saccharine matter, equal the standard samples so respectively provided by the said Commissioners.

XIII. That it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by an Order in Council, from time to time to revoke or alter any Order in Council previously made under the authority of this Act.

xiv. That every Order in Council to be made under the authority of this Act shall, as soon as may be after the making thereof by Her Majesty in Council, be published in the London Gazette.

xv. That a copy of every Order of Her Majesty in Council made under the authority of this Act shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within six weeks after issuing the same, if Parliament be then sitting, and if not then within six weeks after the commencement of the then next session of Parliament.

xvi. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

CAP. VI.

AN ACT to repeal the Duties and Laws of Excise on Glass.

(24th April 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. After 5th of April 1845, the duties and drawbacks on glass to cease, save as herein excepted, and as to arrears and penalties.
2. The Treasury may grant an allowance in respect of the duties on the stock in hand of manufacturers of and dealers in crown or plate glass or manufacturers of bottle glass, of which an account has been taken by the officers of Excise.
3. Glass exported on Excise drawback not to be imported without repayment of such drawback.
4. Act may be altered this session.

By this Act,

After reciting that by 6 Geo. 4. c. 81. a certain duty of Excise is imposed for and upon every Excise licence to be taken out by every glass maker for each and every glass house: and by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 44. it is provided that upon all glass made in the United Kingdom there shall be charged and paid the several duties, and there shall be allowed and paid the several drawbacks, specified in the schedule to the last-mentioned Act annexed, and made part thereof: and by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 22. it is provided that upon all broad or spread glass there shall be charged and paid the same amount of duty, and there shall be allowed and paid the same drawbacks as on German sheet glass, under the provisions of the said recited Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 44; and by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 25. the duties and drawbacks granted and allowed by the said recited Act of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 44. upon flint glass are repealed, and other duties and drawbacks granted and allowed in lieu thereof: and that it is expedient that the said several duties and drawbacks should cease:—

It is Enacted,

I. That from and after the 5th of April 1845, all duties of Excise now payable upon or for or in respect of any glass maker or glass-house, or any glass made in the United Kingdom, and all drawbacks on the exportation of such glass from the United Kingdom shall cease, and be no longer charged, raised, levied, collected, allowed, or paid, and that the several Acts, clauses, provisions, and regulations for charging, raising, levying, collecting, allowing, and paying the said several duties and drawbacks shall not from and after the said 5th of April be enforced or executed; save and except for the purpose of recovering any duties incurred or charged on or before the said 5th of April, or any arrears thereof, the same not being duties charged on glass which has been warehoused on the manufacture thereof free of duty on or after the 15th of February 1845; and save and except for or in respect of any drawback payable under the said recited Acts or any of them for glass exported at any time previous to the 15th of June 1845, which glass has been packed for exportation under the usual regulations on or before the said 5th of April; and save and except for the purpose of recovering any fine, penalty, or forfeiture for the breach of any of the said Acts, clauses, provisions, or regulations committed previous to the said 5th of April; but that all such duties and arrears (not being as aforesaid), and all such fines, penalties, and forfeitures, may be recovered, levied, enforced, and applied, and all such drawbacks allowed and paid, in the same manner, and by the same powers and authorities, as if this Act had not been passed.

And after reciting that for the purpose of making certain allowances to manufacturers of and dealers in plate glass, crown or German sheet glass, and to manufacturers of bottle glass, made and manufactured in the United Kingdom, for and in respect of their stock in hand of such glass respectively, on which the respective duties thereon have been paid or secured to be paid, such glass has been permitted to be packed as the like goods when intended for exportation to foreign parts, and warehoused under the charge of the officers of Excise, or otherwise deposited with and taken account of by the officers of Excise:—

It is Enacted,

II. That upon all crown and German sheet glass, and upon all common bottles, vessels, and utensils of common bottle metal, which have been so warehoused, deposited, or taken account of as aforesaid, and which on or before the 12th of April 1845 are, on re-examination, found conformable to such previous account thereof as aforesaid, the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland may, for and in respect of the duties thereon respectively paid, allow to the manufacturers or dealers to whom such glass respectively belongs a sum of money equivalent to the drawback to which such glass respectively would have been entitled if the same respectively had been exported to foreign parts previous to the 6th of April 1845, deducting therefrom 25 per cent.; and that upon all plate glass which has been so warehoused or taken account of as aforesaid, and which on or before the said 12th of April is, on re-examination, found conformable to such previous account thereof as aforesaid, the said Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may, for and in respect of the duties thereon paid, allow to the manufacturers or dealers to whom such last-mentioned glass belongs the sum of 1s. 10½d. for every square foot of all rectangular pieces of such plate glass of six inches by four at the least, and not less than one-eighth of an inch in thickness, and the sum of 4l. 4s. for every hundred weight of such plate glass if polished, and not one-eighth of an inch in thickness, deducting 25 per cent. from the sum to be allowed as last mentioned.

III. That no glass or glass wares for or in respect whereof any drawback of Excise has been received or claimed on exportation from the United Kingdom shall be imported into the United Kingdom, unless by the special permission of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs, and on repayment of such drawback; which drawback the said Commissioners of Customs shall collect, recover, and account for as Her Majesty's Duties of Customs, and under the laws and regulations in force relating to such duties at the time of such importation, and notwithstanding that such drawback on the exportation of the like goods from the United Kingdom is at that time repealed.

IV. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

CAP. VII.

AN ACT to repeal the Duties of Customs due upon the Exportation of certain Goods from the United Kingdom.

(24th April 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENT.

Export duties on cement stone and flint, clay and china stone, coals, culm or cinders, repealed.

By this Act,

After reciting that it is expedient that the duties of Customs upon cement stone and flint, ground or unground, clay and china stone, and also upon coals, culm, or cinders, exported in a British ship from the United Kingdom, should cease and determine:—

It is Enacted,

That on after the 12th of March 1845 the said duties shall be and are hereby repealed.

CAP. X.

AN ACT to make certain Provisions for Proceedings in Bastardy.

(8th May 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Proceedings in bastardy according to the forms in the Schedule hereto valid.
2. Mother, when order has been quashed for defect in form, may apply again within six calendar months.
3. Form of recognizance to be given by the putative father.

4. Provision as to the mode of proceeding in cases of applications by women who are pregnant.
5. Putative father may abandon his appeal, and his recognizance shall not be estreated.
6. The mother of the bastard child to be examined by the Court of Quarter Sessions, on appeal against the order in bastardy; but no order to be confirmed unless her evidence is corroborated.
7. Parties may be heard at the petty session by counsel or attorney.
8. Default of sufficient distress within the jurisdiction of the Justices to warrant the commitment to prison.
9. Magistrates of police courts may act alone in cases of bastardy.
10. "Petty Sessional Division," what to include.
11. Interpretation of the word "Recorder."
12. Act may be amended this session.

By this Act,

After reciting that divers questions have been raised as to the validity of certain orders in bastardy made by Justices under the Act of the last session of Parliament, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, intituled 'An Act for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England,' which questions are wholly beside the merits of the cases; and it is desirable to remove such questions, and to prevent the recurrence of the same or similar questions in future:—

It is Enacted,

I. That where any proceedings have been had or taken before the passing of this Act, or shall hereafter be had or taken in matters of bastardy under the provisions of the said recited Act, and shall have been set forth according to the forms in the schedule hereunto annexed, or to the like tenor or effect, the same shall be taken respectively to have been and to be valid and sufficient in law; provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent any Court of General Quarter Sessions from proceeding to hear and determine the merits of any case brought before them on appeal against any such order, or apply to any order heretofore made or professed to have been made under the said Act, which shall have been quashed on appeal to any General Quarter Session of the Peace, or in respect whereof any writ of certiorari shall have been sued out of the Court of Queen's Bench, and served before the 26th of February last, or in place whereof any other order shall have been made.

II. That when any order made under the provision of the said Act prior to the passing of this Act shall have been or shall be quashed for any defect therein, and not upon the merits, it shall be lawful for the mother of the bastard child in whose favour such order shall have been made to take proceedings for the obtaining of another order, according to the provisions of the said Act, at any time within the space of six calendar months after the passing of this Act, although the period limited for her application to the Justice under the said Act shall have expired.

And after reciting that power is given by the said Act to the putative father to appeal against an order made upon him by the Justices in petty session assembled, giving notice of appeal as therein specified, and also sufficient security, by recognizance or otherwise, for the payment of costs, to the satisfaction of some one Justice of the Peace:—

It is Enacted,

III. That the condition of any such recognizance shall be for the appearance of the said putative father at such General Quarter Sessions of the Peace as is required by the said Act, and his trial of the appeal thereat, and the payment of such costs as he shall be then and there ordered to pay; and that in respect of any order to be made after the passing of this Act the party entering into any such recognizance shall forthwith give or send a notice in writing of his having so entered into such recognizance to the woman in whose favour the said order shall have been made, and unless he shall enter into the recognizance before one of the Justices who shall have made the order, to one at least of such Justices; and in default of his giving or sending such notice or notices as aforesaid the appeal shall not be allowed; provided that the sending of such notice or notices by the post shall be taken to be sufficient.

And after reciting that it is enacted by the said Act, that any single woman who may be with child may apply to a Justice of the Peace as therein described for a summons to be served upon the man alleged by her to be the father of such child, and that such Justice shall thereupon issue his summons to such man to appear at a petty session, as therein also set forth, and power is given to such woman after the birth of the child to apply to the Justices at such petty session for an order upon the person so alleged by her to be the father of such child; but doubts are entertained as to the time which shall be fixed by such Justice for the appearance of the said man so summoned at petty session, and it is desirable to remove the same:—

It is Enacted,

IV. That the said Justice to whom any application shall be made by any such woman being pregnant shall summon the man to appear at some petty session at which he usually acts to be held on a day after the time when the said mother shall expect the child to be born, provided that if on such day the woman shall not have been delivered, or the Justices shall be satisfied that she has been delivered at so short a period before such day that she cannot appear at the said session, it shall be lawful for the Justices thereat to adjourn the hearing of the said case until some other day, and so from time to time until the child shall have been born, and the woman shall be able to attend at the said session; and it shall be lawful for the Justices at their petty session to make an order in respect of any such application so made by such woman so pregnant to a Justice as aforesaid, if she apply at such petty session within the space of two calendar months from the birth of the child, although more than forty days shall have elapsed from the time when the summons was served upon the alleged father, or was left at his last place of abode.

V. That if at any time before the hearing of the appeal the putative father who shall have entered into any such recognizance shall give notice in writing of his abandonment of the appeal, to the mother of the child in whose favour the order shall have been made, and to the Justice or Justices before whom the said recognizance shall have been taken, and shall pay or tender to the said mother all sums then due under the said order, and such costs and expenses as she shall have incurred by reason of such notice of appeal, the said recognizance so entered into by the said putative father shall not be estreated, nor in any manner put in force or otherwise proceeded with.

And after reciting that by the said recited Act it is enacted, that where any woman shall apply to the Justices at a petty session for an order upon the person whom she shall allege to be the father of her bastard child, such Justices shall hear the evidence of such woman, and such other evidence as she may produce, and shall also hear any evidence tendered by or on behalf of the person alleged to be the father, and if the evidence of the said mother be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, to the satisfaction of the said Justices, they may make such order as is therein set forth: And that power is thereby given to the putative father to appeal to the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace against such order, but it is not therein set forth what evidence the said General Quarter Sessions shall or may hear on the trial of such appeal, and doubts have been raised as to whether the said mother can be heard by the said Court of Quarter Sessions;—

It is Enacted,

VI. That on the trial of any such appeal before any Court of Quarter Sessions the Justices therein assembled, or the Recorder (as the case may be), shall hear the evidence of the said mother, and such other evidence as she may produce, and any evidence tendered on behalf of the appellant, and proceed to hear and determine the said appeal in other respects according to law, but shall not confirm the order so appealed against unless the evidence of the said mother shall have been corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, to the satisfaction of the said Justices in Quarter Session assembled, or the said Recorder.

VII. That it shall be lawful for any woman who shall apply to the Justices at any petty session for any such order as aforesaid to be assisted in her application by counsel or attorney, and for any person summoned under the said Act, 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 114. to appear at any such petty session as the alleged putative father to appear and make his answer thereto by counsel or attorney; and it shall be lawful for either of such parties to have all witnesses examined and cross-examined by such counsel or attorney.

And after reciting that it is provided in the said first-recited Act, that if default be made by the putative father in payment of the sums ordered to be paid to the mother of a bastard child, any Justice may by warrant cause such putative father to be brought before any two Justices; and it is further provided, that such two Justices may by warrant direct the sum appearing to be due under any such order, and the costs, to be recovered by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such putative father; and if upon the return of such warrant, or if, by the admission of such putative father, it appears that no sufficient distress can be had, then any such two Justices may cause such putative father to be committed to prison: And that doubts have been entertained whether such power of committal exists where it is shewn that the putative father has goods and chattels whereon a distress might be levied, but the same are not within the jurisdiction of such Justices:—

It is declared and Enacted,

VIII. That the said Justices are and shall be empowered to commit any such putative father to prison, according to the provisions of the said Act, if it appear on the return of such distress warrant, or on the admission of the putative father, that no sufficient distress can be had on any goods and chattels within the jurisdiction of the Justices before whom he shall have been brought on such warrant of apprehension.

IX. Declared and enacted, That any one magistrate of the police courts of the metropolis, sitting at a police court within the Metropolitan Police district, has and shall have full power to issue summonses for the appearance of parties and witnesses before such police court, and to do alone any other thing in any matter of bastardy arising under the said Act, within those parts of the said district for which a police court has been or shall be established, which may be done by any Justices at a petty session holden for their several petty sessional divisions in any such matter arising within their divisions respectively, and that the sitting of such magistrate at such police court shall be within all the provisions of the said Act and of this Act concerning a petty session of Justices.

X. That the term "Petty sessional division" in the said Act and this Act shall be taken to include any division of a county, riding, or division having a separate commission of the peace in which one or more petty sessions have been or shall be usually held, or any division for the holding of special sessions formed or to be formed under the provisions of the Act, 9 Geo. 4. c. 43, intituled, 'An Act for the better Regulation of Divisions in the several Counties of England and Wales,' or of the Act, 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 114; and that where there are two or more petty sessions usually held in any such division, or where any Justice acts for two or more of such divisions, he shall require the party whom he shall summon under the authority of the said first-recited Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, to appear at the petty session to be held in any such division, as he shall deem fit.

XI. That in the said first-recited Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, and in this Act, the word "Recorder" shall be taken to apply to any person who shall preside as the Judge at any Court of General or Quarter Session held for any city, borough, liberty, or other place of limited jurisdiction.

XII. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

Warrant of Commitment in default of Distress.

To the Constable of _____ in the County (a) of _____ and to the Keeper of the Common to wit. } Gaol (b) at _____ in the County of _____ WHEREAS Information and Complaint were, on the _____ Day of _____ in the Year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and forty _____ made upon Oath (c) before _____ One of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said County (a) by _____ of the Parish of _____ in the County (a) of _____ single Woman, that by an Order made under the Authority of the Statute passed in the Eighth Year of the Reign of Her present Majesty, intituled, 'An Act for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England,' at the Petty Session holden in and for the Division (a) of _____ in the County of _____ on the _____ Day of _____ in the Year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and forty _____ by Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said County (a) acting in and for the said Division (a) then and there assembled, _____ of _____ in the County (a) of _____ was adjudged to be the putative Father of a Bastard Child then lately born of her Body, and that in and by the said Order it was ordered that the said _____ should pay to her the said _____ so long as she should live and should be of sound Mind, and should not be in any Gaol or Prison, or under Sentence of Transportation, or to such Person as might be appointed to have the Custody of such Bastard Child under the Provisions of the said Statute, the Sum of _____ per Week for the first Six Weeks from the Birth of the said Child, and from the Expiration of such Six Weeks the Sum of _____ per Week _____ until such Child should attain the Age of Thirteen Years, or should die, or that she the said Mother should marry, and the Sum of Ten Shillings for the Midwife, and the Sum of _____ for the Costs incurred in obtaining such Order; that the said _____ had had due Notice of the said Order, and that the said Bastard Child was then living under the Age of Thirteen Years, and that she the said Mother hath not been married since the said Order was made, and that the Payments directed to be made by the said Order had not been made according thereto by the said _____ and there was then in arrear for the same the Sum of being the Amount of Arrears for _____ Weeks Payments, and Ten Shillings for the Midwife, and the Sum of for the Costs incurred in obtaining such Order.

And whereas the said Justice, by Warrant under his Hand and Seal, directed to the Constable of the said Parish of and all Her Majesty's Officers of the Peace in and for the said County (a), commanded him forthwith to apprehend the said _____ and to convey him before Two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said County (a) to answer the Premises, and to be dealt with according to Law. Whereupon the said _____ being brought before Two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said County (a), to shew Cause why the same should not be paid, did not shew any Cause why the same should not be paid; and the same duly appearing upon Oath to be due from the said _____ under the said Order, together with the further Sum of _____ for the Costs attending such Warrant, Apprehension, and bringing up of him, but the said _____ neglecting (d) to make Payment of the said Sums due under the said Order, and the said Sums so due for such Costs, the said Justices required the Constable of the Parish of _____ in the said Warrant mentioned, forthwith to make Distress of the Goods and Chattels of the said _____ and if no such Distress could be found then to certify the same unto them, or unto _____ Two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace acting for the said County (a), to the end that such further Proceedings might be had therein as to Law appertained.

And whereas it appears to us _____ Two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace acting for the said County (a), by Return of the said Constable of the said _____ dated the _____ Day of _____ that he hath made diligent Search, but doth not know of nor can find any Goods and Chattels of the said _____ by Distress and Sale whereof the said Sums and Costs can be recovered, pursuant to the said Warrant; and that the Costs incurred by the said Constable in attempting to make such Distress are _____ Shillings

And the said _____ is now before us (e)
These are therefore to command you the said Constable of _____ to convey the said _____ to the said Common Gaol (b), and these are also to command you the said Keeper of the said Common Gaol (b) to receive the said _____ into the said Common Gaol (b), there to remain without Bail or Mainprize for the Term of (f) _____ unless such Sums and Costs, and the aforesaid Charges attending the Attempt to make the said Distress, together with the Costs and Charges (g) attending the Commitment and conveying of the said _____ to the said Common Gaol (b), and of the Persons employed to convey him thither, be sooner paid and satisfied.

Given under our Hands and Seals, at _____ in the County of _____ this _____ Day of _____ in the Year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and forty _____

CAP. XII.

AN ACT to alter and amend certain Duties of Customs.

(8th May 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Duties repealed.
2. Duties imposed.
3. Duties how to be recovered.
4. Value of goods entered inwards to be stated in the entry and attested by the importer.
5. Act may be amended, &c.

By this Act,

After reciting that by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47. certain duties of Customs were made payable to Her said Majesty, her heirs and successors, upon the goods, wares, and merchandise contained in the Tables marked (A.) and (B.), and Schedule, to this Act annexed: And that it is expedient that such duties should be repealed:—

It is Enacted,

i. That the duties on the several articles so contained in such Tables and Schedule shall be and the same are hereby repealed, at the several periods therein specified.

ii. That in lieu and instead of the duties of Customs now payable upon the goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United Kingdom in the annexed Schedule mentioned and set forth, denominated a Schedule of Duties of Customs, there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid unto Her said Majesty, her heirs and successors, upon the respective goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United Kingdom, the several duties of Customs as the same are respectively inserted, described, and set forth in figures in the said Schedule annexed to this Act.

iii. That the duties by this Act imposed shall be under the management of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs, and shall be ascertained, raised, levied, collected, paid, recovered, allowed, and applied or appropriated under the provisions of an Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 56, intituled, 'An Act for granting Duties of Customs,' and of any other Act or Acts in force relating to the Customs.

And after reciting that it is expedient that correct accounts may continue to be taken of the value of the imports of certain goods upon which duty has hitherto been charged according to the value thereof, but upon which goods the duties have been repealed by this Act:—

It is Enacted,

iv. That upon the entry inwards of any such goods the value thereof shall be stated in the entry, and shall be affirmed by the declaration of the importer or his known agent, written upon the entry and attested by his signature, and if such declaration be false, the person signing the same shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 20*l.*; and it shall be lawful for the landing waiter or other officer appointed to examine such goods to call for the invoice, bills of parcels, and such other documents relating thereto as he may think necessary for ascertaining the true value of the same.

v. That this Act may be altered or amended by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CAP. XIII.

AN ACT to repeal the Duties of Excise on Sugar manufactured in the United Kingdom, and to impose other Duties in lieu thereof.

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Repeal of the Excise duties on sugar manufactured in the United Kingdom.
2. New Excise duty on such sugar of 14s. per cwt.
3. New duty to be raised and levied in the same manner as other Excise duties; and powers and penalties of all Excise Acts to apply to this Act.
4. Act may be amended, &c.

By this Act,

After reciting that by 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 57, a duty of Excise of 1l. 4s. was imposed on every hundred weight of sugar manufactured in the United Kingdom from beet root: and that by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 57. the same amount of duty as was by law payable on sugar manufactured from beet root, was imposed upon all sugar manufactured in the United Kingdom, from whatever materials made: and that it is expedient to repeal the said duties, and to impose other duties in lieu thereof:—

It is Enacted,

I. That from and after the passing of this Act, the duties aforesaid shall cease and be no longer paid or payable, save and except in all cases relating to the suing for, levying, and recovering of any arrear thereof, or any fine, penalty, or forfeiture which has been incurred before the passing of this Act.

II. That in lieu of the duties by this Act repealed, there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid the duty of Excise following; (that is to say), for and upon every hundred weight of sugar manufactured in the United Kingdom, from whatever materials made, and so in proportion for any greater or lesser quantity than a hundred weight, the sum of 14s.

III. That the said duties by this Act imposed shall be under the management of the Commissioners of Excise, and the same shall be charged, raised, levied, collected, and recovered, applied and accounted for under the enactments and provisions of the said first-recited Act, and in such and the like manner, and in and by the same means, ways, or methods by which any other duties of Excise are or may be charged, raised, levied, collected, and recovered, applied and accounted for; and the said first-recited Act, and all and every other Act or Acts relating to the duties of Excise, and all and every fine, pain, penalty, and forfeiture of any nature or kind whatsoever for any offence against or in breach of the said first-recited Act or any other Act or Acts for securing the duties of Excise, or for the regulation thereof, in force immediately before the passing of this Act, and the several clauses, powers, and directions therein contained, shall and the same are hereby respectively directed and declared to extend to, and shall be applied, practised, and put in execution for and in respect of the duties of Excise by this Act imposed, in as full and ample a manner as if all and every the said Act and Acts, clauses, provisions, powers, directions, fines, pains, penalties and forfeitures were repeated and re-enacted in this Act.

IV. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

CAP. XIV.

AN ACT to exempt Ships carrying Passengers to North America from the Obligation of having on board a Physician, Surgeon, or Apothecary.

(8th May 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. So much of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112. as requires ships carrying passengers to the East coast of North America, to have surgeons, &c. on board when the number of persons amount to 100, repealed.
2. Proceedings for recovery of penalties shall be stayed.
3. Act may be amended, &c.

By this Act,

After reciting that by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 107. ships carrying passengers to North America were exempted from the obligation of having on board a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, as required by the said Act in other cases therein specified: and that by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112. it is, among other things, enacted, that every ship having one hundred persons or upwards on board, and every ship, the voyage of which shall be deemed, under the provisions of the first-recited Act, to exceed twelve weeks, having fifty persons or upwards on board, shall have on board, as one of her complement, some person duly authorized by law to practise in this kingdom as a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, whereby the exemption granted by the first-recited Act to ships carrying passengers to the continent of North America has been taken away in all cases where the total number of persons on board any such ship shall amount to one hundred and upwards; and it is expedient that such exemption be preserved:—

It is Enacted,

I. That so much of the last-recited Act as enacts that ships, as defined in the last-recited Act, carrying passengers, according to the provisions of the first-recited Act, from any port or place in the United Kingdom, or in the Islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, or Man, to the East Coast of the continent of North America, shall have on board a physician, surgeon, or apothecary as often as the total number of persons on board any such ship shall amount to one hundred and upwards, shall be repealed.

II. That any person against whom any proceeding or proceedings shall have been commenced, on or before the day of the passing of this Act, for the recovery of any pecuniary penalty incurred, or supposed to have been incurred, under the provisions of the last-recited Act, for any breach or non-observance of so much of the last-recited Act as is herein repealed, may apply to the Court in which, or to any Justice or Justices of the Peace before whom, any such proceeding or proceedings shall have been commenced, for an order that such proceedings shall be discontinued but upon payment of the costs thereof incurred to the time of such application being made, in case such proceeding shall have been commenced before the 17th of April in this year, such costs to be taxed according to the practice of the Court, or at the discretion of the Justice or Justices before whom such proceeding shall have been had; and every such Court or Justice or Justices upon such application and proof that sufficient notice of the application has been given to the plaintiff or informer, or to his attorney, and upon being satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise, that such proceedings have been commenced for the recovery of such pecuniary penalty as aforesaid, shall make such order as aforesaid; and upon the making such order as aforesaid, and on payment or tender of such costs as aforesaid, where costs are hereinbefore made payable, all further proceedings for the recovery of any such pecuniary penalty shall be forthwith discontinued.

III. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CAP. XV.

AN ACT to repeal the Duties of Excise on Sales by Auction, and to impose a new Duty on the Licence to be taken out by all Auctioneers in the United Kingdom.

(8th May 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Duties on sales by auction repealed.
2. New duty on auctioneers licences throughout the United Kingdom.
3. New duty to be under the management of the Commissioners of Excise, and recoverable, &c. under the provisions of this and other Acts of Excise.
4. Licences to be taken out, and to be renewed annually.

5. Auction licence not necessary in certain cases.
6. 6 Geo. 4. c. 81. s. 8. repealed, and one Excise licence to be sufficient.
7. Auctioneer, before he shall commence any sale, shall suspend or affix a ticket or board containing his full christian and surname and place of residence.
8. Licence to be produced, on demand, or a deposit of 10l. made, on pain of one month's imprisonment.
9. Act may be altered this session.

By this Act,

After reciting that by 6 Geo. 4. c. 81. a certain duty of Excise is imposed for and upon every licence to be taken out by every person exercising or carrying on the trade or business of an auctioneer, or selling any goods or chattels, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, by auction; and by a regulation in the said last-recited Act, and by certain other Acts relating to the duties of stamps, auctioneers are required in certain cases to take out separate and distinct licences for selling particular goods and chattels by auction, in addition to their auctioneer's licence: And that certain duties of Excise upon the purchase money arising or payable by virtue of any sale at auction in Great Britain and Ireland are imposed and regulated by several Acts; (that is to say,) by 43 Geo. 3. c. 69, 45 Geo. 3. c. 30, 54 Geo. 3. c. 82, 55 Geo. 3. c. 142, and by several other Acts for altering or amending the said recited Acts or some of them: And that it is expedient that the said last-mentioned duties, and all duties now imposed upon or for or in respect of auctioneers or auctions, and all Acts, clauses, provisions, and regulations now in force relating thereto, should cease, save and except as after mentioned:—

It is Enacted,

i. That from and after the passing of this Act the said last-mentioned duties, and all duties of Excise now payable in Great Britain or Ireland upon or for or in respect of auctioneers and auctions or sales at auction, and all and every Act and Acts of Excise, and all clauses, provisions, exemptions, penalties, and things in any Act of Excise in force in Great Britain and Ireland respectively at or immediately before the passing of this Act, relating to auctions, or to duties on sales by auction, or to any auctioneers, save only such clauses, provisions, penalties, matters, and things as are contained in the said recited Act, 6 Geo. 4. c. 81, and are not repealed or altered by this Act, are hereby repealed, save and except for the purpose of recovering any duties on auctions, or any arrears of such duties, or any fine, penalty, or forfeiture relating to auctions, or for allowing any exemptions from duties which have been incurred or become due or allowable at any time before the passing of this Act; but that all and every such regulations and provisions, powers and authorities, and all bonds for securing the payment of any such duties on auctions, in force at and immediately before the passing of this Act, shall be and remain in full force and effect for the levying and collecting the said last-mentioned duties, and arrears of duties, fines, penalties, and forfeitures, and for allowing the said exemptions.

ii. That from and after the passing of this Act there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid to Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, in lieu of all duties now imposed on licences to be taken out by auctioneers throughout the United Kingdom, the following annual sum or duty of Excise; (that is to say,) for and upon every licence to be taken out by every person exercising or carrying on the trade or business of an auctioneer in any part of the United Kingdom the sum of 10l.

iii. That the said duty hereby imposed shall be under the management of the Commissioners of Excise, and shall be collected, paid, and accounted for in the same manner as other the duties of Excise, and shall be charged, raised, levied, sued for, and paid under the provisions of this Act, and the general or special provisions, clauses, enactments, regulations, pains, penalties, and forfeitures contained in any Act or Acts relating to the collection and management of the revenue of Excise; and all penalties by this Act imposed shall be prosecuted, recovered, and applied as any other penalties under the laws of Excise.

iv. That every person who exercises or carries on the trade or business of an auctioneer, or who acts in such capacity at any sale or roup, and every person who sells or offers for sale any goods or chattels, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein, at any sale or roup where any person or persons become the purchaser of the same by competition, and being the highest bidder, either by being the single bidder or increasing upon the biddings made by others, or decreasing on sums named by the auctioneer or person acting as auctioneer, or other person at such sale, or by any other mode of sale by competition, shall (except as hereinafter in this Act mentioned) be deemed to carry on the trade or business of an auctioneer, and shall be required to take out such licence as by this Act directed; and every such licence shall be renewed annually ten days at least before the expiration thereof, on the 5th of July in each and every year; and every auctioneer having had such a licence who continues to carry on the trade or business of an auctioneer in the year next ensuing the expiration thereof, and omits to renew the same as aforesaid, and every person who carries on the trade or business of an auctioneer as aforesaid without taking out such licence as by this Act directed, shall (except as hereinafter in this Act mentioned) forfeit 100l.: Provided always, that auctioneers who have licences in force at the passing of this Act, and which licences do not expire until the 5th of July now next ensuing, shall not be required to take out the licence by this Act directed for the purpose of carrying on the business of an auctioneer until ten days before the expiration of their current licences, but that every such auctioneer may, at any time within the last quarter of the current year to expire on the said 5th of July, take out the licence by this Act directed, on payment of a fourth part of the duty imposed on such last-mentioned licence; but that on every such licence taken out after the said 5th of July, at whatever period of the year, the full duty of Excise by this Act imposed shall be paid, any other Act or Acts to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

v. That it shall not be necessary for any person selling any goods or chattels by auction in any of the cases hereinafter mentioned to take out the licence by this Act required: Any person selling any goods or chattels by auction under a distress for non-payment of rent or tithes to less amount than 20l.; or under authority of 6 Geo. 4. c. 48, 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 75, 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 43, 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 41, or under authority of any other Act or Acts of Parliament now in force in which the like exemption as by the Act specified is given to the proper officer of court executing the process of such court to sell the effects seized by him by auction, without taking out or having any licence as an auctioneer, provided the sum for which such process is enforced is under 20*l*.

VI. That so much of the said recited Act of 6 Geo. 4. c. 81. s. 8, as enacts, "That every person exercising or carrying on the trade or business of an auctioneer, or selling any goods or chattels, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, by auction, shall, over and above any licence to him or her granted as an auctioneer, take out such licence as is required by law to deal in or retail, or to vend, trade in, or sell, any goods or commodities, for the dealing in or retailing or vending, trading in or selling of which an Excise licence is specially required, before he or she shall be permitted or authorized to sell such goods or commodities by auction; and if any such person shall sell any such goods or commodities as aforesaid by auction without having taken out such licence as aforesaid for that purpose, he or she shall be subject and liable to the penalty in that behalf imposed upon persons dealing in or retailing, vending, trading, or selling any such goods or commodities without licence, notwithstanding any licence to him or her before granted as aforesaid for the purpose of exercising or carrying on the trade or business of an auctioneer, or selling any goods or chattels, lands, tenements, or hereditaments by auction, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding," together with the proviso thereto attached, and so much of any other Act or Acts of Parliament by which it is required that a separate and distinct licence shall be taken out by any auctioneer selling by auction gold or silver plate or patent medicines, or any other articles, are hereby repealed; and any auctioneer having at the time in force a licence on which the duty under the provisions of this Act has been paid may sell by auction any such property, goods, or commodities, without taking out any other licence in such respect, any other Act or Acts to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

VII. That every auctioneer, before beginning any auction, shall affix or suspend, or cause to be affixed or suspended, a ticket or board containing his true and full christian and surname and residence painted, printed, or written in large letters publicly visible and legible in some conspicuous part of the room or place where the auction is held, so that all persons may easily read the same, and shall also keep such ticket or board so affixed or suspended during the whole time of such auction being held; and if any auctioneer begins any auction, or acts as auctioneer at any auction, in any room or place where his name and residence is not so painted or written on a ticket or board so affixed or suspended, and kept affixed or suspended as aforesaid, he shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 20*l*.

VIII. That if any person acting as an auctioneer, and by this Act required to take out a licence as a person exercising or carrying on the trade or business of an auctioneer, does not at the time of any sale by auction, on demand of any officer of Excise or Customs, or any officer of Stamps and Taxes, produce and shew to such officer a proper licence to him granted under this Act, and then in force, or does not immediately deposit with such officer the sum of 10*l*., every such person may be arrested and detained by any officer of the peace as hereinafter mentioned; and every officer of the peace shall, at the request of any such officer as first aforesaid, at the termination of such sale, or sooner if convenient, arrest and convey such person before some one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace of the county or place where such sale has been held, and such Justice shall examine into the fact or facts charged, and upon proof, either by confession of the party offending or by the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses (which oath the said Justice is hereby empowered to administer), that the person so brought before him did act as an auctioneer as aforesaid, and did not produce such licence, or deposit such sum of money as aforesaid, shall, by warrant under his hand, commit such offender to the common gaol or house of correction for the county or place where the said sale has been held, for any time not exceeding one calendar month from the day of such commitment; and no such imprisonment, nor the deposit of such sum of money as aforesaid, shall in any manner prejudice or affect any proceedings afterwards instituted for recovery of the penalty incurred by such person for acting as an auctioneer at such sale as aforesaid without the licence by this Act directed; but if any person, having so deposited such sum of money as aforesaid, at any time before the expiration of one week from the date of such sale as aforesaid produces to the officer with whom he deposited the same a proper licence to him granted and in force as an auctioneer before and at such sale, every such officer shall immediately thereupon repay to such person the full sum so deposited with him; if otherwise, every such officer shall at the expiration of the said week account for all such money to the Commissioners of Excise, or such person as they may appoint to receive the same.

IX. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

By this Act,

After reciting, that it is expedient to comprise in one general Act sundry provisions relating to the constitution and management of joint-stock companies, usually introduced into Acts of Parliament authorising the execution of undertakings of a public nature by such companies, and that as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in each of the several Acts relating to such undertakings as for ensuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves:—

It is Enacted,

I. That this Act shall apply to every joint-stock company which shall by any Act which shall hereafter be passed be incorporated for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking, and this Act shall be incorporated with such Act; and all the clauses and provisions of this Act, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by any such Act, shall apply to the company which shall be incorporated by such Act, and to the undertaking for carrying on which such company shall be incorporated, so far as the same shall be applicable thereto respectively; and such clauses and provisions, as well as the clauses and provisions of every other Act which shall be incorporated with such Act, shall, save as aforesaid, form part of such Act, and be construed together therewith as forming one Act.

II. And with respect to the construction of this Act, and of other Acts to be incorporated therewith,—it is enacted as follows:—The expression “the special Act” used in this Act shall be construed to mean any Act which shall be hereafter passed incorporating a joint-stock company for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking, and with which this Act shall be so incorporated as aforesaid; and the word “prescribed” used in this Act, in reference to any matter herein stated, shall be construed to refer to such matter as the same shall be prescribed or provided for in the special Act; and the sentence in which such word shall occur shall be construed as if instead of the word “prescribed” the expression “prescribed for that purpose in the special Act” had been used; and the expression “the undertaking” shall mean the undertaking or works, of whatever nature, which shall by the special Act be authorized to be executed.

III. The following words and expressions both in this and the special Act shall have the several meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something in the subject or the context repugnant to such construction; (that is to say,) Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number; and words importing the plural number only shall include the singular number:

Words importing the masculine gender only shall include females:

The word “Lands” shall extend to messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments of any tenure:

The word “Lease” shall include an agreement for a lease:

The word “Month” shall mean calendar month:

The expression “Superior Courts” shall mean Her Majesty’s superior courts of record at Westminster or Dublin, as the case may require:

The word “Oath” shall include affirmation in the case of Quakers, or other declaration lawfully substituted for an oath in the case of any other persons exempted by law from the necessity of taking an oath:

The word “County” shall include any riding or other like division of a county, and shall also include county of a city or county of a town:

The word "Justice" shall mean Justice of the Peace acting for the county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or other place where the matter requiring the cognizance of any such Justice shall arise, and who shall not be interested in the matter; and where any matter shall be authorized or required to be done by two Justices the expression "Two Justices" shall be understood to mean two Justices assembled and acting together in petty sessions:

The expression "the Company" shall mean the company constituted by the special Act:

The expression "the Directors" shall mean the directors of the company, and shall include all persons having the direction of the undertaking, whether under the name of directors, managers, committee of management, or under any other name:

The word "Shareholder" shall mean shareholder, proprietor, or member of the company; and in referring to any such shareholder, expressions properly applicable to a person shall be held to apply to a corporation: and

The expression "the Secretary" shall mean the secretary of the company, and shall include the word "Clerk."

IV. That in citing this Act in other Acts of Parliament and in legal instruments it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845."

And after reciting, that it may be convenient in some cases to incorporate with Acts of Parliament hereafter to be passed some portion only of the provisions of this Act;—

It is Enacted,

V. That for the purpose of making any such incorporation it shall be sufficient in any such Act to enact that the clauses and provisions of this Act, with respect to the matter so proposed to be incorporated (describing such matter as it is described in this Act in the words introductory to the enactment with respect to such matter), shall be incorporated with such Act; and thereupon all the clauses and provisions of this Act with respect to the matter so incorporated shall, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by such Act, form part of such Act, and such Act shall be construed as if the substance of such clauses and provisions were set forth therein with reference to the matter to which such Act shall relate.

VI. And with respect to the distribution of the capital of the company into shares,—it is enacted, as follows: The capital of the company shall be divided into shares of the prescribed number and amount; and such shares shall be numbered in arithmetical progression, beginning with number one; and every such share shall be distinguished by its appropriate number.

VII. All shares in the undertaking shall be personal estate, and transmissible as such, and shall not be of the nature of real estate.

VIII. Every person who shall have subscribed the prescribed sum or upwards to the capital of the company, or shall otherwise have become entitled to a share in the company, and whose name shall have been entered on the register of shareholders hereinafter mentioned, shall be deemed a shareholder of the company.

IX. The company shall keep a book, to be called the "Register of Shareholders;" and in such book shall be fairly and distinctly entered, from time to time, the names of the several corporations, and the names and additions of the several persons entitled to shares in the company, together with the number of shares to which such shareholders shall be respectively entitled, distinguishing each share by its number, and the amount of the subscriptions paid on such shares, and the surnames or corporate names of the said shareholders shall be placed in alphabetical order; and such book shall be authenticated by the common seal of the company being affixed thereto; and such authentication shall take place at the first ordinary meeting, or at the next subsequent meeting of the company, and so from time to time at each ordinary meeting of the company.

X. In addition to the said register of shareholders, the company shall provide a book, to be called the "Shareholders Address Book," in which the secretary shall from time to time enter in alphabetical order the corporate names and places of business of the several shareholders of the company, being corporations, and the surnames of the several other shareholders with their respective christian names, places of abode, and descriptions, so far as the same shall be known to the company; and every shareholder, or if such shareholder be a corporation the clerk or agent of such corporation, may at all convenient times peruse such book gratis, and may require a copy thereof or of any part thereof; and for every hundred words so required to be copied, the company may demand a sum not exceeding 6d.

XI. On demand of the holder of any share the company shall cause a certificate of the proprietorship of such share to be delivered to such shareholder; and such certificate shall have the common seal of the company affixed thereto; and such certificate shall specify the share in the undertaking to which such shareholder is entitled; and the same may be according to the form in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect; and for such certificate the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or if no amount be prescribed, then a sum not exceeding 2s. 6d.

XII. The said certificate shall be admitted in all courts as prima facie evidence of the title of such shareholder, his executors, administrators, successors, or assigns, to the share therein specified; nevertheless the want of such certificate shall not prevent the holder of any share from disposing thereof.

XIII. If any such certificate be worn out or damaged, then, upon the same being produced at some meeting of the directors, such directors may order the same to be cancelled, and thereupon another similar certificate shall be given to the party in whom the property of such certificate, and of the share therein mentioned, shall be at the time vested; or if such certificate be lost or destroyed, then, upon proof thereof to the satisfaction of the directors, a similar certificate shall be given to the party entitled to the certificate so lost or destroyed; and in either case a due entry of the substituted certificate shall be made by the secretary in the register of shareholders; and for every such certificate so given or exchanged the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or if no amount be prescribed, then a sum not exceeding 2s. 6d.

xiv. And with respect to the transfer or transmission of shares,—it is enacted as follows: Subject to the regulations herein or in the special Act contained, every shareholder may sell and transfer all or any of his shares in the undertaking, or all or any part of his interest in the capital stock of the company, in case such shares shall, under the provision hereinafter contained, be consolidated into capital stock; and every such transfer shall be by deed duly stamped, in which the consideration shall be truly stated; and such deed may be according to the form in the Schedule (B.) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect.

xv. The said deed of transfer (when duly executed) shall be delivered to the secretary, and be kept by him; and the secretary shall enter a memorial thereof in a book to be called the "Register of Transfers," and shall indorse such entry on the deed of transfer, and shall on demand deliver a new certificate to the purchaser; and for every such entry, together with such indorsement and certificate, the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or if no amount be prescribed, then a sum not exceeding 2s. 6d.; and on the request of the purchaser of any share an indorsement of such transfer shall be made on the certificate of such share, instead of a new certificate being granted; and such indorsement, being signed by the secretary, shall be considered in every respect the same as a new certificate; and until such transfer has been so delivered to the secretary as aforesaid the vendor of the share shall continue liable to the company for any calls that may be made upon such share, and the purchaser of the share shall not be entitled to receive any share of the profits of the undertaking, or to vote in respect of such share.

xvi. No shareholder shall be entitled to transfer any share, after any call shall have been made in respect thereof, until he shall have paid such call, nor until he shall have paid all calls for the time being due on every share held by him.

xvii. It shall be lawful for the directors to close the register of transfers for the prescribed period, or if no period be prescribed, then for a period not exceeding fourteen days previous to each ordinary meeting, and they may fix a day for the closing of the same, of which seven days' notice shall be given by advertisement in some newspaper as after mentioned; and any transfer made during the time when the transfer books are so closed shall, as between the company and the party claiming under the same, but not otherwise, be considered as made subsequently to such ordinary meeting.

xviii. If the interest in any share have become transmitted in consequence of the death or bankruptcy or insolvency of any shareholder, or in consequence of the marriage of a female shareholder, or by any other lawful means than by a transfer according to the provisions of this or the special Act, such transmission shall be authenticated by a declaration in writing as hereinafter mentioned, or in such other manner as the directors shall require; and every such declaration shall state the manner in which and the party to whom such share shall have been so transmitted, and shall be made and signed by some credible person before a Justice, or before a Master or Master Extraordinary of the High Court of Chancery; and such declaration shall be left with the secretary, and thereupon he shall enter the name of the person entitled under such transmission in the register of shareholders; and for every such entry the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, and where no amount shall be prescribed then not exceeding 5s.; and until such transmission has been so authenticated no person claiming by virtue of any such transmission shall be entitled to receive any share of the profits of the undertaking, nor to vote in respect of any such share as the holder thereof.

xix. If such transmission be by virtue of the marriage of a female shareholder, the said declaration shall contain a copy of the register of such marriage, or other particulars of the celebration thereof, and shall declare the identity of the wife with the holder of such share; and if such transmission have taken place by virtue of any testamentary instrument, or by intestacy, the probate of the will or the letters of administration, or an official extract therefrom, shall, together with such declaration, be produced to the secretary; and upon such production in either of the cases aforesaid the secretary shall make an entry of the declaration in the said register of transfers.

xx. The company shall not be bound to see to the execution of any trust, whether express, implied, or constructive, to which any of the said shares may be subject; and the receipt of the party in whose name any such share shall stand in the books of the company, or if it stands in the names of more parties than one, the receipt of one of the parties named in the register of shareholders, shall from time to time be a sufficient discharge to the company for any dividend or other sum of money payable in respect of such share, notwithstanding any trusts to which such share may then be subject, and whether or not the company have had notice of such trusts; and the company shall not be bound to see to the application of the money paid upon such receipt.

xxi. And with respect to the payment of subscriptions and the means of enforcing the payment of calls,—it is enacted as follows: The several persons who have subscribed any money towards the undertaking, or their legal representatives, respectively, shall pay the sums respectively so subscribed, or such portions thereof as shall from time to time be called for by the company, at such times and places as shall be appointed by the company; and with respect to the provisions herein or in the special Act contained for enforcing the payment of calls, the word "Shareholder" shall extend to and include the legal personal representatives of such shareholder.

xxii. It shall be lawful for the company from time to time to make such calls of money upon the respective shareholders, in respect of the amount of capital respectively subscribed or owing by them, as they shall think fit, provided that twenty-one days' notice at the least be given of each call, and that no call exceed the prescribed amount, if any, and that successive calls be not made at less than the prescribed interval, if any, and that the aggregate amount of calls made in any one year do not exceed the prescribed amount, if any; and every shareholder shall be liable to pay the amount of the calls so made, in respect of the shares held by him, to the persons and at the times and places from time to time appointed by the company.

xxiii. If, before or on the day appointed for payment, any shareholder do not pay the amount of any call to which he is liable, then such shareholder shall be liable to pay interest for the same at the rate allowed by law from the day appointed for the payment thereof to the time of the actual payment.

XXIV. It shall be lawful for the company, if they think fit, to receive from any of the shareholders willing to advance the same all or any part of the monies due upon their respective shares beyond the sums actually called for; and upon the principal monies so paid in advance, or so much thereof as from time to time shall exceed the amount of the calls then made upon the shares in respect of which such advance shall be made, the company may pay interest at such rate, not exceeding the legal rate of interest for the time being, as the shareholder paying such sum in advance and the company shall agree upon.

XXV. If at the time appointed by the company for the payment of any call any shareholder fail to pay the amount of such call, it shall be lawful for the company to sue such shareholder for the amount thereof, in any court of law or equity having competent jurisdiction, and to recover the same, with lawful interest, from the day on which such call was payable.

XXVI. In any action or suit to be brought by the company against any shareholder to recover any money due for any call it shall not be necessary to set forth the special matter, but it shall be sufficient for the company to declare that the defendant is the holder of one share or more in the company (stating the number of shares), and is indebted to the company in the sum of money to which the calls in arrear shall amount in respect of one call or more upon one share or more (stating the number and amount of each of such calls), whereby an action hath accrued to the company by virtue of this and the special Act.

XXVII. On the trial or hearing of such action or suit it shall be sufficient to prove that the defendant at the time of making such call was a holder of one share or more in the undertaking, and that such call was in fact made, and such notice thereof given as is directed by this or the special Act; and it shall not be necessary to prove the appointment of the directors who made such call, nor any other matter whatsoever; and thereupon the company shall be entitled to recover what shall be due upon such call, with interest thereon, unless it shall appear either that any such call exceeds the prescribed amount, or that due notice of such call was not given, or that the prescribed interval between two successive calls had not elapsed, or that calls amounting to more than the sum prescribed for the total amount of calls in one year had been made within that period.

XXVIII. The production of the register of shareholders shall be prima facie evidence of such defendant being a shareholder, and of the number and amount of his shares.

XXIX. And with respect to the forfeiture of shares for nonpayment of calls,—it is enacted as follows: If any shareholder fail to pay any call payable by him, together with the interest, if any, that shall have accrued thereon, the directors, at any time after the expiration of two months from the day appointed for payment of such call, may declare the share in respect of which such call was payable forfeited, and that whether the company have sued for the amount of such call or not.

XXX. Before declaring any share forfeited the directors shall cause notice of such intention to be left at or transmitted by the post to the usual or last place of abode of the person appearing by the register of shareholders to be the proprietor of such share; and if the holder of any such share be abroad, or if his usual or last place of abode be not known to the directors, by reason of its being imperfectly described in the shareholders' address book, or otherwise, or if the interest in any such share shall be known by the directors to have become transmitted otherwise than by transfer, as hereinbefore mentioned, but a declaration of such transmission shall not have been registered as aforesaid, and so the address of the parties to whom the same may have been transmitted, or may for the time being belong, shall not be known to the directors, the directors shall give public notice of such intention in the London or Dublin Gazette, according as the company's principal place of business shall be situate in England or Ireland, and also in some newspaper, as after mentioned; and the several notices aforesaid shall be given twenty-one days at least before the directors shall make such declaration of forfeiture.

XXXI. The said declaration of forfeiture shall not take effect so as to authorize the sale or other disposition of any share until such declaration have been confirmed at some general meeting of the company to be held after the expiration of two months at the least from the day on which such notice of intention to make such declaration of forfeiture shall have been given; and it shall be lawful for the company to confirm such forfeiture at any such meeting, and by an order at such meeting, or at any subsequent general meeting, to direct the share so forfeited to be sold or otherwise disposed of.

XXXII. After such confirmation as aforesaid it shall be lawful for the directors to sell the forfeited share, either by public auction or private contract, and if there be more than one such forfeited share, then either separately or together, as to them shall seem fit; and any shareholder may purchase any forfeited share so sold.

XXXIII. A declaration in writing, by some credible person not interested in the matter, made before any Justice, or before any Master or Master Extraordinary of the High Court of Chancery, that the call in respect of a share was made, and notice thereof given, and that default in payment of the call was made, and that the forfeiture of the share was declared and confirmed in manner hereinbefore required, shall be sufficient evidence of the facts therein stated; and such declaration, and the receipt of the treasurer of the company for the price of such share, shall constitute a good title to such share; and a certificate of proprietorship shall be delivered to such purchaser, and thereupon he shall be deemed the holder of such share, discharged from all calls due prior to such purchase; and he shall not be bound to see to the application of the purchase money, nor shall his title to such share be affected by any irregularity in the proceedings in reference to such sale.

XXXIV. The company shall not sell or transfer more of the shares of any such defaulter than will be sufficient, as nearly as can be ascertained at the time of such sale, to pay the arrears then due from such defaulter on account of any calls, together with interest, and the expenses attending such sale and declaration of forfeiture; and if the money produced by the sale of any such forfeited shares be more than sufficient to pay all arrears of calls and interest thereon due at the time of such sale, and the expenses attending the declaration of forfeiture and sale thereof, the surplus shall, on demand, be paid to the defaulter.

XXXV. If payment of such arrears of calls and interest and expenses be made before any share so forfeited and vested in the company shall have been sold, such share shall revert to the party to whom the same belonged before such forfeiture, in such manner as if such calls had been duly paid.

XXXVI. And with respect to the remedies of creditors of the company against the shareholders,—it is enacted as follows: If any execution, either at law or in equity, shall have been issued against the property or effects of the company, and if there cannot be found sufficient whereon to levy such execution, then such execution may be issued against any of the shareholders to the extent of their shares respectively in the capital of the company not then paid up: Provided always, that no such execution shall issue against any shareholder except upon an order of the Court in which the action, suit, or other proceeding shall have been brought or instituted, made upon motion in open court after sufficient notice in writing to the persons sought to be charged; and upon such motion such Court may order execution to issue accordingly; and for the purpose of ascertaining the names of the shareholders, and the amount of capital remaining to be paid upon their respective shares, it shall be lawful for any person entitled to any such execution, at all reasonable times, to inspect the register of shareholders without fee.

XXXVII. If by means of any such execution any shareholder shall have paid any sum of money beyond the amount then due from him in respect of calls, he shall forthwith be reimbursed such additional sum by the directors out of the funds of the company.

XXXVIII. And with respect to the borrowing of money by the company on mortgage or bond,—it is enacted as follows: If the company be authorized by the special Act to borrow money on mortgage or bond, it shall be lawful for them, subject to the restrictions contained in the special Act, to borrow on mortgage or bond such sums of money as shall from time to time, by an order of a general meeting of the company, be authorized to be borrowed, not exceeding in the whole the sum prescribed by the special Act, and for securing the repayment of the money so borrowed, with interest, to mortgage the undertaking, and the future calls on the shareholders, or to give bonds in manner hereinafter mentioned.

XXXIX. If, after having borrowed any part of the money so authorized to be borrowed on mortgage or bond, the company pay off the same, it shall be lawful for them again to borrow the amount so paid off, and so from time to time; but such power of re-borrowing shall not be exercised without the authority of a general meeting of the company, unless the money be so re-borrowed in order to pay off any existing mortgage or bond.

XL. Where by the special Act the company shall be restricted from borrowing any money on mortgage or bond until a definite portion of their capital shall be subscribed or paid up, or where by this or the special Act the authority of a general meeting is required for such borrowing, the certificate of a Justice that such definite portion of the capital has been subscribed or paid up, and a copy of the order of a general meeting of the company authorizing the borrowing of any money, certified by one of the directors or by the secretary to be a true copy, shall be sufficient evidence of the fact of the capital required to be subscribed or paid up having been so subscribed or paid up, and of the order for borrowing money having been made; and upon production to any Justice of the books of the company, and of such other evidence as he shall think sufficient, such Justice shall grant the certificate aforesaid.

XLI. Every mortgage and bond for securing money borrowed by the company, shall be by deed under the common seal of the company, duly stamped, and wherein the consideration shall be truly stated; and every such mortgage-deed or bond may be according to the form in the Schedule (C.) or (D.) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect.

XLII. The respective mortgagees shall be entitled one with another to their respective proportions of the tolls, sums, and premises comprised in such mortgages, and of the future calls payable by the shareholders, if comprised therein, according to the respective sums in such mortgages mentioned to be advanced by such mortgagees respectively, and to be repaid the sums so advanced, with interest, without any preference one above another by reason of priority of the date of any such mortgage, or of the meeting at which the same was authorized.

XLIII. No such mortgage (although it should comprise future calls on the shareholders) shall, unless expressly so provided, preclude the company from receiving and applying to the purposes of the company any calls to be made by the company.

XLIV. The respective obligees in such bonds shall, proportionally according to the amount of the monies secured thereby, be entitled to be paid, out of the tolls or other property or effects of the company, the respective sums in such bonds mentioned, and thereby intended to be secured, without any preference one above another by reason of priority of date of any such bond, or of the meeting at which the same was authorized, or otherwise howsoever.

XLV. A register of mortgages and bonds shall be kept by the secretary, and within fourteen days after the date of any such mortgage or bond an entry or memorial, specifying the number and date of such mortgage or bond, and the sums secured thereby, and the names of the parties thereto, with their proper additions, shall be made in such register; and such register may be perused at all reasonable times by any of the shareholders, or by any mortgagee or bond creditor of the company, or by any person interested in any such mortgage or bond, without fee or reward.

XLVI. Any party entitled to any such mortgage or bond may from time to time transfer his right and interest therein to any other person; and every such transfer shall be by deed duly stamped, wherein the consideration shall be truly stated; and every such transfer may be according to the form in the Schedule (E.) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect.

XLVII. Within thirty days after the date of every such transfer, if executed within the United Kingdom, or otherwise within thirty days after the arrival thereof in the United Kingdom, it shall be produced to the secretary, and thereupon the secretary shall cause an entry or memorial thereof to be made in the same manner as in the case of the original mortgage; and after such entry every such transfer shall entitle the transferee to the full benefit of the original mortgage or bond in all respects; and no party, having made such transfer, shall have power to make void, release, or discharge the mortgage or bond so transferred, or any money thereby secured; and for such entry the company may demand a sum not exceeding the prescribed sum, or, where no sum shall be prescribed, the sum of 2s. 6d.; and until such entry the company shall not be in any manner responsible to the transferee in respect of such mortgage.

XLVIII. The interest of the money borrowed upon any such mortgage or bond shall be paid at the periods appointed in such mortgage or bond, and if no period be appointed, half-yearly, to the several parties entitled thereto, and in preference to any dividends payable to the shareholders of the company.

XLIX. The interest on any such mortgage or bond shall not be transferable, except by deed duly stamped.

L. The company may, if they think proper, fix a period for the repayment of the principal money so borrowed, with the interest thereof, and in such case the company shall cause such period to be inserted in the mortgage-deed or bond; and upon the expiration of such period the principal sum, together with the arrears of interest thereon, shall, on demand, be paid to the party entitled to such mortgage or bond; and if no other place of payment be inserted in such mortgage-deed or bond, such principal and interest shall be payable at the principal office or place of business of the company.

LI. If no time be fixed in the mortgage-deed or bond for the repayment of the money so borrowed, the party entitled to the mortgage or bond may, at the expiration or at any time after the expiration of twelve months from the date of such mortgage or bond, demand payment of the principal money thereby secured, with all arrears of interest, upon giving six months previous notice for that purpose; and in the like case the company may at any time pay off the money borrowed, on giving the like notice; and every such notice shall be in writing or print, or both, and if given by a mortgagee or bond creditor shall be delivered to the secretary or left at the principal office of the company, and if given by the company shall be given either personally to such mortgagee or bond creditor or left at his residence, or if such mortgagee or bond creditor be unknown to the directors, or cannot be found after diligent inquiry, such notice shall be given by advertisement in the London or Dublin Gazette, according as the principal office of the company shall be in England or Ireland, and in some newspaper as after mentioned.

LII. If the company shall have given notice of their intention to pay off any such mortgage or bond at a time when the same may lawfully be paid off by them, then at the expiration of such notice all further interest shall cease to be payable on such mortgage or bond, unless, on demand of payment made pursuant to such notice, or at any time thereafter, the company shall fail to pay the principal and interest due at the expiration of such notice on such mortgage or bond.

LIII. Where by the special Act the mortgagees of the company shall be empowered to enforce the payment of the arrears of interest, or the arrears of principal and interest, due on such mortgages, by the appointment of a receiver, then, if within thirty days after the interest accruing upon any such mortgage has become payable, and after demand thereof in writing, the same be not paid, the mortgagee may, without prejudice to his right to sue for the interest so in arrear in any of the superior courts of law or equity, require the appointment of a receiver, by an application to be made as hereinafter provided; and if within six months after the principal money owing upon any such mortgage has become payable, and after demand thereof in writing, the same be not paid, the mortgagee, without prejudice to his right to sue for such principal money, together with all arrears of interest, in any of the superior courts of law or equity, may, if his debt amount to the prescribed sum alone, or if his debt does not amount to the prescribed sum, he may, in conjunction with other mortgagees whose debts, being so in arrear, after demand as aforesaid, shall, together with his, amount to the prescribed sum, require the appointment of a receiver, by an application to be made as hereinafter provided.

LIV. Every application for a receiver in the cases aforesaid shall be made to two Justices, and on any such application it shall be lawful for such Justices, by order in writing, after hearing the parties, to appoint some person to receive the whole or a competent part of the tolls or sums liable to the payment of such interest, or such principal and interest, as the case may be, until such interest, or until such principal and interest, as the case may be, together with all costs, including the charges of receiving the tolls or sums aforesaid, be fully paid; and upon such appointment being made all such tolls and sums of money as aforesaid shall be paid to and received by the person so to be appointed; and the money so to be received shall be so much money received by or to the use of the party to whom such interest, or such principal and interest, as the case may be, shall be then due, and on whose behalf such receiver shall have been appointed; and after such interest and costs, or such principal, interest, and costs, have been so received, the power of such receiver shall cease.

LV. At all reasonable times the books of account of the company shall be open to the inspection of the respective mortgagees and bond creditors thereof, with liberty to take extracts therefrom, without fee or reward.

LVI. And with respect to the conversion of the borrowed money into capital,—it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the company, if they think fit, unless it be otherwise provided by the special Act, to raise the additional sum so authorized to be borrowed, or any part thereof, by creating new shares of the company, instead of borrowing the same, or having borrowed the same, to continue at interest only a part of such additional sum, and to raise part thereof by creating new shares; but no such augmentation of capital as aforesaid shall take place without the previous authority of a general meeting of the company.

LVII. The capital so to be raised by the creation of new shares shall be considered as part of the general capital, and shall be subject to the same provisions in all respects, whether with reference to the payment of calls, or the forfeiture of shares on non-payment of calls, or otherwise, as if it had been part of the original capital, except as to the times of making calls for such additional capital, and the amount of such calls, which respectively it shall be lawful for the company from time to time to fix as they shall think fit.

LVIII. If at the time of any such augmentation of capital taking place by the creation of new shares the then existing shares be at a premium, or of greater actual value than the nominal value thereof, then, unless it be otherwise provided by the special Act, the sum so to be raised shall be divided into shares of such amount as will conveniently allow the same to be apportioned among the then shareholders in proportion to the existing shares held by them respectively; and such new shares shall be offered to the then shareholders in the proportion aforesaid; and such offer shall be made by letter under the hand of the secretary given to or sent by post, addressed to each shareholder according to his address in the shareholders' address book, or left at his usual or last place of abode.

LIX. The said new shares shall vest in and belong to the shareholders who shall accept the same, and pay the value thereof to the company at the time and by the instalments which shall be fixed by the company; and if any shareholder fail for one month after such offer of new shares to accept the same, and pay the instalments called for in respect thereof, it shall be lawful for the company to dispose of such shares in such manner as they shall deem most for the advantage of the company.

LX. If at the time of such augmentation of capital taking place the existing shares be not at a premium, then such new shares may be of such amount, and may be issued in such manner and on such terms, as the company shall think fit.

LXI. And with respect to the consolidation of the shares into stock,—it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the company from time to time, with the consent of three-fifths of the votes of the shareholders present in person or by proxy at any general meeting of the company, when due notice for that purpose shall have been given, to convert or consolidate all or any part of the shares then existing in the capital of the company, and in respect whereof the whole money subscribed shall have been paid up, into a general capital stock, to be divided amongst the shareholders according to their respective interests therein.

LXII. After such conversion or consolidation shall have taken place all the provisions contained in this or the special Act which require or imply that the capital of the company shall be divided into shares of any fixed amount, and distinguished by numbers, shall, as to so much of the capital as shall have been so converted or consolidated into stock, cease and be of no effect, and the several holders of such stock may thenceforth transfer their respective interests therein, or any parts of such interests in the same manner and subject to the same regulations and provisions as or according to which any shares in the capital of the company might be transferred under the provisions of this or the special Act; and the company shall cause an entry to be made in some book, to be kept for that purpose, of every such transfer; and for every such entry they may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or if no amount be prescribed a sum not exceeding 2s. 6d.

LXIII. The company shall from time to time cause the names of the several parties who may be interested in any such stock as aforesaid, with the amount of the interest therein possessed by them respectively, to be entered in a book to be kept for the purpose, and to be called "The Register of Holders of Consolidated Stock;" and such book shall be accessible at all reasonable times to the several holders of shares or stock in the undertaking.

LXIV. The several holders of such stock shall be entitled to participate in the dividends and profits of the company, according to the amount of their respective interests in such stock, and such interests shall, in proportion to the amount thereof, confer on the holders thereof respectively the same privileges and advantages, for the purpose of voting at meetings of the company, qualification for the office of directors, and for other purposes, as would have been conferred by shares of equal amount in the capital of the company, but so that none of such privileges or advantages, except the participation in the dividends and profits of the company, shall be conferred by any aliquot part of such amount of consolidated stock as would not, if existing in shares, have conferred such privileges or advantages respectively.

LXV. That all the money raised by the company, whether by subscriptions of the shareholders, or by loan or otherwise, shall be applied, firstly, in paying the costs and expenses incurred in obtaining the special Act, and all expenses incident thereto, and, secondly, in carrying the purposes of the company into execution.

LXVI. And with respect to the general meetings of the company, and the exercise of the right of voting by the shareholders,—it is enacted as follows: The first general meeting of the shareholders of the company shall be held within the prescribed time, or if no time be prescribed, within one month after the passing of the special Act, and the future general meetings shall be held at the prescribed periods, and if no periods be prescribed, in the months of February and August in each year, or at such other stated periods as shall be appointed for that purpose by an order of a general meeting; and the meetings so appointed to be held as aforesaid shall be called "Ordinary Meetings;" and all meetings, whether ordinary or extraordinary, shall be held in the prescribed place, if any, and if no place be prescribed, then at some place to be appointed by the directors.

LXVII. No matters, except such as are appointed by this or the special Act to be done at an ordinary meeting, shall be transacted at any such meeting, unless special notice of such matters have been given in the advertisement convening such meeting.

LXVIII. Every general meeting of the shareholders, other than an ordinary meeting, shall be called an "Extraordinary Meeting;" and such meetings may be convened by the directors at such times as they think fit.

LXIX. No extraordinary meeting shall enter upon any business not set forth in the notice upon which it shall have been convened.

LXX. It shall be lawful for the prescribed number of shareholders, holding in the aggregate shares to the prescribed amount, or, where the number of shareholders or amount of shares shall not be prescribed, it shall be lawful for twenty or more shareholders holding in the aggregate not less than one-tenth of the capital of the company, by writing under their hands, at any time to require the directors to call an extraordinary meeting of the company; and such requisition shall fully express the object of the meeting required to be called, and shall be left at the office of the company, or given to at least three directors, or left at their last or usual places of abode; and forthwith upon the receipt of such requisition the directors shall convene a meeting of the shareholders; and if for twenty-one days after such notice the directors fail to call such meeting, the prescribed number, or such other number as aforesaid, of shareholders, qualified as aforesaid, may call such meeting, by giving fourteen days' public notice thereof.

LXXI. Fourteen days' public notice at the least of all meetings, whether ordinary or extraordinary, shall be given by advertisement, which shall specify the place, the day, and the hour of meeting; and every notice of an extraordinary meeting or of an ordinary meeting, if any other business than the business hereby or by the special Act appointed for ordinary meetings is to be done thereat, shall specify the purpose for which the meeting is called.

LXXII. In order to constitute a meeting (whether ordinary or extraordinary) there shall be present, either personally or by proxy, the prescribed quorum, and if no quorum be prescribed then shareholders holding in the aggregate not less than one-twentieth of the capital of the company, and being in number not less than one for every 500*l.* of such required proportion of capital, unless such number would be more than twenty, in which case twenty shareholders, holding not less than one-twentieth of the capital of the company, shall be the quorum; and if within one hour from the time appointed for such meeting the said quorum be not present no business shall be transacted at the meeting, other than the declaring of a dividend, in case that shall be one of the objects of the meeting, but such meeting shall, except in the case of a meeting for the election of directors, hereinafter mentioned, be held to be adjourned sine die.

LXXIII. At every meeting of the company one or other of the following persons shall preside as chairman; that is to say, the chairman of the directors, or in his absence the deputy chairman (if any), or in the absence of the chairman and deputy chairman some one of the directors of the company to be chosen for that purpose by the meeting, or in the absence of the chairman and deputy chairman and of all the directors, any shareholder to be chosen for that purpose by a majority of the shareholders present at such meeting.

LXXIV. The shareholders present at any such meeting shall proceed in the execution of the powers of the company with respect to the matters for which such meeting shall have been convened, and those only; and every such meeting may be adjourned from time to time, and from place to place; and no business shall be transacted at any adjourned meeting other than the business left unfinished at the meeting from which such adjournment took place.

LXXV. At all general meetings of the company every shareholder shall be entitled to vote according to the prescribed scale of voting, and where no scale shall be prescribed every shareholder shall have one vote for every share up to ten, and he shall have an additional vote for every five shares beyond the first ten shares held by him up to one hundred, and an additional vote for every ten shares held by him beyond the first hundred shares; provided always, that no shareholder shall be entitled to vote at any meeting unless he shall have paid all the calls then due upon the shares held by him.

LXXVI. The votes may be given either personally or by proxies, being shareholders, authorized by writing according to the form in the Schedule (F.) to this Act annexed, or in a form to the like effect, under the hand of the shareholder nominating such proxy, or if such shareholder be a corporation, then under their common seal; and every proposition at any such meeting shall be determined by the majority of votes of the parties present, including proxies, the chairman of the meeting being entitled to vote, not only as a principal and proxy, but to have a casting vote if there be an equality of votes.

LXXVII. No person shall be entitled to vote as a proxy unless the instrument appointing such proxy have been transmitted to the secretary of the company the prescribed period, or, if no period be prescribed, not less than forty-eight hours before the time appointed for holding the meeting at which such proxy is to be used.

LXXVIII. If several persons be jointly entitled to a share, the person whose name stands first in the register of shareholders as one of the holders of such share shall, for the purpose of voting at any meeting, be deemed the sole proprietor thereof; and on all occasions the vote of such first-named shareholder, either in person or by proxy, shall be allowed as the vote in respect of such share, without proof of the concurrence of the other holders thereof.

LXXIX. If any shareholder be a lunatic or idiot, such lunatic or idiot may vote by his committee; and if any shareholder be a minor he may vote by his guardian or any one of his guardians; and every such vote may be given either in person or by proxy.

LXXX. Whenever in this or the special Act the consent of any particular majority of votes at any meeting of the company is required in order to authorize any proceeding of the company, such particular majority shall only be required to be proved in the event of a poll being demanded at such meeting; and if such poll be not demanded, then a declaration by the chairman that the resolution authorizing such proceeding has been carried, and an entry to that effect in the book of proceedings of the company, shall be sufficient authority for such proceeding, without proof of the number or proportion of votes recorded in favour of or against the same.

LXXXI. And with respect to the appointment and rotation of directors,—it is enacted as follows: The number of directors shall be the prescribed number.

LXXXII. Where the company shall be authorized by the special Act to increase or to reduce the number of the directors it shall be lawful for the company, from time to time, in general meeting, after due notice for that purpose, to increase or reduce the number of the directors within the prescribed limits, if any, and to determine the order of rotation in which such reduced or increased number shall go out of office, and what number shall be a quorum at their meetings.

LXXXIII. The directors appointed by the special Act shall, unless thereby otherwise provided, continue in office until the first ordinary meeting to be held in the year next after that in which the special Act shall have passed; and at such meeting the shareholders present, personally or by proxy, may either continue in office the directors appointed by the special Act, or any number of them, or may elect a new body of directors, or directors to supply the places of those not continued in office, the directors appointed by the special Act being eligible as members of such new body; and at the first ordinary meeting to be held every year thereafter the shareholders present, personally or by proxy, shall elect persons to supply the places of the directors then retiring from office, agreeably to the provisions hereinafter contained; and the several persons elected at any such meeting, being neither removed nor disqualified, nor having resigned, shall continue to be directors until others are elected in their stead, as hereinafter mentioned.

LXXXIV. If at any meeting at which an election of directors ought to take place the prescribed quorum shall not be present within one hour from the time appointed for the meeting no election of directors shall be made, but such meeting shall stand adjourned to the following day at the same time and place; and if at the meeting so adjourned the prescribed quorum be not present within one hour from the time appointed for the meeting the existing directors shall continue to act and retain their powers until new directors be appointed at the first ordinary meeting of the following year.

LXXXV. No person shall be capable of being a director unless he be a shareholder, nor unless he be possessed of the prescribed number, if any, of shares; and no person holding an office or place of trust or profit under the company, or interested in any contract with the company, shall be capable of being a director; and no director shall be capable of accepting any other office or place of trust or profit under the company, or of being interested in any contract with the company during the time he shall be a director.

LXXXVI. If any of the directors at any time subsequently to his election accept or continue to hold any other office or place of trust or profit under the company, or be either directly or indirectly concerned in any contract with the company, or participate in any manner in the profits of any work to be done for the company, or if such director at any time cease to be a holder of the prescribed number of shares in the company, then in any of the cases aforesaid the office of such director shall become vacant, and thenceforth he shall cease from voting or acting as a director.

LXXXVII. Provided always, that no person, being a shareholder or member of any incorporated joint-stock company, shall be disqualified or prevented from acting as a director by reason of any contract entered into between such joint-stock company and the company incorporated by the special Act; but no such director, being a shareholder or member of such joint-stock company, shall vote on any question as to any contract with such joint-stock company.

LXXXVIII. The directors appointed by the special Act, and continued in office as aforesaid, or the directors elected to supply the places of those retiring as aforesaid, shall, subject to the provision hereinbefore contained for increasing or reducing the number of directors, retire from office at the times and in the proportions following, the individuals to retire being in each instance determined by ballot among the directors, unless they shall otherwise agree; (that is to say,)

At the end of the first year after the first election of directors the prescribed number, and if no number be prescribed one third of such directors, to be determined by ballot among themselves, unless they shall otherwise agree, shall go out of office:

At the end of the second year the prescribed number, and if no number be prescribed one half of the remaining number of such directors, to be determined in like manner, shall go out of office:

At the end of the third year the prescribed number, and if no number be prescribed the remainder of such directors, shall go out of office:

And in each instance the places of the retiring directors shall be supplied by an equal number of qualified shareholders; and at the first ordinary meeting in every subsequent year the prescribed number, and if no number be prescribed one third of the directors, being those who have been longest in office, shall go out of office, and their places shall be supplied in like manner; nevertheless every director so retiring from office may be re-elected immediately or at any future time, and after such re-election shall, with reference to the going out by rotation, be considered as a new director: Provided always, that if the prescribed number of directors be some number not divisible by three, and the number of directors to retire be not prescribed, the directors shall in each case determine what number of directors, as nearly one third as may be, shall go out of office, so that the whole number shall go out of office, in three years.

LXXXIX. If any director die, or resign, or become disqualified or incompetent to act as a director, or cease to be a director by any other cause than that of going out of office by rotation as aforesaid, the remaining directors, if they think proper so to do, may elect in his place some other shareholder, duly qualified, to be a director; and the shareholder so elected to fill up any such vacancy shall continue in office as a director so long only as the person in whose place he shall have been elected would have been entitled to continue if he had remained in office.

XC. And with respect to the powers of the directors, and the powers of the company to be exercised only in general meeting,—it is enacted as follows: The directors shall have the management and superintendence of the affairs of the company, and they may lawfully exercise all the powers of the company, except as to such matters as are directed by this or the special Act to be transacted by a general meeting of the company, but all the powers so to be exercised shall be exercised in accordance with and subject to the provisions of this and the special Act; and the exercise of all such powers shall be subject also to the controul and regulation of any general meeting specially convened for the purpose, but not so as to render invalid any act done by the directors prior to any resolution passed by such general meeting.

XCi. Except as otherwise provided by the special Act, the following powers of the company, (that is to say,) the choice and removal of the directors, except as hereinbefore mentioned, and the increasing or reducing of their number where authorized by the special Act, the choice of auditors, the determination as to the remuneration of the directors, auditors, treasurer, and secretary, the determination as to the amount of money to be borrowed on mortgage, the determination as to the augmentation of capital, and the declaration of dividends, shall be exercised only at a general meeting of the company.

XCII. And with respect to the proceedings and liabilities of the directors,—it is enacted as follows: The directors shall hold meetings at such times as they shall appoint for the purpose, and they may meet and adjourn as they think proper, from time to time, and from place to place; and at any time any two of the directors may require the secretary to call a meeting of the directors, and in order to constitute a meeting of directors, there shall be present at the least the prescribed quorum, and when no quorum shall be prescribed there shall be present at least one-third of the directors; and all questions at any such meetings shall be determined by the majority of votes of the directors present, and in case of an equal division of votes the chairman shall have a casting vote in addition to his vote as one of the directors.

XCIII. At the first meeting of directors held after the passing of the special Act, and at the first meeting of the directors held after each annual appointment of directors, the directors present at such meeting shall choose one of the directors to act as chairman of the directors for the year following such choice, and shall also, if they think fit, choose another director to act as deputy chairman for the same period; and if the chairman or deputy chairman die or resign, or cease to be a director, or otherwise become disqualified to act, the directors present at the meeting next after the occurrence of such vacancy shall choose some other of the directors to fill such vacancy; and every such chairman or deputy chairman so elected as last aforesaid shall continue in office so long only as the person in whose place he may be so elected would have been entitled to continue if such death, resignation, removal, or disqualification had not happened.

xciv. If at any meeting of the directors neither the chairman nor deputy chairman be present the directors present shall choose some one of their number to be chairman of such meeting.

xcv. It shall be lawful for the directors to appoint one or more committees, consisting of such number of directors as they think fit, within the prescribed limits, if any, and they may grant to such committees respectively power on behalf of the company to do any acts relating to the affairs of the company which the directors could lawfully do, and which they shall from time to time think proper to intrust to them.

xcvi. The said committees may meet from time to time, and may adjourn from place to place, as they think proper, for carrying into effect the purposes of their appointment; and no such committee shall exercise the powers intrusted to them except at a meeting at which there shall be present the prescribed quorum, or if no quorum be prescribed then a quorum to be fixed for that purpose by the general body of directors; and at all meetings of the committees one of the members present shall be appointed chairman; and all questions at any meeting of the committee shall be determined by a majority of votes of the members present, and in case of an equal division of votes the chairman shall have a casting vote in addition to his vote as a member of the committee.

xcvii. The power which may be granted to any such committee to make contracts, as well as the power of the directors to make contracts on behalf of the company, may lawfully be exercised as follows; (that is to say,)

With respect to any contract which, if made between private persons, would be by law required to be in writing, and under seal, such committee or the directors may make such contract on behalf of the company in writing, and under the common seal of the company, and in the same manner may vary or discharge the same:

With respect to any contract which, if made between private persons, would be by law required to be in writing, and signed by the parties to be charged therewith, then such committee or the directors may make such contract on behalf of the company in writing, signed by such committee or any two of them, or any two of the directors, and in the same manner may vary or discharge the same:

With respect to any contract which, if made between private persons, would by law be valid although made by parol only, and not reduced into writing, such committee or the directors may make such contract on behalf of the company by parol only, without writing, and in the same manner may vary or discharge the same:

And all contracts made according to the provisions herein contained shall be effectual in law, and shall be binding upon the company and their successors, and all other parties thereto, their heirs, executors, or administrators, as the case may be; and on any default in the execution of any such contract, either by the company or any other party thereto, such actions or suits may be brought, either by or against the company, as might be brought had the same contracts been made between private persons only.

xcviii. The directors shall cause notes, minutes, or copies, as the case may require, of all appointments made or contracts entered into by the directors, and of the orders and proceedings of all meetings of the company, and of the directors and committees of directors, to be duly entered in books, to be from time to time provided for the purpose, which shall be kept under the superintendence of the directors; and every such entry shall be signed by the chairman of such meeting; and such entry, so signed, shall be received as evidence in all courts, and before all Judges, Justices, and others, without proof of such respective meetings having been duly convened or held, or of the persons making or entering such orders or proceedings being shareholders or directors or members of committee respectively, or of the signature of the chairman, or of the fact of his having been chairman, all of which last-mentioned matters shall be presumed, until the contrary be proved.

xcix. All acts done by any meeting of the directors, or of a committee of directors, or by any person acting as a director, shall, notwithstanding it may be afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the appointment of any such directors or persons acting as aforesaid, or that they or any of them were or was disqualified, be as valid as if every such person had been duly appointed and was qualified to be a director.

c. No director, by being party to or executing in his capacity of director any contract or other instrument on behalf of the company, or otherwise lawfully executing any of the powers given to the directors, shall be subject to be sued or prosecuted, either individually or collectively, by any person whomsoever; and the bodies or goods or lands of the directors shall not be liable to execution of any legal process by reason of any contract or other instrument so entered into, signed, or executed by them, or by reason of any other lawful act done by them in the execution of any of their powers as directors; and the directors, their heirs, executors, and administrators, shall be indemnified out of the capital of the company for all payments made or liability incurred in respect of any acts done by them, and for all losses, costs, and damages which they may incur in the execution of the powers granted to them; and the directors for the time being of the company may apply the existing funds and capital of the company for the purposes of such indemnity, and may, if necessary for that purpose, make calls of the capital remaining unpaid, if any.

ci. And with respect to the appointment and duties of auditors,—it is enacted as follows: Except where by the special Act auditors shall be directed to be appointed otherwise than by the company, the company shall, at the first ordinary meeting after the passing of the special Act, elect the prescribed number of auditors, and if no number is prescribed two auditors, in like manner as is provided for the election of directors; and at the first ordinary meeting of the company in each year thereafter the company shall in like manner elect an auditor to supply the place of the auditor then retiring from office, according to the provision hereinafter contained; and every auditor elected as hereinbefore provided, being neither removed nor disqualified, nor having resigned, shall continue to be an auditor until another be elected in his stead.

cii. Where no other qualification shall be prescribed by the special Act, every auditor shall have at least one share in the undertaking; and he shall not hold any office in the company, nor be in any other manner interested in its concerns, except as a shareholder.

CIII. One of such auditors (to be determined in the first instance by ballot between themselves, unless they shall otherwise agree, and otherwise by seniority,) shall go out of office at the first ordinary meeting in each year; but the auditor so going out shall be immediately re-eligible, and after any such re-election shall, with respect to the going out of office by rotation be deemed a new auditor.

CIV. If any vacancy take place among the auditors in the course of the current year, then at any general meeting of the company the vacancy may, if the company think fit, be supplied by election of the shareholders.

CV. The provision of this Act respecting the failure of an ordinary meeting at which directors ought to be chosen shall apply mutatis mutandis, to an ordinary meeting at which an auditor ought to be appointed.

CVI. The directors shall deliver to such auditors the half-yearly or other periodical accounts and balance sheet, fourteen days at the least before the ensuing ordinary meeting at which the same are required to be produced to the shareholders as hereinafter provided.

CVII. It shall be the duty of such auditors to receive from the directors the half-yearly or other periodical accounts and balance sheet required to be presented to the shareholders, and to examine the same.

CVIII. It shall be lawful for the auditors to employ such accountants and other persons as they may think proper, at the expense of the company, and they shall either make a special report on the said accounts, or simply confirm the same; and such report or confirmation shall be read, together with the report of the directors, at the ordinary meeting.

CIX. And with respect to the accountability of the officers of the company,—it is enacted as follows: Before any person intrusted with the custody or controul of monies, whether treasurer, collector, or other officer of the company, shall enter upon his office, the directors shall take sufficient security from him for the faithful execution of his office.

CX. Every officer employed by the company shall from time to time, when required by the directors, make out and deliver to them, or to any person appointed by them for that purpose, a true and perfect account in writing under his hand of all monies received by him on behalf of the company; and such account shall state how, and to whom, and for what purpose such monies shall have been disposed of; and, together with such account, such officer shall deliver the vouchers and receipts for such payments; and every such officer shall pay to the directors, or to any person appointed by them to receive the same, all monies which shall appear to be owing from him upon the balance of such accounts.

CXI. If any such officer fail to render such account, or to produce and deliver up all the vouchers and receipts relating to the same in his possession or power, or to pay the balance thereof when thereunto required, or if for three days after being thereunto required he fail to deliver up to the directors, or to any person appointed by them to receive the same, all papers and writings, property, effects, matters, and things, in his possession or power, relating to the execution of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or belonging to the company, then, on complaint thereof being made to a Justice, such Justice shall summon such officer to appear before two or more Justices at a time and place to be set forth in such summons, to answer such charge; and upon the appearance of such officer, or in his absence upon proof that such summons was personally served upon him, or left at his last known place of abode, such Justices may hear and determine the matter in a summary way, and may adjust and declare the balance owing by such officer; and if it appear, either upon confession of such officer or upon evidence, or upon inspection of the account, that any monies of the company are in the hands of such officer, or owing by him to the company, such Justices may order such officer to pay the same; and if he fail to pay the amount it shall be lawful for such Justices to grant a warrant to levy the same by distress, or, in default thereof, to commit the offender to gaol, there to remain without bail for a period not exceeding three months, unless the same be sooner paid.

CXII. If any such officer refuse to make out such account in writing, or to produce and deliver to the Justices the several vouchers and receipts relating thereto, or to deliver up any books, papers, or writings, property, effects, matters, or things, in his possession or power, belonging to the company, such Justices may lawfully commit such offender to gaol, there to remain until he shall have delivered up all the vouchers and receipts, if any, in his possession or power, relating to such accounts, and have delivered up all books, papers, writings, property, effects, matters, and things, if any, in his possession or power, belonging to the company.

CXIII. Provided always, that if any director or other person acting on behalf of the company shall make oath that he has good reason to believe, upon grounds to be stated in his deposition, and does believe, that it is the intention of any such officer as aforesaid to abscond, it shall be lawful for the Justice before whom the complaint is made, instead of issuing his summons, to issue his warrant for the bringing such officer before such two Justices as aforesaid; but no person executing such warrant shall keep such officer in custody longer than twenty-four hours, without bringing him before some Justice; and it shall be lawful for the Justice before whom such officer may be brought either to discharge such officer, if he think there is no sufficient ground for his detention, or to order such officer to be detained in custody, so as to be brought before two Justices, at a time and place to be named in such order, unless such officer give bail to the satisfaction of such Justice for his appearance before such Justices to answer the complaint of the company.

CXIV. No such proceeding against or dealing with any such officer as aforesaid shall deprive the company of any remedy which they might otherwise have against such officer, or any surety of such officer.

CXV. And with respect to the keeping of accounts, and the right of inspection thereof by the shareholders,—it is enacted as follows: The directors shall cause full and true accounts to be kept of all sums of money received or expended on account of the company by the directors and all persons employed by or under them, and of the matters and things for which such sums of money shall have been received or disbursed and paid.

CXVI. The books of the company shall be balanced at the prescribed periods, and, if no periods be prescribed, fourteen days at least before each ordinary meeting; and forthwith on the books being so balanced an exact balance sheet shall be made up, which shall exhibit a true statement of the capital stock, credits, and property of every description belonging to the company, and the debts due by the company at the date of making such balance sheet, and a distinct view of the profit or loss which shall have arisen on the transactions of the company in the course of the preceding half year; and previously to each ordinary meeting such balance sheet shall be examined by the directors, or any three of their number, and shall be signed by the chairman or deputy chairman of the directors.

CXXV. The books so balanced, together with such balance sheet as aforesaid, shall for the prescribed periods, and if no periods be prescribed for fourteen days previous to each ordinary meeting, and for one month thereafter, be open for the inspection of the shareholders at the principal office or place of business of the company; but the shareholders shall not be entitled at any time, except during the periods aforesaid, to demand the inspection of such books, unless in virtue of a written order signed by three of the directors.

CXXVI. The directors shall produce to the shareholders assembled at such ordinary meeting the said balance sheet applicable to the period immediately preceding such meeting, together with the report of the auditors thereon, as hereinbefore provided.

CXXVII. The directors shall appoint a book-keeper to enter the accounts aforesaid in books to be provided for the purpose; and every such book-keeper shall permit any shareholder to inspect such books, and to take copies or extracts therefrom, at any reasonable time during the prescribed periods, and if no periods be prescribed during one fortnight before and one month after every ordinary meeting; and if he fail to permit any such shareholder to inspect such books, or take copies or extracts therefrom, during the periods aforesaid, he shall forfeit to such shareholder for every such offence a sum not exceeding 5*l*.

CXXVIII. And with respect to the making of dividends,—it is enacted as follows: Previously to every ordinary meeting at which a dividend is intended to be declared the directors shall cause a scheme to be prepared, shewing the profits, if any, of the company for the period current since the preceding ordinary meeting at which a dividend was declared, and apportioning the same, or so much thereof as they may consider applicable to the purposes of dividend, among the shareholders, according to the shares held by them respectively, the amount paid thereon, and the periods during which the same may have been paid, and shall exhibit such scheme at such ordinary meeting, and at such meeting a dividend may be declared according to such scheme.

CXXIX. The company shall not make any dividend whereby their capital stock will be in any degree reduced: Provided always, that the word "dividend" shall not be construed to apply to a return of any portion of the capital stock, with the consent of all the mortgagees and bond creditors of the company, due notice being given for that purpose at an extraordinary meeting to be convened for that object.

CXXX. Before apportioning the profits to be divided among the shareholders, the directors may, if they think fit, set aside thereout such sum as they may think proper to meet contingencies, or for enlarging, repairing, or improving the works connected with the undertaking, or any part thereof, and may divide the balance only among the shareholders.

CXXXI. No dividend shall be paid in respect of any share until all calls then due in respect of that and every other share held by the person to whom such dividend may be payable shall have been paid.

CXXXII. And with respect to the making of bye-laws,—it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the company from time to time to make such bye-laws as they think fit, for the purpose of regulating the conduct of the officers and servants of the company, and for providing for the due management of the affairs of the company in all respects whatsoever, and from time to time to alter or repeal any such bye-laws, and make others, provided such bye-laws be not repugnant to the laws of that part of the United Kingdom where the same are to have effect, or to the provisions of this or the special Act; and such bye-laws shall be reduced into writing, and shall have affixed thereto the common seal of the company; and a copy of such bye-laws shall be given to every officer and servant of the company affected thereby.

CXXXIII. It shall be lawful for the company, by such bye-laws, to impose such reasonable penalties upon all persons, being officers or servants of the company, offending against such bye-laws, as the company think fit, not exceeding 5*l*. for any one offence.

CXXXIV. All the bye-laws to be made by the company shall be so framed as to allow the Justice before whom any penalty imposed thereby may be sought to be recovered to order a part only of such penalty to be paid, if such Justice shall think fit.

CXXXV. The production of a written or printed copy of the bye-laws of the company, having the common seal of the company affixed thereto, shall be sufficient evidence of such bye-laws in all cases of prosecution under the same.

CXXXVI. And with respect to the settlement of disputes by arbitration,—it is enacted as follows: When any dispute authorized or directed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, to be settled by arbitration, shall have arisen, then, unless both parties shall concur in the appointment of a single arbitrator, each party, on the request of the other party, shall by writing under his hand nominate and appoint an arbitrator to whom such dispute shall be referred; and after any such appointment shall have been made neither party shall have power to revoke the same without the consent of the other, nor shall the death of either party operate as such revocation; and if for the space of fourteen days after any such dispute shall have arisen, and after a request in writing shall have been served by the one party or the other party to appoint an arbitrator, such last-mentioned party fail to appoint such arbitrator, then upon such failure the party making the request, and having himself appointed an arbitrator, may appoint such arbitrator to act on behalf of both parties, and such arbitrator may proceed to hear and determine the matters which shall be in dispute; and in such case the award or determination of such single arbitrator shall be final.

CXXXVII. If before the matters so referred shall be determined any arbitrator appointed by either party die, or become incapable or refuse or for seven days neglect to act as arbitrator, the party by whom such arbitrator was appointed may nominate and appoint in writing some other person to act in his place; and if for the space of seven days after notice in writing from the other party for that purpose he fail to do so the remaining or other arbitrator may proceed ex parte; and every arbitrator so to be substituted as aforesaid shall have the same powers and authorities as were vested in the former arbitrator at the time of such his death, refusal, or disability as aforesaid.

CXXX. Where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed such arbitrators shall, before they enter upon the matters referred to them, nominate and appoint by writing under their hands an umpire to decide on any such matters on which they shall differ; and if such umpire shall die, or refuse or for seven days neglect to act, they shall forthwith after such death, refusal, or neglect appoint another umpire in his place; and the decision of every such umpire on the matters so referred to him shall be final.

CXXXI. If in either of the cases aforesaid the said arbitrators shall refuse, or shall, for seven days after request of either party to such arbitration, neglect to appoint an umpire, it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, if they think fit, in any case in which a railway company shall be one party to the arbitration, on the application of either party to such arbitration, to appoint an umpire; and the decision of such umpire on the matters on which the arbitrators shall differ shall be final.

CXXXII. The said arbitrators or their umpire may call for the production of any documents in the possession or power of either party which they or he may think necessary for determining the question in dispute, and may examine the parties or their witnesses on oath, and administer the oaths necessary for that purpose.

CXXXIII. Except where by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, it shall be otherwise provided, the costs of and attending every such arbitration to be determined by the arbitrators shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators or their umpires, as the case may be.

CXXXIV. The submission to any such arbitration may be made a rule of any of the superior courts, on the application of either of the parties.

CXXXV. And with respect to the giving of notices,—it is enacted as follows: Any summons or notice, or any writ, or other proceeding, at law or in equity, requiring to be served upon the company, may be served by the same being left at, or transmitted through the post directed to the principal office of the company, or one of their principal offices where there shall be more than one, or being given personally to the secretary, or in case there be no secretary then by being given to any one director of the company.

CXXXVI. Notices requiring to be served by the company upon the shareholders may, unless expressly required to be served personally, be served by the same being transmitted through the post directed according to the registered address or other known address of the shareholder, within such period as to admit of its being delivered in the due course of delivery within the period (if any) prescribed for the giving of such notice; and in proving such service it shall be sufficient to prove that such notice was properly directed, and that it was so put into the post office.

CXXXVII. All notices directed to be given to the shareholders shall, with respect to any share to which persons are jointly entitled, be given to whichever of the said persons shall be named first in the register of shareholders; and notice so given shall be sufficient notice to all the proprietors of such share.

CXXXVIII. All notices required by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, to be given by advertisement shall be advertised in the prescribed newspaper, or if no newspaper be prescribed, or if the prescribed newspaper cease to be published, in a newspaper circulating in the district within which the company's principal place of business shall be situated.

CXXXIX. Every summons, notice, or other such document requiring authentication by the company, may be signed by two directors, or by the treasurer or the secretary of the company, and need not be under the common seal of the company, and the same may be in writing or in print, or partly in writing or partly in print.

CXL. That if any person against whom the company shall have any claim or demand become bankrupt, or take the benefit of any Act for the relief of insolvent debtors, it shall be lawful for the secretary or treasurer of the company, in all proceedings against the estate of such bankrupt or insolvent, or under any fiat, sequestration, or act of insolvency against such bankrupt or insolvent, to represent the company, and act in their behalf, in all respects as if such claim or demand had been the claim or demand of such secretary or treasurer, and not of the company.

CXLI. That if any party shall have committed any irregularity, trespass, or other wrongful proceeding in the execution of this or the special Act, or by virtue of any power or authority thereby given, and if, before action brought in respect thereof, such party make tender of sufficient amends to the party injured, such last-mentioned party shall not recover in any such action; and if no such tender shall have been made it shall be lawful for the defendant, by leave of the Court where such action shall be pending, at any time before issue joined, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit; and thereupon such proceedings shall be had as in other cases where defendants are allowed to pay money into court.

CXLII. And with respect to the recovery of damages not specially provided for, and penalties,—it is enacted as follows: In all cases where any damages, costs, or expenses are by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, directed to be paid, and the method of ascertaining the amount or enforcing the payment thereof is not provided for, such amount, in case of dispute, shall be ascertained and determined by two Justices; and if the amount so ascertained be not paid by the company or other party liable to pay the same within seven days after demand, the amount may be recovered by distress of the goods of the company or other party liable as aforesaid; and the Justices by whom the same shall have been ordered to be paid, or either of them, on application, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly.

CXLIII. If sufficient goods of the company cannot be found whereon to levy any such damages, costs, or expenses, payable by the company, the same may, if the amount thereof do not exceed 20*l.*, be recovered by distress of the goods of the treasurer of the company; and the Justices aforesaid, or either of them, on application, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly; but no such distress shall issue against the goods of such treasurer unless seven days' previous notice in writing, stating the amount so due, and demanding payment thereof, have been given to such treasurer, or left at his residence; and if such treasurer pay any money under such distress as aforesaid, he may retain the amount so paid by him, and all costs and expenses occasioned thereby, out of any money belonging to the company coming into his custody or controul, or he may sue the company for the same.

CLXIV. Where in this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any question of compensation, expenses, charges, or damages is referred to the determination of any one Justice, or more, it shall be lawful for any Justice, upon the application of either party, to summon the other party to appear before one Justice, or before two Justices, as the case may require, at a time and place to be named in such summons; and upon the appearance of such parties, or in the absence of any of them, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such one Justice, or such two Justices, as the case may be, to hear and determine such question, and for that purpose to examine such parties or any of them, and their witnesses, on oath; and the costs of every such inquiry shall be in the discretion of such Justices, and they shall determine the amount thereof.

CLXV. The company shall publish the short particulars of the several offences for which any penalty is imposed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or by any bye-law of the company affecting other persons than the shareholders, officers, or servants of the company, and of the amount of every such penalty, and shall cause such particulars to be printed on a board, or printed upon paper and pasted thereon, and shall cause such board to be hung up or affixed on some conspicuous part of the principal place of business of the company, and where any such penalties are of local application shall cause such boards to be affixed in some conspicuous place in the immediate neighbourhood to which such penalties are applicable or have reference; and such particulars shall be renewed as often as the same or any part thereof is obliterated or destroyed; and no such penalty shall be recoverable unless it shall have been published and kept published in the manner hereinbefore required.

CLXVI. If any person pull down or injure any board put up or affixed as required by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, for the purpose of publishing any bye-law or penalty, or shall obliterate any of the letters or figures thereon, he shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding 5*l*., and shall defray the expenses attending the restoration of such board.

CLXVII. Every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or by any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before two Justices; and on complaint being made to any Justice he shall issue a summons, requiring the party complained against to appear before two Justices at a time and place to be named in such summons; and every such summons shall be served on the party offending, either in person or by leaving the same with some inmate at his usual place of abode; and upon the appearance of the party complained against, or in his absence, after proof of the due service of such summons, it shall be lawful for two Justices to proceed to the hearing of the complaint, and that although no information in writing or in print shall have been exhibited before them, and upon proof of the offence, either by the confession of the party complained against, or upon the oath of one credible witness or more, it shall be lawful for such Justices to convict the offender, and upon such conviction to adjudge the offender to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, as well as such costs attending the conviction as such Justices shall think fit.

CLXVIII. If forthwith upon any such adjudication as aforesaid, the amount of the penalty or forfeiture, and of such costs as aforesaid, be not paid, the amount of such penalty and costs shall be levied by distress; and such Justices, or either of them, shall issue their or his warrant of distress accordingly.

CLXIX. It shall be lawful for any such Justice to order any offender so convicted as aforesaid to be detained and kept in safe custody until return can be conveniently made to the warrant of distress to be issued for levying such penalty or forfeiture, and costs, unless the offender give sufficient security, by way of recognizance or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the Justice, for his appearance before him on the day appointed for such return, such day not being more than eight days from the time of taking such security; but if before issuing such warrant of distress it shall appear to the Justice, by the admission of the offender or otherwise, that no sufficient distress can be had within the jurisdiction of such Justice whereon to levy such penalty or forfeiture, and costs, he may, if he thinks fit, refrain from issuing such warrant of distress; and in such case, or if such warrant shall have been issued, and upon the return thereof such insufficiency as aforesaid shall be made to appear to the Justice, then such Justice shall, by warrant, cause such offender to be committed to gaol, there to remain without bail for any term not exceeding three months, unless such penalty or forfeiture, and costs, be sooner paid and satisfied.

CL. Where in this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any sum of money, whether in the nature of penalty or otherwise, is directed to be levied by distress, such sum of money shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party liable to pay the same; and the overplus arising from the sale of such goods and chattels, after satisfying such sum of money, and the expenses of the distress and sale, shall be returned, on demand, to the party whose goods shall have been distrained.

CLL. No distress levied by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be deemed unlawful, nor shall any party making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, warrant of distress, or other proceeding relating thereto, nor shall such party be deemed a trespasser ab initio on account of any irregularity afterwards committed by him, but all persons aggrieved by such defect or irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action upon the case.

CLLII. The Justices by whom any such penalty or forfeiture shall be imposed may, where the application thereof is not otherwise provided for, award not more than one half thereof to the informer, and shall award the remainder to the overseers of the poor of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed, for the benefit of the poor of such parish; or if the place wherein the offence shall have been committed shall be extra-parochial, then such Justices shall direct such remainder to be applied for the benefit of the poor of such extra-parochial place, or of any adjoining parish or district, and shall order the same to be paid over to the proper officer for that purpose.

CLIII. No person shall be liable to the payment of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, for any offence made cognizable before a Justice, unless the complaint respecting such offence shall have been made before such Justice within six months next after the commission of such offence.

CLIV. If, through any act, neglect, or default on account whereof any person shall have incurred any penalty imposed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any damage to the property of the company shall have been committed by such person, he shall be liable to make good such damage, as well as to pay such penalty; and the amount of such damages shall, in case of dispute, be determined by the Justices by whom the party incurring such penalty shall have been convicted; and on non-payment of such damages, on demand, the same shall be levied by distress, and such Justices, or one of them, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly.

CLV. It shall be lawful for any Justice to summon any person to appear before him as a witness in any matter in which such Justice shall have jurisdiction, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, at a time and place mentioned in such summons, and to administer to him an oath to testify the truth in such matter; and if any person so summoned shall, without reasonable excuse, refuse or neglect to appear at the time and place appointed for that purpose, having been paid or tendered a reasonable sum for his expenses, or if any person appearing shall refuse to be examined upon oath or to give evidence before such Justice, every such person shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l.* for every such offence.

CLVI. It shall be lawful for any officer or agent of the company, and all persons called by him to his assistance, to seize and detain any person who shall have committed any offence against the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, and whose name and residence shall be unknown to such officer or agent, and convey him, with all convenient despatch, before some Justice, without any warrant or other authority than this or the special Act; and such Justice shall proceed with all convenient despatch to the hearing and determining of the complaint against such offender.

CLVII. The Justices before whom any person shall be convicted of any offence against this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, may cause the conviction to be drawn up according to the form in the Schedule (G.) to this Act annexed.

CLVIII. No proceeding in pursuance of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, nor shall the same be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of the superior courts.

CLIX. If any party shall feel aggrieved by any determination or adjudication of any Justice with respect to any penalty or forfeiture under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, such party may appeal to the General Quarter Sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal shall have arisen; but no such appeal shall be entertained unless it be made within four months next after the making of such determination or adjudication, nor unless ten days notice in writing of such appeal, stating the nature and grounds thereof, be given to the party against whom the appeal shall be brought, nor unless the appellant forthwith after such notice enter into recognizances, with two sufficient sureties, before a Justice, conditioned duly to prosecute such appeal, and to abide the order of the Court thereon.

CLX. At the Quarter Sessions for which such notice shall be given the Court shall proceed to hear and determine the appeal in a summary way, or they may, if they think fit, adjourn it to the following sessions; and upon the hearing of such appeal the Court may, if they think fit, mitigate any penalty or forfeiture, or they may confirm or quash the adjudication, and order any money paid by the appellant, or levied by distress upon his goods, to be returned to him, and may also order such further satisfaction to be made to the party injured as they may judge reasonable; and they may make such order concerning the costs, both of the adjudication and of the appeal, as they may think reasonable.

CLXI. And with respect to the provision to be made for affording access to the special Act by all parties interested,—it is enacted as follows: The company shall, at all times after the expiration of six months after the passing of the special Act, keep in their principal office of business a copy of the special Act, printed by the printers to Her Majesty, or some of them; and where the undertaking shall be a railway, canal, or other like undertaking, the works of which shall not be confined to one town or place, shall also, within the space of such six months, deposit in the office of each of the clerks of the peace of the several counties into which the works shall extend, and in the office of the town clerk of every burgh or city into which or within one mile of which the works shall extend, a copy of such special Act so printed as aforesaid; and the said clerks of the peace and town clerks shall receive, and they and the company respectively shall retain, the said copies of the special Act, and shall permit all persons interested to inspect the same, and make extracts or copies therefrom, in the like manner and upon the like terms and under the like penalty for default as is provided in the case of certain plans and sections, by an Act 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 83, intituled 'An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties and other Persons to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament.'

CLXII. If the company shall fail to keep or deposit as hereinbefore mentioned any of the said copies of the special Act, they shall forfeit 20*l.* for every such offence, and also 5*l.* for every day afterwards during which such copy shall be not so kept or deposited.

CLXIII. That this Act shall not extend to Scotland.

CLXIV. Provided and enacted, That if any shareholder residing in Scotland shall fail to pay the amount of any call made upon him by the company in respect of any share held by him, it shall be lawful for the company to proceed against him in Scotland, and to sue for and recover the amount of such call, or to declare such share forfeited, in such manner as is by "The Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845," in case the same shall pass into a law, provided in regard to shareholders of any company in Scotland.

CLXV. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

By this Act,

After reciting that it is expedient to comprise in one general Act sundry provisions relating to the constitution and management of joint-stock companies, usually introduced into Acts of Parliament authorizing the execution of undertakings of a public nature by such companies in Scotland, and that as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in each of the several Acts relating to such undertakings as for ensuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves :—

It is Enacted,

I. That this Act shall apply to every joint-stock company in Scotland which shall by any Act of Parliament which shall hereafter be passed be incorporated for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking ; and this Act shall be incorporated with such Act, and all the clauses and provisions of this Act, save so far as they shall be varied or excepted by any such Act, shall apply to the company which shall be incorporated by any Act, and to the undertaking for carrying on which such company shall be incorporated, so far as the same shall be applicable thereto respectively ; and such enactments and provisions, as well as the enactments and provisions of every other Act which shall be incorporated with such Act, shall, save as aforesaid, form part of such Act, and be construed together therewith as forming one Act.

II. And with respect to the construction of this Act, and of other Acts to be incorporated therewith, it is enacted as follows : the expression “the special Act” used in this Act shall be construed to mean any Act which shall be hereafter passed incorporating or constituting a joint-stock company for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking, and with which this Act shall be so incorporated as aforesaid ; and the word “prescribed” used in this Act, in reference to any matter herein stated, shall be construed to refer to such matter as shall be prescribed or provided for in the special Act ; and the sentence in which such word shall occur shall be construed as if instead of the word “prescribed” the expression “prescribed for that purpose in the special Act” had been used ; and the expression “the undertaking” shall mean the undertaking or works, of whatever nature which shall by the special Act be authorized to be executed.

III. The following words and expressions both in this and the special Act shall have the several meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something in the subject or the context repugnant to such construction ; (that is to say), Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number ; and words importing the plural number only shall include the singular number :

Words importing the masculine gender only shall include females :

The word “Lands” shall extend to houses, lands, tenements, and heritages of any description or tenure :

The word “Lease” shall include a missive or an agreement for a lease :

The word “Month” shall mean calendar month :

The “Lord Ordinary” shall mean the lord ordinary of the Court of Session in Scotland officiating on the bills in time of vacation, or the junior lord ordinary, if in time of session, as the case may be :

The word “Sheriff” shall include the sheriff substitute :

The word “Oath” shall include affirmation in the case of Quakers, or other declaration lawfully substituted for an oath in the case of any other persons exempted by law from the necessity of taking an oath :

The word “County” shall include any ward or other like division of a county :

The word “Justice” shall mean Justice of the Peace acting for the county, city, or place where the matter requiring the cognizance of any such Justice shall arise, and who shall not be interested in the matter ; and where any matter shall be authorized or required to be done by two Justices, the expression “two Justices” shall be understood to mean two or more Justices assembled and acting together :

The expression “the Company” shall mean the company constituted by the special Act :

The expression “the Directors” shall mean the directors of the company, and shall include all persons having the direction of the undertaking, whether under the name of directors, managers, committee of management, or under any other name :

The word “Shareholder” shall mean shareholder, proprietor, or member of the company ; and in referring to any such shareholder, expressions properly applicable to a person shall be held to apply to a corporation : And

The expression “the Secretary” shall mean the secretary of the company, and shall include the word “Clerk.”

IV. That in citing this Act in other Acts of Parliament and in legal instruments it shall be sufficient to use the expression “The Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845.”

And after reciting that it may be convenient in some cases to incorporate with Acts hereafter to be passed some portion only of the provisions of this Act :—

It is Enacted,

V. That for the purpose of making any such incorporation it shall be sufficient in any such Act to enact that the clauses and provisions of this Act, with respect to the matter so proposed to be incorporated (describing such matter as it is described in this Act in the words introductory to the enactment with respect to such matter), shall be incorporated with such Act; and thereupon all the clauses and provisions of this Act with respect to the matter so incorporated shall, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by such Act form part of such Act, and such Act shall be construed as if the substance of such clauses and provisions were set forth therein with reference to the matter to which such Act shall relate.

VI. And with respect to the distribution of the capital of the company into shares,—it is enacted as follows: The capital of the company shall be divided into shares of the prescribed number and amount; and such shares shall be numbered in arithmetical progression, beginning with number one; and every such share shall be distinguished by its appropriate number.

VII. All shares in the undertaking shall be personal estate, and transmissible as such, and shall not be of the nature of real estate.

VIII. Every person who shall have subscribed the prescribed sum or upwards to the capital of the company, or shall otherwise have become entitled to a share in the company, and whose name shall have been entered on the register of shareholders hereinafter mentioned, shall be deemed a shareholder of the company, and shall be entitled to have one share therein allotted to him in respect of every sum of the prescribed amount so subscribed by him.

IX. The company shall keep a book, to be called the "Register of Shareholders;" and in such book shall be fairly and distinctly entered from time to time, the names of the several corporations, and the names and additions of the several persons entitled to shares in the company, together with the number of shares to which such shareholders shall be respectively entitled, distinguishing each share by its number, and the amount of the subscriptions paid on such shares; and the surnames or corporate names of the said shareholders shall be placed in alphabetical order; and such book shall be authenticated by the common seal of the company being affixed thereto; and such authentication shall take place at the first ordinary meeting, or at the next subsequent meeting of the company, and so from time to time at each ordinary meeting of the company.

X. In addition to the said register of shareholders, the company shall provide a book, to be called the "Shareholders Address Book," in which the secretary shall from time to time enter in alphabetical order the corporate names and places of business of the several shareholders of the company, being corporations, and the surnames of the several other shareholders, with their respective christian names, places of abode, and descriptions, so far as the same shall be known to the company; and every shareholder, or if such shareholder be a corporation the clerk or agent of such corporation, may at all convenient times peruse such book gratis, and may require a copy thereof, or of any part thereof; and for every hundred words so required to be copied the company may demand a sum not exceeding 6*d.*

XI. On demand of the holder of any share the company shall cause a certificate of the proprietorship of such share to be delivered to such shareholder; and such certificate shall have the common seal of the company affixed thereto; and such certificate shall specify the share in the undertaking to which such shareholder is entitled; and the same may be according to the form in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect; and for such certificate the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or if no amount be prescribed then a sum not exceeding 2*s.* 6*d.*

XII. The said certificate shall be admitted in all courts as prima facie evidence of the title of such shareholder, his executors, administrators, successors, or assigns, to the share therein specified; nevertheless the want of such certificate shall not prevent the holder of any share from disposing thereof.

XIII. If any such certificate be worn out or damaged, then, upon the same being produced at some meeting of the directors, such directors may order the same to be cancelled, and thereupon another similar certificate shall be given to the party in whom the property of such certificate, and of the share therein mentioned, shall be at the time vested; or if such certificate be lost or destroyed, then, upon proof thereof to the satisfaction of the directors, a similar certificate shall be given to the party entitled to the certificate so lost or destroyed; and in either case a due entry of the substituted certificate shall be made by the secretary in the register of shareholders; and for every such certificate so given or exchanged the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or if no amount be prescribed then a sum not exceeding 2*s.* 6*d.*

XIV. And with respect to the transfer or transmission of shares,—it is enacted as follows: Subject to the regulations herein or in the special Act contained, every shareholder may sell and transfer all or any of his shares in the undertaking, or all or any part of his interest in the capital stock of the company, in case such shares shall, under the provisions hereinafter contained, be consolidated into capital stock; and every such transfer shall be by deed duly stamped, in which the consideration shall be truly stated; and such deed may be according to the form in the Schedule (B.) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect.

XV. Whereas there may be hereafter many shareholders of the company who reside in England, and sales of shares are frequently made by persons in England to persons in Scotland, and vice versa, and it would be attended with inconvenience if all transfers of shares were required to be executed according to the forms of the law of Scotland; all transfers of shares of the said company shall be valid and effectual if executed according to the usual mode of executing such instruments either in England or Scotland, or partly according to the one and partly according to the other.

XVI. The said deed of transfer (when duly executed) shall be delivered to the secretary, and be kept by him; and the secretary shall enter a memorial thereof in a book, to be called the "Register of Transfers," and shall indorse such entry on the deed of transfer, and shall, on demand, deliver a new certificate to the purchaser; and for every such entry and indorsement and certificate the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or if no amount be prescribed then a sum not exceeding 2*s.* 6*d.*; and on the request of the purchaser of any share an indorsement of such transfer shall be made on the certificate of such share, instead of a new certificate being granted; and such indorsement, being signed by the secretary, shall be considered in every respect the same as a new certificate; and until such transfer has been so delivered to the secretary as aforesaid the vendor of the share shall continue liable to the company for any calls that may be made upon such share, and the purchaser of the share shall not be entitled to receive any share of the profits of the undertaking, or to vote in respect of such share.

XVII. No shareholder shall be entitled to transfer any share, after any call shall have been made in respect thereof, until he shall have paid such call, nor until he shall have paid all calls for the time being due on every share held by him.

XVIII. It shall be lawful for the directors to close the register of transfers for the prescribed period, or if no period be prescribed then for a period not exceeding fourteen days previous to each ordinary meeting, and they may fix a day for the closing of the same, of which seven days notice shall be given by advertisement in some newspaper as after mentioned; and any transfer made during the time when the transfer books are so closed shall, as between the company and the party claiming under the same, but not otherwise, be considered as made subsequently to such ordinary meeting.

XIX. If the interest in any share have become transmitted in consequence of the death or bankruptcy or insolvency of any shareholder, or in consequence of the marriage of a female shareholder, or by any other lawful means than by a transfer according to the provisions of this or the special Act, such transmission shall be authenticated by a declaration in writing as hereinafter mentioned, or in such other manner as the directors shall require; and every such declaration shall state the manner in which and the party to whom such share shall have been so transmitted, and shall be made and signed by some credible person before a sheriff or Justice; and such declaration shall be left with the secretary, and thereupon he shall enter the name of the person entitled under such transmission in the register of shareholders; and for every such entry the company may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, and where no amount shall be prescribed then not exceeding 5s.; and until such transmission has been so authenticated no person claiming by virtue of any such transmission shall be entitled to receive any share of the profits of the undertaking, nor to vote in respect of any such share as the holder thereof.

XX. If such transmission be by virtue of the marriage of a female shareholder, the said declaration shall contain a copy of the register of such marriage, or other particulars of the celebration or effecting thereof, and shall declare the identity of the wife with the holder of such share; and if such transmission have taken place by virtue of any testamentary instrument, or by intestacy, the probate of the will or the letters of administration, or an official extract therefrom, obtained from any prerogative court if granted in England, or a testamentary or testamentary dative if expedient in Scotland, or an official extract thereof, shall, together with such declaration, be produced to the secretary; and upon such production in either of the cases aforesaid the secretary shall make an entry of the declaration in the said register of transfers.

XXI. The company shall not be bound to see to the execution of any trust, whether express, implied, or constructive, to which any of the said shares may be subject; and the receipt of the party in whose name any such share shall stand in the books of the company, or if it stands in the names of more parties than one the receipt of the party first named in the register of shareholders and then surviving, shall from time to time be a sufficient discharge to the company for any dividend or other sum of money payable in respect of such share, notwithstanding any trust to which such share may then be subject, and whether or not the company have had notice of such trusts; and the company shall not be bound to see to the application of the money paid upon such receipt.

XXII. And with respect to the payment of subscriptions and the means of enforcing the payment of calls,—it is enacted as follows: The several persons who have subscribed any money towards the undertaking, or their legal representatives respectively, shall pay the sums respectively so subscribed, or such portions thereof as shall from time to time be called for by the company, at such times and places as shall be appointed by the company; and with respect to the provisions herein or in the special Act contained for enforcing the payment of calls, the word "shareholder" shall extend to and include the legal personal representatives of such shareholder.

XXIII. It shall be lawful for the company from time to time to make such calls of money upon the respective shareholders, in respect of the amount of capital respectively subscribed or owing by them, as they shall think fit, provided that twenty-one days notice at the least be given of each call, and that no call exceed the prescribed amount, if any, and that successive calls be not made at less than the prescribed interval, if any, and that the aggregate amount of calls made in any one year do not exceed the prescribed amount, if any; and every shareholder shall be liable to pay the amount of the calls so made, in respect of the shares held by him, to the persons and at the times and places from time to time appointed by the company.

XXIV. If, before or on the day appointed for payment, any shareholder do not pay the amount of any call to which he is liable, then such shareholder shall be liable to pay interest for the same at the rate allowed by law from the day appointed for the payment thereof to the time of the actual payment.

XXV. It shall be lawful for the company, if they think fit, to receive from any of the shareholders willing to advance the same all or any part of the monies due upon their respective shares beyond the sums actually called for; and upon the principal monies so paid in advance, or so much thereof as from time to time shall exceed the amount of the calls then made upon the shares in respect of which such advance shall be made, the company may pay interest at such rate, not exceeding the legal rate of interest for the time being, as the shareholder paying such sum in advance and the company shall agree upon.

XXVI. If at the time appointed by the company for the payment of any call any shareholder fail to pay the amount of such call, it shall be lawful for the company to sue such shareholder for the amount thereof in any court of law or equity having competent jurisdiction, and to recover the same, with lawful interest from the day on which such call was payable.

XXVII. In any action or suit to be brought by the company against any shareholder to recover any money due for any call it shall not be necessary to set forth the special matter, but it shall be sufficient for the company to aver that the defender is the holder of one share or more in the company (stating the number of shares), and is indebted to the company in the sum of money to which the calls in arrear shall amount in respect of one call or more upon one share or more (stating the number and amount of each of such calls), whereby an action hath accrued to the company by virtue of this and the special Act.

XXVIII. On the trial or hearing of such action or suit it shall be sufficient to prove that the defender at the time of making such call was a holder of one share or more in the undertaking, and that such call was in fact made, and such notice thereof given as is directed by this or the special Act; and it shall not be necessary to prove the appointment of the directors who made such call, nor any other matter whatsoever; and thereupon the company shall be entitled to recover what shall be due upon such call, with interest thereon, unless it shall appear either that any such call exceeds the prescribed amount, or that due notice of such call was not given, or that the prescribed interval between two successive calls had not elapsed, or that calls amounting to more than the sum prescribed for the total amount of calls in one year had been made within that period.

XXIX. The production of the register of shareholders shall be prima facie evidence of such defender being a shareholder, and of the number and amount of his shares.

XXX. And with respect to the forfeiture of shares for non-payment of calls,—it is enacted as follows: If any shareholder fail to pay any call payable by him, together with the interest, if any, that shall have accrued thereon, the directors, at any time after the expiration of two months from the day appointed for payment of such call, may declare the share in respect of which such call was payable forfeited, and that whether the company have sued for the amount of such call or not.

XXXI. Before declaring any share forfeited the directors shall cause notice of such intention to be left at or transmitted by the post to the usual or last place of abode of the person appearing by the register of shareholders to be the proprietor of such share; and if the holder of any such share be abroad, or if his usual or last place of abode be not known to the directors, by reason of its being imperfectly described in the shareholders address book, or otherwise, or if the interest in any such share shall be known by the directors to have become transmitted otherwise than by transfer, as hereinbefore mentioned, but a declaration of such transmission shall not have been registered as aforesaid, and so the address of the parties to whom the same may have been transmitted, or may for the time being belong, shall not be known to the directors, the directors shall give public notice of such intention in the Edinburgh Gazette, and also in some newspaper as after mentioned; and the several notices aforesaid shall be given twenty-one days at least before the directors shall make such declaration of forfeiture.

XXXII. The said declaration of forfeiture shall not take effect so as to authorize the sale or other disposition of any share until such declaration have been confirmed at some general meeting of the company to be held after the expiration of two months at the least from the day on which such notice of intention to make such declaration of forfeiture shall have been given; and it shall be lawful for the company to confirm such forfeiture at any such meeting, and by an order at such meeting, or at any subsequent general meeting, to direct the share so forfeited to be sold or otherwise disposed of.

XXXIII. After such confirmation as aforesaid it shall be lawful for the directors to sell the forfeited share, either by public auction or private contract, and if there be more than one such forfeited share, then either separately or together, as to them shall seem fit; and any shareholder may purchase any forfeited share so sold.

XXXIV. A declaration in writing, by some credible person not interested in the matter, made before any sheriff or Justice, that the call in respect of a share was made, and notice thereof given, and that default in payment of the call was made, and that the forfeiture of the share was declared and confirmed in manner hereinbefore required, shall be sufficient evidence of the facts therein stated; and such declaration, and the receipt of the treasurer of the company for the price of such share, shall constitute a good title to such share; and a certificate of proprietorship shall be delivered to such purchaser, and thereupon he shall be deemed the holder of such share, discharged from all calls due prior to such purchase; and he shall not be bound to see to the application of the purchase money, nor shall his title to such share be affected by any irregularity in the proceedings in reference to such sale.

XXXV. The company shall not sell or transfer more of the shares of any such defaulter than will be sufficient, as nearly as can be ascertained at the time of such sale, to pay the arrears then due from such defaulter on account of any calls, together with interest, and the expenses attending such sale and declaration of forfeiture; and if the money produced by the sale of any such forfeited shares be more than sufficient to pay all arrears of calls and interest thereon due at the time of such sale, and the expenses attending the declaration of forfeiture and sale thereof, the surplus shall, on demand, be paid to the defaulter.

XXXVI. If payment of such arrears of calls and interest and expenses be made before any share so forfeited and vested in the company shall have been sold, such share shall revert to the party to whom the same belonged before such forfeiture in such manner as if such calls had been duly paid.

XXXVII. If the said company shall be incorporated, no person or corporation, nor the estate real or personal of any such person or corporation, who is or shall be a proprietor of the said incorporated company, shall be liable for or charged with the payment of any debt or demand whatsoever due or to become due by or from the said company beyond the extent of his or their share in the capital of the said company.

XXXVIII. And with respect to the remedies of creditors of the company against the shareholders,—it is enacted as follows: If any legal diligence or execution shall have been issued against the property or effects of the company, and if there cannot be found sufficient whereon to levy under such diligence or execution, then such diligence or execution may be used against any of the shareholders to the extent of their shares respectively in the capital of the company not then paid up; and for the purpose of ascertaining the names of the shareholders, and the amount of capital remaining to be paid upon their respective shares it shall be lawful for any person entitled to any such execution, at all reasonable times, to inspect the register of shareholders without fee.

XXXIX. If by means of any such diligence or execution any shareholder shall have paid any sum of money beyond the amount then due from him in respect of calls, he shall forthwith be reimbursed such additional sum by the directors out of the funds of the company.

XL. And with respect to the borrowing of money by the company on mortgage or bond,—it is enacted as follows: If the company be authorized by the special Act to borrow money on mortgage or bond, it shall be lawful for them, subject to the restrictions contained in the special Act, to borrow on mortgage or bond such sums of money as shall from time to time, by an order of a general meeting of the company, be authorized to be borrowed, not exceeding in the whole the sum prescribed by the special Act, and for securing the repayment of the money so borrowed, with interest, to mortgage the undertaking, and the future calls on the shareholders, or to give bonds in manner hereinafter mentioned.

XLI. If, after having borrowed any part of the money so authorized to be borrowed on mortgage or bond, the company pay off the same, it shall be lawful for them again to borrow the amount so paid off, and so from time to time; but such power of re-borrowing shall not be exercised without the authority of a general meeting of the company, unless the money be so re-borrowed in order to pay off any existing bond or security.

XLII. Where by the special Act the company shall be restricted from borrowing any money on mortgage or bond until a definite portion of their capital shall be subscribed or paid up, or where by this or the special Act the authority of a general meeting is required for such borrowing, the certificate of a sheriff that such definite portion of the capital has been subscribed or paid up, and a copy of the order of a general meeting of the company authorizing the borrowing of any money, certified by one of the directors or by the secretary to be a true copy, shall be sufficient evidence of the fact of the capital required to be subscribed or paid up having been so subscribed or paid up, and of the order for borrowing money having been made; and upon production to any sheriff of the books of the company, and of such other evidence as he shall think sufficient, such sheriff shall grant the certificate as aforesaid.

XLIII. Every mortgage and bond for securing money borrowed by the company shall be by deed under the common seal of the company, duly stamped, and wherein the consideration shall be truly stated; and every such mortgage deed or bond may be according to the form in the Schedule (C.) or (D.) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect; and every such mortgage deed shall have the full effect of an assignation in security duly completed.

XLIV. The respective mortgagees shall be entitled one with another to their respective proportions of the tolls, sums, and premises comprised in such mortgages, and of the future calls payable by the shareholders, if comprised therein, according to the respective sums in such mortgages mentioned to be advanced by such mortgagees respectively, and to be repaid the sums so advanced, with interest, without any preference one above another by reason of priority of the date of any such mortgage, or of the meeting at which the same was authorized.

XLV. No such mortgage (although it should comprise future calls on the shareholders) shall, unless expressly so provided, preclude the company from receiving and applying to the purposes of the company any calls to be made by the company.

XLVI. All mortgages and money lent on mortgage to the company shall be personal estate, and transmissible as such, and shall not be of the nature of real estate.

XLVII. The respective obligees in such bonds shall, proportionally according to the amount of the monies secured thereby, be entitled to be paid, out of the tolls or other property or effects of the company, the respective sums in such bonds mentioned, and thereby intended to be secured, without any preference one above another by reason of priority of date of any such bond, or of the meeting at which the same was authorized, or otherwise howsoever.

XLVIII. A register of mortgages and bonds shall be kept by the secretary, and within fourteen days after the date of any such mortgage or bond an entry or memorial, specifying the number and date of such mortgage or bond, and the sums secured thereby, and the names of the parties thereto, with their proper additions, shall be made in such register; and such register may be perused at all reasonable times by any of the shareholders, or by any mortgagee or bond creditor of the company, or by any person interested in any such mortgage or bond, without fee or reward.

XLIX. Any party entitled to any such mortgage or bond may from time to time transfer his right and interest therein to any other person; and every such transfer shall be by deed duly stamped, wherein the consideration shall be truly stated; and every such transfer may be according to the form in the Schedule (E.) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect.

L. Within thirty days after the date of every such transfer, if executed within the United Kingdom, or otherwise within thirty days after the arrival thereof in the United Kingdom, it shall be produced to the secretary, and thereupon the secretary shall cause an entry or memorial thereof to be made in the same manner as in the case of the original mortgage; and after such entry every such transfer shall entitle the transferee to the full benefit of the original mortgage or bond in all respects; and no party, having made such transfer, shall have power to make void, release, or discharge the mortgage or bond so transferred, or any money thereby secured; and for such entry the company may demand a sum not exceeding the prescribed sum, or, where no sum shall be prescribed, the sum of 2s. 6d.; and until such entry the company shall not be in any manner responsible to the transferee in respect of such mortgage.

LI. The interest of the money borrowed upon any such mortgage or bond shall be paid at the periods appointed in such mortgage or bond, and if no period be appointed, half-yearly, to the several parties entitled thereto, and in preference to any dividends payable to the shareholders of the company.

LII. The interest on any such mortgage or bond shall not be transferable, except by deed duly stamped.

LIII. The company may, if they think proper, fix a period for the repayment of the principal money so borrowed, with the interest thereof, and in such case the company shall cause such period to be inserted in the mortgage deed or bond; and upon the expiration of such period the principal sum, together with the arrears of interest thereon, shall, on demand, be paid to the party entitled to such mortgage or bond; and if no other place of payment be inserted in such mortgage deed or bond, such principal and interest shall be payable at the principal office or place of business of the company.

LIV. If no time be fixed in the mortgage deed or bond for the repayment of the money so borrowed, the party entitled to the mortgage or bond may, at the expiration or at any time after the expiration of twelve months from the date of such mortgage or bond, demand payment of the principal money thereby secured, with all arrears of interest, upon giving six months previous notice for that purpose; and in the like case the company may at any time pay off the money borrowed, on giving the like notice; and every such notice shall be in writing or print, or both, and if given by a mortgagee or bond creditor shall be delivered to the secretary, or left at the principal office of the company, and if given by the company shall be given either personally to such mortgagee or bond creditor or left at his residence, or if such mortgagee or bond creditor be unknown to the directors, or cannot be found after diligent inquiry, such notice shall be given by advertisement in the Edinburgh Gazette, and in some newspaper as after mentioned.

LV. If the company shall have given notice of their intention to pay off any such mortgage or bond at a time when the same may lawfully be paid off by them, then at the expiration of such notice all further interest shall cease to be payable on such mortgage or bond, unless on demand of payment made pursuant to such notice, or at any time thereafter, the company shall fail to pay the principal and interest due at the expiration of such notice on such mortgage or bond.

LVI. Where by the special Act the mortgagees of the company shall be empowered to enforce the payment of the arrear of interest, or the arrears of principal and interest, due on such mortgages, by the appointment of a judicial factor, then, if within thirty days after the interest accruing upon any such mortgage or bond has become payable, and after demand thereof in writing, the same be not paid, the mortgagee may, without prejudice to his right to sue for the interest so in arrear in any competent court, require the appointment of a judicial factor, by an application to be made as hereinafter provided; and if within six months after the principal money owing upon any such mortgage or bond has become payable, and after demand thereof in writing, the same be not paid, the mortgagee, without prejudice to his right to sue for such principal money, together with all arrears of interest, in any competent court, may, if his debt amount to the prescribed sum alone, or if his debt does not amount to the prescribed sum, he may, in conjunction with other mortgagees, whose debts, being so in arrear, after demand as aforesaid, shall, together with his, amount to the prescribed sum, require the appointment of a judicial factor, by an application to be made as hereinafter provided.

LVII. Every application for a judicial factor in the cases aforesaid shall be made to the Court of Session, and on any such application so made, and after hearing the parties, it shall be lawful for the said court, by order in writing, to appoint some person to receive the whole or a competent part of the tolls or sums liable to the payment of such interest, or such principal and interest, as the case may be, until such interest, or until such principal and interest, as the case may be, together with all costs, including the charges of receiving the tolls or sums aforesaid, be fully paid; and upon such appointment being made all such tolls and sums of money as aforesaid shall be paid to and received by the person so to be appointed; and the money so to be received shall be so much money received by or to the use of the party to whom such interest, or such principal and interest, as the case may be, shall be then due, and on whose behalf such judicial factor shall have been appointed; and after such interest and costs, or such principal, interest, and costs, have been so received, the power of such judicial factor shall cease, and he shall be bound to account to the company for his intromissions, or the sums received by him, and to pay over to their treasurer any balance that may be in his hands.

LVIII. At all reasonable times the books of account of the company shall be open to the inspection of the respective mortgagees and bond creditors thereof, with liberty to take extracts therefrom, without fee or reward.

LIX. And with respect to the conversion of the borrowed money into capital,—it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the company, if they think fit, unless it be otherwise provided by the special Act, to raise the additional sum so authorised to be borrowed, or any part thereof, by creating new shares of the company, instead of borrowing the same, or having borrowed the same, to continue at interest only a part of such additional sum, and to raise part thereof by creating new shares; but no such augmentation of capital as aforesaid shall take place without the previous authority of a general meeting of the company.

LX. The capital so to be raised by the creation of new shares shall be considered as part of the general capital, and shall be subject to the same provisions in all respects, whether with reference to the payment of calls, or the forfeiture of shares on non-payment of calls, or otherwise, as if it had been part of the original capital, except as to the times of making calls for such additional capital, and the amount of such calls, which respectively it shall be lawful for the company from time to time to fix as they shall think fit.

LXI. If at the time of any such augmentation of capital taking place by the creation of new shares the then existing shares be at a premium, or of greater actual value than the nominal value thereof, then, unless it be otherwise provided by the special Act, the sum so to be raised shall be divided into shares of such amount as will conveniently allow the same to be apportioned among the then shareholders in proportion to the existing shares held by them respectively; and such new shares shall be offered to the then shareholders in the proportion aforesaid; and such offer shall be made by letter under the hand of the secretary given to or sent by post, addressed to each shareholder according to his address in the shareholders address book, or left at his usual or last place of abode.

LXII. The said new shares shall vest in and belong to the shareholders who shall accept the same, and pay the value thereof to the company at the time and by the instalments which shall be fixed by the company; and if any shareholder fail for one month after such offer of new shares to accept the same, and pay the instalments called for in respect thereof, it shall be lawful for the company to dispose of such shares in such manner as they shall deem most for the advantage of the company.

LXIII. If at the time of such augmentation of capital taking place the existing shares be not at a premium, then such new shares may be of such amount, and may be issued in such manner and on such terms, as the company shall think fit.

LXIV. And with respect to the consolidation of the shares into stock,—it is enacted as follows,—it shall be lawful for the company from time to time, with the consent of three-fifths of the votes of the shareholders present in person or by proxy at any general meeting of the company, when due notice for that purpose shall have been given, to convert or consolidate all or any part of the shares then existing in the capital of the company, and in respect whereof the whole money subscribed shall have been paid up, into a general capital stock, to be divided amongst the shareholders according to their respective interests therein.

LXV. After such conversion or consolidation shall have taken place all the provisions contained in this or the special Act which require or imply that the capital of the company shall be divided into shares of any fixed amount, and distinguished by numbers, shall, as to so much of the capital as shall have been so converted or consolidated into stock, cease and be of no effect, and the several holders of such stock may thenceforth transfer their respective interests therein, or any parts of such interests, in the same manner and subject to the same regulations and provisions as or according to which any shares in the capital of the company might be transferred under the provisions of this or the special Act; and the company shall cause an entry to be made in some book to be kept for that purpose of every such transfer; and for every such entry they may demand any sum not exceeding the prescribed amount, or if no amount be prescribed a sum not exceeding 2s. 6d.

LXVI. The company shall from time to time cause the names of the several parties who may be interested in any such stock as aforesaid, with the amount of the interest therein possessed by them respectively, to be entered in a book to be kept for the purpose, and to be called "The Register of Holders of Consolidated Stock;" and such book shall be accessible at all reasonable times to the several holders of shares or stock in the undertaking.

LXVII. The several holders of such stock shall be entitled to participate in the dividends and profits of the company, according to the amount of their respective interests in such stock; and such interests shall, in proportion to the amount thereof, confer on the holders thereof respectively the same privileges and advantages, for the purpose of voting at meetings of the company, qualification for the office of directors, and for other purposes, as would have been conferred by shares of equal amount in the capital of the company, but so that none of such privileges or advantages, except the participation in the dividends and profits of the company, shall be conferred by any aliquot part of such amount of consolidated stock as would not, if existing in shares, have conferred such privileges or advantages respectively.

LXVIII. That all the money raised by the company, whether by subscriptions of the shareholders, or by loan or otherwise, shall be applied, firstly, in paying the costs and expenses incurred in obtaining the special Act, and all expenses incident thereto, and, secondly, in carrying the purposes of the company into execution.

LXIX. And with respect to the general meetings of the company, and the exercise of the right of voting by the shareholders, — it is enacted as follows: The first general meeting of the shareholders of the company shall be held within the prescribed time, or if no time be prescribed within one month after the passing of the special Act, and the future general meetings shall be held at the prescribed periods, and if no periods be prescribed in the months of February and August in each year, or at each other stated periods as shall be appointed for that purpose by an order of a general meeting; and the meetings so appointed to be held as aforesaid shall be called "Ordinary Meetings;" and all meetings, whether ordinary or extraordinary, shall be held in the prescribed place, if any, and if no place be prescribed then at some place to be appointed by the directors.

LXX. No matters, except such as are appointed by this or the special Act to be done at an ordinary meeting, shall be transacted at any such meeting, unless special notice of such matters have been given in the advertisement convening such meeting.

LXXI. Every general meeting of the shareholders, other than an ordinary meeting, shall be called an "Extraordinary Meeting;" and such meetings may be convened by the directors at such times as they think fit.

LXXII. No extraordinary meeting shall enter upon any business not set forth in the notice upon which it shall have been convened.

LXXIII. It shall be lawful for the prescribed number of shareholders, holding in the aggregate shares to the prescribed amount, or, where the number of shareholders or amount of shares shall not be prescribed, it shall be lawful for twenty or more shareholders, holding in the aggregate not less than one-tenth of the capital of the company, by writing under their hands, at any time to require the directors to call an extraordinary meeting of the company; and such requisition shall fully express the object of the meeting required to be called, and shall be left at the office of the company, or given to at least three directors, or left at their last or usual places of abode; and forthwith upon the receipt of such requisition the directors shall convene a meeting of the shareholders; and if for twenty-one days after such notice the directors fail to call such meeting, the prescribed number of shareholders, or such other number as aforesaid, qualified as aforesaid, may call such meeting by giving fourteen days public notice thereof.

LXXIV. Ten days public notice at the least of all meetings, whether ordinary or extraordinary, shall be given by advertisement, which shall specify the place, the day, and the hour of meeting; and every notice of an extraordinary meeting, or of an ordinary meeting if any other business than the business hereby or by the special Act appointed for ordinary meetings is to be done thereat, shall specify the purpose for which the meeting is called.

LXXV. In order to constitute a meeting (whether ordinary or extraordinary) there shall be present, either personally or by proxy, the prescribed quorum, and if no quorum be prescribed then shareholders holding in the aggregate not less than one-twentieth of the capital of the company, and being in number not less than one for every 500*l*. of such required proportion of capital, unless such number would be more than twenty, in which case twenty shareholders holding not less than one-twentieth of the capital of the company shall be the quorum; and if within one hour from the time appointed for such meeting the said quorum be not present no business shall be transacted at the meeting other than the declaring of a dividend, in case that shall be one of the objects of the meeting, but such meeting shall, except in the case of a meeting for the election of directors hereinafter mentioned, be held to be adjourned sine die.

LXXVI. At every meeting of the company one or other of the following persons shall preside as chairman; that is to say, the chairman of the directors, or in his absence the deputy chairman (if any), or in the absence of the chairman and deputy chairman some one of the directors of the company to be chosen for that purpose by the meeting, or in the absence of the chairman and deputy chairman and of all the directors any shareholder to be chosen for that purpose by a majority of the shareholders present at such meeting.

LXXVII. The shareholders present at any such meeting shall proceed in the execution of the powers of the company with respect to the matters for which such meeting shall have been convened, and those only; and every such meeting may be adjourned from time to time, and from place to place; and no business shall be transacted at any adjourned meeting other than the business left unfinished at the meeting from which such adjournment took place.

LXXVIII. At all general meetings of the company every shareholder shall be entitled to vote according to the prescribed scale of voting, and where no scale shall be prescribed every shareholder shall have one vote for every share up to ten, and he shall have an additional vote for every five shares beyond the first ten shares held by him up to one hundred, and an additional vote for every ten shares held by him beyond the first hundred shares: Provided always, that no shareholder shall be entitled to vote at any meeting unless he shall have paid all the calls then due upon the shares held by him.

LXXIX. The votes may be given either personally or by proxies, being shareholders, authorized by writing according to the form in the Schedule (F.) to this Act annexed, or in a form to the like effect, under the hand of the shareholder nominating such proxy, or if such shareholder be a corporation then under their common seal; and every proposition at any such meeting shall be determined by the majority of votes of the parties present, including proxies, the chairman of the meeting being entitled to vote, not only as a principal and proxy, but to have a casting vote if there be an equality of votes.

LXXX. No person shall be entitled to vote as a proxy unless the instrument appointing such proxy have been transmitted to the secretary of the company within the prescribed period, or, if no period be prescribed, not less than forty-eight hours before the time appointed for holding the meeting at which such proxy is to be used.

LXXXI. If several persons be jointly entitled to a share, the person whose name stands first in the register of shareholders as one of the holders of such share shall, for the purpose of voting at any meeting, be deemed the sole proprietor thereof; and on all occasions the vote of such first-named shareholder, either in person or by proxy, shall be allowed as the vote in respect of such share, without proof of the concurrence of the other holders thereof.

LXXXII. If any shareholder be a lunatic or idiot, fatuous or furious person, such lunatic or idiot, fatuous or furious person, may vote by his tutor, curator, or other person appointed to manage his estate; and if any shareholder be a minor he may vote by his tutors or curators or any one of them; and every such vote may be given either in person or by proxy.

LXXXIII. Whenever in this or the special Act the consent of any particular majority of votes at any meeting of the company is required in order to authorize any proceeding of the company, such particular majority shall only be required to be proved in the event of a poll being demanded at such meeting; and if such poll be not demanded then a declaration by the chairman that a resolution authorizing such proceeding has been carried, and an entry to that effect in the book of proceedings of the company, shall be sufficient authority for such proceeding, without proof of the number or proportion of votes recorded in favour of or against the same.

LXXXIV. And with respect to the appointment and rotation of directors,—it is enacted as follows: The number of directors shall be the prescribed number.

LXXXV. Where the company shall be authorized by the special Act to increase or to reduce the number of the directors it shall be lawful for the company, from time to time in general meeting, after due notice for that purpose, to increase or reduce the number of the directors within the prescribed limits, if any, and to determine the order of rotation in which such reduced or increased number shall go out of office, and what number shall be a quorum of their meetings.

LXXXVI. The directors appointed by the special Act shall, unless thereby otherwise provided, continue in office until the first ordinary meeting to be held in the year next after that in which the special Act shall have passed; and at such meeting the shareholders present, personally or by proxy, may either continue in office the directors appointed by the special Act, or any number of them, or may elect a new body of directors, or directors to supply the places of those not continued in office, the directors appointed by the special Act being eligible as members of such new body; and at the first ordinary meeting to be held every year thereafter the shareholders present, personally or by proxy, shall elect persons to supply the places of the directors then retiring from office, agreeably to the provisions hereinafter contained; and the several persons elected at any such meeting, being neither removed nor disqualified, nor having resigned, shall continue to be directors until others are elected in their stead, as hereinafter mentioned.

LXXXVII. If at any meeting at which an election of directors ought to take place the prescribed quorum shall not be present within one hour from the time appointed for the meeting no election of directors shall be made, but such meeting shall stand adjourned to the following day, at the same time and place; and if at the meeting so adjourned the prescribed quorum be not present within one hour from the time appointed for the meeting, the existing directors shall continue to act and retain their powers until new directors be appointed at the first ordinary meeting of the following year.

LXXXVIII. No person shall be capable of being a director unless he be a shareholder, nor unless he be possessed of the prescribed number, if any, of shares; and no person holding an office or place of trust or profit under the company, or interested in any contract with the company, shall be capable of being a director; and no director shall be capable of accepting any other office or place of trust or profit under the company, or of being interested in any contract with the company, during the time he shall be a director.

lxxxix. If any of the directors at any time subsequently to his election accept or continue to hold any other office or place of trust or profit under the company, or be either directly or indirectly concerned in any contract with the company, or participate in any manner in the profits of any work to be done for the company, or if such director at any time cease to be a holder of the prescribed number of shares in the company, then in any of the cases aforesaid the office of such director shall become vacant, and thenceforth he shall cease from voting or acting as a director.

xc. Provided always, that no person, being a shareholder or member of any incorporated joint-stock company, shall be disqualified or prevented from acting as a director by reason of any contract entered into between such joint-stock company and the company incorporated by the special Act; but no such director, being a shareholder or member of such joint-stock company, shall vote on any question as to any contract with such joint-stock company.

xc. The directors appointed by the special Act, and continued in office as aforesaid, or the directors elected to supply the places of those retiring as aforesaid, shall, subject to the provision hereinbefore contained for increasing or reducing the number of directors, retire from office at the times and in the proportions following; the individuals to retire being in each instance determined by ballot among the directors, unless they shall otherwise agree; (that is to say,)

At the end of the first year after the first election of directors the prescribed number, and if no number be prescribed one-third of such directors, to be determined by ballot among themselves, unless they shall otherwise agree, shall go out of office:

At the end of the second year the prescribed number, and if no number be prescribed one-half of the remaining number of such directors, to be determined in like manner, shall go out of office:

At the end of the third year the prescribed number, and if no number be prescribed the remainder of such directors shall go out of office:

And in each instance the places of the retiring directors shall be supplied by an equal number of qualified shareholders; and at the first ordinary meeting in every subsequent year the prescribed number, and if no number be prescribed one-third of the directors, being those who have been longest in office, shall go out of office, and their places shall be supplied in like manner; nevertheless, every director so retiring from office may be re-elected immediately or at any future time, and after such re-election shall, with reference to the going out by rotation, be considered as a new director: Provided always, that if the prescribed number of directors be some number not divisible by three, and the number of directors to retire be not prescribed, the directors shall in each case determine what number of directors, as nearly one-third as may be, shall go out of office, so that the whole number shall go out of office in three years.

xcii. If any director die or resign, or become disqualified or incompetent to act as a director, or cease to be a director by any other cause than that of going out of office by rotation as aforesaid, the remaining directors, if they think proper so to do, may elect in his place some other shareholder, duly qualified, to be a director; and the shareholder so elected to fill up any such vacancy shall continue in office as a director so long only as the person in whose place he shall have been elected would have been entitled to continue if he had remained in office.

xciii. And with respect to the powers of the directors and the powers of the company to be exercised only in general meetings,—it is enacted as follows: The directors shall have the management and superintendence of the affairs of the company, and they may lawfully exercise all the powers of the company, except as to such matters as are directed by this or the special Act to be transacted by a general meeting of the company; but all the powers so to be exercised shall be exercised in accordance with and subject to the provisions of this and the special Act; and the exercise of all such powers shall be subject also to the controul and regulation of any general meeting specially convened for the purpose, but not so as to render invalid any act done by the directors prior to any resolution passed by such general meeting.

xciv. Except as otherwise provided by the special Act, the following powers of the company, (that is to say,) the choice and removal of the directors, except as hereinbefore mentioned, and the increasing or reducing of their number where authorized by the special Act, the choice of auditors, the determination as to the remuneration of the directors, auditors, treasurer, and secretary, the determination as to the amount of money to be borrowed on mortgage, the determination as to the augmentation of capital, and the declaration of dividends, shall be exercised only at a general meeting of the company.

xcv. And with respect to the proceedings and liabilities of the directors,—it is enacted as follows: The directors shall hold meetings at such times as they shall appoint for the purpose, and they may meet and adjourn as they think proper from time to time, and from place to place; and at any time any two of the directors may require the secretary to call a meeting of the directors; and in order to constitute a meeting of directors, there shall be present at the least the prescribed quorum, and when no quorum shall be prescribed there shall be present at least one-third of the directors; and all questions at any such meeting shall be determined by the majority of votes of the directors present, and in case of an equal division of votes the chairman shall have a casting vote, in addition to his vote as one of the directors.

xcvi. At the first meeting of directors held after the passing of the special Act, and at the first meeting of the directors held after each annual appointment of directors, the directors present at such meeting shall choose one of the directors to act as chairman of the directors for the year following such choice, and shall also, if they think fit, choose another director to act as deputy chairman for the same period; and if the chairman or deputy chairman die or resign, or cease to be a director, or otherwise become disqualified to act, the directors present at the meeting next after the occurrence of such vacancy shall choose some other of the directors to fill such vacancy; and every such chairman or deputy chairman so elected as last aforesaid shall continue in office so long only as the person in whose place he may be so elected would have been entitled to continue if such death, resignation, removal, or disqualification had not happened.

xcvii. If at any meeting of the directors neither the chairman nor deputy chairman be present the directors present shall choose some one of their number to be chairman of such meeting.

xcviii. It shall be lawful for the directors to appoint one or more committees consisting of such number of directors as they think fit, within the prescribed limits, if any, and they may grant to such committees respectively power on behalf of the company to do any acts relating to the affairs of the company which the directors could lawfully do, and which they shall from time to time think proper to intrust to them.

XCIX. The said committees may meet from time to time, and may adjourn from place to place, as they think proper, for carrying into effect the purposes of their appointment; and no such committee shall exercise the powers intrusted to them, except at a meeting at which there shall be present the prescribed quorum, or if no quorum be prescribed then a quorum to be fixed for that purpose by the general body of directors; and at all meetings of the committees one of the members present shall be appointed chairman; and all questions at any meeting of the committee shall be determined by a majority of votes of the members present, and in case of an equal division of votes the chairman shall have a casting vote, in addition to his vote as a member of the committee.

c. The power which may be granted to any such committee to make contracts, as well as the power of the directors to make contracts, on behalf of the company, may lawfully be exercised as follows; (that is to say.)

With respect to any contract which if made between private persons, would be by law required to be by deed or by agreement, in writing, and signed by the parties to be charged therewith, then such committee or the directors may make such contract on behalf of the company, in writing, either under the common seal of the company, or signed by such committee, or any two of them, or any two of the directors, and in the same manner may vary or discharge the same:

With respect to any contract which, if made between private persons, would by law be valid, although made by parol only, and not reduced into writing, such committee, or the directors, may make such contract on behalf of the company, by parol only, without writing, and in the same manner may vary or discharge the same:

And all contracts made according to the provisions herein contained shall be effectual in law, and shall be binding upon the company and their successors, and all other parties thereto, their heirs, executors, or administrators, as the case may be; and on any default in the execution of any such contract, either by the company, or any other party thereto, such actions or suits may be brought, either by or against the company, as might be brought had the same contracts been made between private persons only.

CI. The directors shall cause notes, minutes, or copies, as the case may require, of all appointments made or contracts entered into by the directors, and of the orders and proceedings of all meetings of the company, and of the directors and committees of directors, to be duly entered in books to be from time to time provided for the purpose, which shall be kept under the superintendence of the directors; and every such entry shall be signed by the chairman of such meeting; and such entry, so signed, shall be received as evidence in all courts, and before all Judges, Justices, and others, without proof of such respective meetings having been duly convened or held, or of the persons making or entering such orders or proceedings being shareholders or directors or members of committee respectively, or of the signature of the chairman, or of the fact of his having been chairman, all of which last-mentioned matters shall be presumed, until the contrary be proved.

CII. All acts done by any meeting of the directors, or of a committee of directors, or by any person acting as a director, shall, notwithstanding it may be afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the appointment of any such directors or persons acting as aforesaid, or that they or any of them were or was disqualified, be as valid as if every such person had been duly appointed and was qualified to be a director.

CIII. No director, by being party to or executing in his capacity of director any contract or other instrument on behalf of the company, or otherwise lawfully executing any of the powers given to the directors, shall be subject to be sued or prosecuted, either individually or collectively, by any person whomsoever; and the bodies or goods or lands of the directors shall not be liable to execution of any legal process by reason of any contract or other instrument so entered into, signed, or executed by them, or by reason of any other lawful act done by them in the execution of any of their powers as directors; and the directors, their heirs, executors, and administrators, shall be indemnified out of the capital of the company for all payments made or liability incurred in respect of any acts done by them, and for all losses, costs, and damages which they may incur in the execution of the powers granted to them; and the directors for the time being of the company may apply the existing funds and capital of the company for the purposes of such indemnity, and may, if necessary for that purpose, make calls of the capital remaining unpaid, if any.

CIV. And with respect to the appointment and duties of auditors,—it is enacted as follows: Except where by the special Act auditors shall be directed to be appointed otherwise than by the company, the company shall at the first ordinary meeting after the passing of the special Act elect the prescribed number of auditors, and if no number is prescribed two auditors, in like manner as is provided for the election of directors; and at the first ordinary meeting of the company in each year thereafter the company shall in like manner elect an auditor to supply the place of the auditor then retiring from office, according to the provision hereinafter contained; and every auditor elected as hereinbefore provided, being neither removed nor disqualified, nor having resigned, shall continue to be an auditor until another be elected in his stead.

CV. Where no other qualification shall be prescribed by the special Act, every auditor shall have at least one share in the undertaking, and he shall not hold any office in the company, nor be in any other manner interested in its concerns, except as a shareholder.

CVI. One of such auditors (to be determined in the first instance by ballot between themselves, unless they shall otherwise agree, and afterwards by seniority,) shall go out of office at the first ordinary meeting in each year; but the auditor so going out shall be immediately re-eligible, and after any such re-election shall, with respect to the going out of office by rotation, be deemed a new auditor.

CVII. If any vacancy take place among the auditors in the course of the current year, then at any general meeting of the company the vacancy may, if the company think fit, be supplied by election of the shareholders.

CVIII. The provision of this Act respecting the failure of an ordinary meeting at which directors ought to be chosen shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to any ordinary meeting at which an auditor ought to be appointed.

CIX. The directors shall deliver to such auditors the half-yearly or other periodical accounts and balance sheet fourteen days at the least before the ensuing ordinary meeting at which the same are required to be produced to the shareholders, as hereinafter provided.

CX. It shall be the duty of such auditors to receive from the directors the half-yearly or other periodical accounts and balance sheet required to be presented to the shareholders, and to examine the same.

CXI. It shall be lawful for the auditors to employ such accountants and other persons as they may think proper, at the expense of the company, and they shall either make a special report on the said accounts, or simply confirm the same; and such report or confirmation shall be read, together with the report of the directors, at the ordinary meeting.

CXII. And with respect to the accountability of the officers of the company,—it is enacted as follows: Before any person intrusted with the custody or controul of monies, whether treasurer, collector, or other officer of the company, shall enter upon his office, the directors shall take sufficient security from him for the faithful execution of his office.

CXIII. Every officer employed by the company shall from time to time, when required by the directors, make out and deliver to them, or to any person appointed by them for that purpose, a true and perfect account, in writing under his hand, of all monies received by him on behalf of the company; and such account shall state how, and to whom, and for what purpose, such monies shall have been disposed of; and, together with such account, such officer shall deliver the vouchers and receipts for such payments; and every such officer shall pay to the directors, or to any person appointed by them to receive the same, all monies which shall appear to be owing by him upon the balance of such accounts.

CXIV. If any such officer fail to render such account, or to produce and deliver up all the vouchers and receipts relating to the same in his possession or power, or to pay the balance thereof when thereunto required, or if, for three days after being thereto required, he fail to deliver up to the directors, or to any person appointed by them to receive the same, all papers and writings, property, effects, matters, and things, in his possession or power, relating to the execution of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or belonging to the company, then, on complaint thereof being made to the sheriff or a Justice, such sheriff or Justice shall summon or order such officer to appear before such sheriff, if the summons or order be issued by a sheriff, or before two or more Justices, if the summons or order be issued by a Justice, at a time and place to be set forth in such summons or order, to answer such charge; and upon the appearance of such officer, or, in his absence, upon proof that such summons or order was personally served upon him, or left at his last known place of abode, such sheriff or Justices may hear and determine the matter in a summary way, and may adjust and declare the balance owing by such officer; and if it appear, either upon confession of such officer or upon evidence, or upon inspection of the account, that any monies of the company are in the hands of such officer, or owing by him to the company, such sheriff or Justices may order such officer to pay the same; and if he fail to pay the amount it shall be lawful for such sheriff or Justices to grant a warrant to levy the same by pouncing and sale, or in default thereof to commit the offender to gaol, there to remain without bail for a period not exceeding three months.

CXV. If any such officer refuse to produce and deliver to the said sheriff or Justices the several vouchers and receipts relating to his accounts, or to deliver up any books, papers, or writings, property, effects, matters, or things, in his possession or power, belonging to the company, such sheriff or Justices may lawfully commit such offender to gaol, there to remain until he shall have delivered up all the vouchers and receipts, if any, in his possession or power, relating to such accounts, and have delivered up all books, papers, writings, property, effects, matters and things, if any, in his possession or power, belonging to the company.

CXVI. Provided always, That if any director or other person acting on behalf of the company shall make oath that he has good reason to believe, upon grounds to be stated in his deposition, and does believe, that it is the intention of any such officer as aforesaid to abscond, it shall be lawful for the sheriff or Justice before whom the complaint is made, instead of issuing his summons or order, to issue his warrant for the bringing such officer before the sheriff, to answer to the charge, as hereinbefore directed, if the warrant has been issued by the sheriff, or before any Justice if the warrant shall have been issued by a Justice; and it shall be lawful for the Justice before whom such officer may be brought either to discharge such officer, if he thinks there is no sufficient ground for his detention, or to order such officer to be detained in custody, so as to be brought before two Justices at a time and place to be named in such order, unless such officer give surety, to the satisfaction of such Justice, for his appearance before such Justices, to answer the complaint of the company.

CXVII. No such proceeding against or dealing with any such officer as aforesaid shall deprive the company of any remedy which they might otherwise have against such officer, or any surety of such officer.

CXVIII. And with respect to the keeping of accounts, and the right of inspection thereof by the shareholders,—it is enacted as follows: The directors shall cause full and true accounts to be kept of all sums of money received or expended on account of the company by the directors, and all persons employed by or under them, and of the matters and things for which such sums of money shall have been received, or disbursed and paid.

CXIX. The books of the company shall be balanced at the prescribed periods, and if no periods be prescribed, fourteen days at least before each ordinary meeting; and forthwith on the books being so balanced an exact balance sheet shall be made up, which shall exhibit a true statement of the capital stock, credits, and property of every description belonging to the company, and the debts due by the company at the date of making such balance sheet, and a distinct view of the profit or loss which shall have arisen on the transactions of the company in the course of the preceding half-year; and previously to each ordinary meeting such balance sheet shall be examined by the directors, or any three of their number, and shall be signed by the chairman or deputy chairman of the directors.

CXX. The books so balanced, together with such balance sheet as aforesaid, shall for the prescribed periods, and if no periods be prescribed, for fourteen days previous to each ordinary meeting, and for one month thereafter, be open for the inspection of the shareholders at the principal office or place of business of the company; but the shareholders shall not be entitled at any time, except during the periods aforesaid, to demand the inspection of such books, unless in virtue of a written order signed by three of the directors.

CXXI. That the directors shall produce to the shareholders assembled at such ordinary meeting the said balance sheet as aforesaid, applicable to the period immediately preceding such meeting, together with the report of the auditors thereon, as hereinbefore provided.

CXXII. The directors shall appoint a book-keeper to enter the accounts aforesaid in books to be provided for the purpose; and every such book-keeper shall permit any shareholder to inspect such books, and to take copies or entries therefrom, at any reasonable time during the prescribed periods, and if no periods be prescribed, during one fortnight before and one month after every ordinary meeting; and if he fail to permit any such shareholder to inspect such books, or take copies or extracts therefrom, during the periods aforesaid, he shall forfeit to such shareholder for every such offence a sum not exceeding 5*l*.

CXXIII. And with respect to the making of dividends,—it is enacted as follows: Previously to every ordinary meeting at which a dividend is intended to be declared the directors shall cause a scheme to be prepared, shewing the profits, if any, of the company for the period current since the preceding ordinary meeting at which a dividend was declared, and apportioning the same, or so much thereof as they may consider applicable to the purposes of dividend, among the shareholders, according to the shares held by them respectively, the amount paid thereon, and the periods during which the same may have been paid, and shall exhibit such scheme at such ordinary meeting, and at such meeting a dividend may be declared according to such scheme.

CXXIV. The company shall not make any dividend whereby their capital stock will be in any degree reduced: provided always, that the word "Dividend" shall not be construed to apply to a return of any portion of the capital stock, with the consent of all the mortgagees and bond creditors of the company, due notice being given for that purpose at an extraordinary meeting to be convened for that object.

CXXV. Before apportioning the profits to be divided among the shareholders the directors may, if they think fit, set aside thereout such sum as they may think proper to meet contingencies, or for enlarging, repairing, or improving the works connected with the undertaking, or any part thereof, and may divide the balance only among the shareholders.

CXXVI. No dividend shall be paid in respect of any share until all calls then due in respect of that and every other share held by the person to whom such dividend may be payable shall have been paid.

CXXVII. And with respect to the making of bye-laws,—it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the company from time to time to make such bye-laws as they think fit, for the purpose of regulating the conduct of the officers and servants of the company, and for providing for the due management of the affairs of the company in all respects whatsoever, and from time to time to alter or repeal any such bye-laws, and make others, provided such bye-laws be not repugnant to the laws of that part of the United Kingdom where the same are to have effect, or to the provisions of this or the special Act; and such bye-laws shall be reduced into writing, and shall have affixed thereto the common seal of the company, and a copy of such bye-laws shall be given to every officer and servant of the company affected thereby.

CXXVIII. It shall be lawful for the company by such bye-laws to impose such reasonable penalties upon all persons, being officers or servants of the company, offending against such bye-laws, as the company think fit, not exceeding 5*l*. for any one offence.

CXXIX. All the bye-laws to be made by the company shall be so framed as to allow the sheriff or Justices before whom any penalty imposed thereby may be sought to be recovered to order a part only of such penalty to be paid, if such sheriff shall think fit.

CXXX. The production of a written or printed copy of the bye-laws of the company, having the common seal of the company affixed thereto, shall be sufficient evidence of such bye-laws in all cases of prosecution under the same.

CXXXI. And with respect to the settlement of disputes by arbitration,—it is enacted as follows: When any dispute directed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, to be settled by arbitration, shall have arisen, then, unless both parties shall concur in the appointment of a single arbitrator, each party, on the request of the other party, shall by writing under his hand nominate and appoint an arbitrator to whom such dispute shall be referred; and after any such appointment shall have been made neither party shall have power to revoke the same, without the consent of the other, nor shall the death of either party operate as such revocation; and if for the space of fourteen days after any such dispute shall have arisen, and after a request in writing shall have been served by the one party on the other party to appoint an arbitrator such last-mentioned party fail to appoint such arbitrator, then upon such failure the party making the request, and having himself appointed an arbitrator, may appoint such arbitrator to act on behalf of both parties; and such arbitrator may proceed to hear and determine the matters which shall be in dispute, and in such case the award or determination of such single arbitrator shall be final.

CXXXII. If, before the matters so referred shall be determined, any arbitrator appointed by either party die, or become incapable or refuse or for seven days neglect to act as arbitrator, the party by whom such arbitrator was appointed may nominate and appoint in writing some other person to act in his place; and if for the space of seven days after notice in writing from the other party for that purpose he fail to do so the remaining or other arbitrator may proceed ex parte; and every arbitrator so to be substituted as aforesaid shall have the same powers and authorities as were vested in the former arbitrator at the time of such his death, refusal, or disability as aforesaid.

CXXXIII. Where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, such arbitrators shall, before they enter upon the matters so referred to them, nominate and appoint by writing under their hands an umpire to decide on any such matters or which they shall differ; and if such umpire shall die, or refuse or for seven days neglect to act, they shall forthwith after such death, refusal, or neglect appoint another umpire in his place; and the decision of every such umpire on the matters so referred to him shall be final.

CCXIV. If in either of the cases aforesaid the said arbitrators shall refuse, or shall for seven days after request of either party to such arbitration neglect to appoint an umpire, it shall be lawful for the lord ordinary, on the application of either party to such arbitration, to appoint an umpire; and the decision of such umpire on the matters on which the arbitrators shall differ shall be final.

CCXV. The said arbitrators, or their umpire, may call for the production of any documents in the possession or power of either party which they or he may think necessary for determining the question in dispute, and may examine the parties or their witnesses on oath, and administer the oaths necessary for that purpose, and may also grant diligence for the recovery of such documents as either party may require, or for citing witnesses; and on application to the lord ordinary, letters of supplement, or such other writ as may be necessary, shall be issued by the lord ordinary, in support of such diligence.

CCXVI. Except where by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, it shall be otherwise provided, the costs of and attending every such arbitration to be determined by the arbitrators shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators or the umpire as the case may be.

CCXVII. And with respect to the giving of notices,—it is enacted as follows: Any summons or notice, or any writ, or other proceeding, at law or in equity, requiring to be served upon the company, may be served by the same being left at or transmitted through the post directed to the principal office of the company, or one of their principal offices where there shall be more than one, or being given personally to the secretary, or in case there be no secretary then by being given to any one director of the company.

CCXVIII. Notices requiring to be served by the company upon the shareholders may, unless expressly required to be served personally, be served by the same being transmitted through the post directed according to the registered address or other known address of the shareholder, within such period as to admit of its being delivered in the due course of delivery within the period (if any) prescribed for the giving of such notice; and in proving such service it shall be sufficient to prove that such notice was properly directed, and that it was so put into the post-office.

CCXIX. All notices directed to be given to the shareholders shall, with respect to any share to which persons are jointly entitled, be given to whichever of the said persons shall be named first in the register of shareholders; and notice so given shall be sufficient notice to all the proprietors of such share.

CC. All notices required by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, to be given by advertisement, shall be advertised in the prescribed newspaper, or if no newspaper be prescribed, or if the prescribed newspaper cease to be published, in a newspaper circulating in the district within which the company's principal place of business shall be situated.

CCII. Every summons, demand, or notice, or other such document requiring authentication by the company, may be signed by two directors, or by the treasurer or the secretary of the company, and need not be under the common seal of the company, and the same may be in writing or in print, or partly in writing and partly in print.

CCIII. That if any person against whom the company shall have any claim or demand become bankrupt, or take the benefit of any Act for the relief of insolvent debtors, it shall be lawful for the secretary or treasurer of the company, in all proceedings against the estate of such bankrupt or insolvent, or under any fiat, sequestration, or act of insolvency against such bankrupt or insolvent, to represent the company, and act in their behalf, in all respects as if such claim or demand had been the claim or demand of such secretary or treasurer, and not of the company.

CCIV. That if any party shall have committed any irregularity, trespass, or other wrongful proceeding in the execution of this or the special Act, or by virtue of any power or authority thereby given, and if, before action brought in respect thereof, such party make tender of sufficient amends to the party injured, such last-mentioned party shall not recover in any such action; and if no such tender shall have been made it shall be lawful for the defender, by leave of the Court where such action shall be pending, at any time before the record is closed, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit; and thereupon such proceedings shall be had as in other cases where defenders are allowed to pay money into court.

CCV. And with respect to the recovery of damages not specially provided for,—it is enacted as follows: In all cases where any damages, costs, or expenses are by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, directed to be paid, and the method of ascertaining the amount or enforcing the payment thereof is not provided for, such amount, in case of dispute, shall be ascertained and determined by the sheriff; and if the amount so ascertained be not paid by the company or other party liable to pay the same within seven days after demand, the amount may be recovered by poinding and sale of the goods of the company or other party liable as aforesaid; and the sheriff shall, on application, issue his warrant accordingly.

CCVI. If sufficient goods of the company cannot be found whereon to levy any such damages, costs, or expenses, payable by the company, the same may, if the amount thereof do not exceed 20*l.*, be recovered by poinding and sale of the goods of the treasurer of the company; and the sheriff, on application, shall issue his warrant accordingly; but no such poinding and sale shall be executed against the goods of such treasurer unless seven days previous notice in writing, stating the amount so due, and demanding payment thereof, have been given to such treasurer, or left at his residence; and if such treasurer pay any money under such distress or poinding and sale as aforesaid, he may retain the amount so paid by him, and all costs and expenses occasioned thereby, out of any money belonging to the company coming into his custody or controul, or he may sue the company for the same.

CCVII. Where, in this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any question of expenses, charges, or damages is referred to the determination of any sheriff or Justices, it shall be lawful for the sheriff or any Justice, upon the application of either party, to summon the other party to appear before such sheriff, or before two Justices, as the case may require, at a time and place to be named in such summons; and upon the appearance of such parties, or, in the absence of any of them, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such sheriff, or such two Justices, as the case may be, to hear and determine such question, and for that purpose to examine such parties or any of them, and their witnesses, on oath; and the costs of every such inquiry shall be in the discretion of such sheriff or Justices, and he or they shall determine the amount thereof.

CLXVII. The company shall publish the short particulars of the several offences for which any penalty is imposed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or by any bye-law of the company affecting other persons than the shareholders, officers, or servants of the company, and of the amount of every such penalty, and shall cause such particulars to be painted on a board, or printed upon paper and pasted thereon, and shall cause such board to be hung up or affixed on some conspicuous part of the principal place of business of the company, and where any such penalties are of local application shall cause such boards to be affixed in some conspicuous place in the immediate neighbourhood to which such penalties are applicable or have reference; and such particulars shall be renewed as often as the same or any part thereof is obliterated or destroyed; and no such penalty shall be recoverable unless it shall have been published and kept published in the manner hereinbefore required.

CLXVIII. If any person pull down or injure any board put up or affixed as required by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, for the purpose of publishing any bye-law or penalty, or shall obliterate any of the letters or figures thereon, he shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding 5*l.*, and shall defray the expenses attending the restoration of such board.

CLXIX. Every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special Act, or by any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before the sheriff or two Justices; and on complaint being made to any sheriff or Justice he shall issue an order requiring the party complained against to appear before himself, if the order be issued by a sheriff, or before two or more Justices, if the order be issued by a Justice, at a time and place to be named in such order; and every such order shall be served on the party offending, either in person or by leaving the same with some inmate at his usual place of abode; and upon the appearance of the party complained against, or in his absence, after proof of the due service of such order, it shall be lawful for any sheriff or two Justices to proceed to the hearing of the complaint; and upon proof of the offence, either by the confession of the party complained against, or upon the oath of one credible witness or more, it shall be lawful for such sheriff or Justices to convict the offender, and upon such conviction to adjudge the offender to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, as well as such costs attending the conviction, as such sheriff or Justices shall think fit.

CL. If forthwith upon any such adjudication as aforesaid the amount of the penalty or forfeiture, and of such costs as aforesaid, be not paid, the amount of such penalty and costs shall be levied by pointing and sale; and such sheriff or Justices, or either of them, shall issue his or their warrant of pointing and sale accordingly.

CLI. It shall be lawful for any such sheriff or Justices to order any offender so convicted as aforesaid to be detained and kept in safe custody until return can be conveniently made to the warrant of pointing and sale to be issued for levying such penalty or forfeiture, and costs, unless the offender give sufficient security, by way of recognizance or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the sheriff or Justices, for his appearance before him on the day appointed for such return, such day not being more than eight days from the time of taking such security; but if before issuing such warrant of pointing and sale it shall appear to the sheriff or Justices, by the admission of the offender or otherwise, that no sufficient pointing and sale can be had within the jurisdiction of such sheriff or Justices whereon to levy such penalty or forfeiture, and costs, he or they may, if he or they think fit, refrain from issuing such warrant; and in such case, or if such warrant shall have been issued, and upon the return thereof such insufficiency as aforesaid shall be made to appear to the sheriff or Justices, then such sheriff or Justices shall, by warrant, cause such offender to be committed to gaol, there to remain without bail for any term not exceeding three months, unless such penalty or forfeiture, and costs, be sooner paid and satisfied.

CLII. Where in this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any sum of money, whether in the nature of penalty or otherwise, is directed to be levied by pointing and sale, such sum of money shall be levied by pointing and sale of the goods and effects of the party liable to pay the same, and the overplus arising from the sale of such goods and effects after satisfying such sum of money and the expenses of the pointing and sale, shall be returned, on demand, to the party whose goods shall have been seized.

CLIII. No pointing and sale made by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be deemed unlawful, nor shall any party making the same be deemed a trespasser or wrongdoer, on account of any defect or want of force in the summons, conviction, warrant, or other proceeding relating thereto; but all persons aggrieved by such defect or irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action before the sheriff court.

CLIV. The sheriff or Justices by whom any such penalty or forfeiture shall be imposed, where the application thereof is not otherwise provided for, may award not more than one-half thereof to the informer, and shall award the remainder to the parish of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed, for the benefit of the poor of such parish.

CLV. No person shall be liable to the payment of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, for any offence made cognizable before the sheriff or Justices, unless the complaint respecting such offence shall have been made before such sheriff or some Justice within six months next after the commission of such offence.

CLVI. If, through any act, neglect, or default on account whereof any person shall have incurred any penalty imposed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any damage to the property of the company shall have been committed by such person, he shall be liable to make good such damage, as well as to pay such penalty; and the amount of such damages shall, in case of dispute, be determined by the sheriff or Justices by whom the party incurring such penalty shall have been convicted; and on non-payment of such damages, on demand, the same shall be levied by pouding and sale, and such sheriff or Justices shall issue his or their warrant accordingly.

CLVII. It shall be lawful for any sheriff or Justice to summon any person to appear before him as a witness in any matter in which such sheriff or Justice, or two or more Justices, shall have jurisdiction, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, at a time and place mentioned in such summons, and to administer to him an oath to testify the truth in such matter; and if any person so summoned shall, without reasonable excuse, refuse or neglect to appear at the time and place appointed for that purpose, having been paid or tendered a reasonable sum for his expenses, or if any person appearing shall refuse to be examined upon oath or to give evidence before such sheriff or Justice, or Justices, every such person shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l*. for every such offence.

CLVIII. It shall be lawful for any officer or agent of the company, and all persons called by him to his assistance, to seize and detain any person who shall be found committing any offence against the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, and whose name and residence shall be unknown to such officer or agent, and convey him, with all convenient despatch, before the sheriff or a Justice, without any warrant or other authority than this or the special Act; and such sheriff or Justice shall proceed with all convenient despatch in the matter of the complaint against such offender.

CLIX. Any sheriff to whom any application is authorized to be made, and before whom any judicial proceedings shall in consequence take place or become necessary, under or by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall and he is hereby authorized and required summarily to call before him all parties who appear to him to be interested therein, and to proceed forthwith to hear viâ voce, and pronounce judgment regarding the matters mentioned in such application or proceeding, or to do the several matters and things required by this Act to be done by him, without waiting the ordinary course of the roll of causes before him, and without written pleadings, or a written record, or reducing any evidence which may be led by either of the parties to writing, unless and except where the said sheriff shall consider that the matters mentioned in such application or proceedings can with more advantage be decided with written pleadings and with a written record, in which case he shall proceed to make up a record, and bring the said matters to a conclusion with all convenient despatch; and the orders and judgments of the said sheriff, when pronounced without a record, shall be final and conclusive, and not subject to review by suspension or advocacy, or to reduction, on any ground whatever.

CLX. The sheriff or Justice, or Justices, before whom any person shall be convicted of any offence against this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, may cause the conviction to be drawn up according to the form in the Schedule (G.) to this Act annexed.

CLXI. No proceeding in pursuance of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, nor shall the same be removed by suspension or otherwise into any superior court.

CLXII. In all cases which may come before any sheriff substitute under this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, in which written pleadings shall have been allowed, and a written record shall have been made up, and where the evidence which has been led by the parties shall have been reduced to writing, but in no other case whatever, it shall be competent for any of the parties thereto, within seven days after a final judgment shall have been pronounced by such sheriff substitute, to appeal against the same to the sheriff of the county, by lodging a minute of appeal with the sheriff clerk of such county, or his deputy; and the said sheriff shall thereupon review the proceedings of the said sheriff substitute, and whole process, and, if he think proper, hear the parties viâ voce thereon, and pronounce judgment; and such judgment shall in no case be subject to review by suspension or advocacy, or to reduction, on any ground whatever.

CLXIII. If any party shall feel aggrieved by any determination or adjudication of any Justice, or two or more Justices, with respect to any penalty or forfeiture under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, such party may appeal to the General Quarter Sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal shall have arisen; but no such appeal shall be entertained unless it be made within four months next after the making of such determination or adjudication, nor unless ten days notice in writing of such appeal, stating the nature and grounds thereof, be given to the party against whom the appeal shall be brought, nor unless the appellant forthwith after such notice enter into recognisances, with two sufficient sureties, before a Justice, conditioned duly to prosecute such appeal, and to abide the order of the Court thereon.

CLXIV. At the Quarter Sessions for which such notice shall be given the Court shall proceed to hear and determine the appeal in a summary way, or they may, if they think fit, adjourn it to the following sessions; and upon the hearing of such appeal the Court may, if they think fit, mitigate any penalty or forfeiture, or they may confirm or quash the adjudication, and order any money paid by the appellant, or levied by distress upon his goods, to be returned to him, and may also order such further satisfaction to be made to the party injured as they may judge reasonable; and they may make such order concerning the costs, both of the adjudication and of the appeal, as they may think reasonable.

CLXV. And with respect to the provision to be made for affording access to the special Act by all parties interested,—it is enacted as follows: The company shall at all times after the expiration of six months after the passing of the special Act keep in their principal office of business a copy of the special Act printed by the printers to Her Majesty, or some of them; and where the undertaking shall be a railway, canal, or other like undertaking, the works of which shall not be confined to one town or place, shall also within the space of such six months deposit in the office of each of the clerks of the peace of the several counties into which the works shall extend, and in the office of the town clerk of every burgh or city into which, or within one mile of which, the works shall extend, a copy of such special Act, so printed as aforesaid; and the said clerks of the peace and town clerks shall receive, and they and the company respectively shall retain, the said copies of the special Act, and shall permit all persons interested to inspect the same, and make extracts or copies therefrom, in the like manner, and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided in the case of certain plans and sections by an Act, 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 83, intituled 'An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties, and other Persons, to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament.'

CLXVI. If the company shall fail to keep or deposit, as hereinbefore mentioned, any of the said copies of the special Act, they shall forfeit 20*l.* for every such offence, and also 5*l.* for every day afterwards during which such copy shall be not so kept or deposited.

CLXVII. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

|                        |   | 153. Act may be amended this session.  |

By this Act,

After reciting that it is expedient to comprise in one general Act sundry provisions usually introduced into Acts of Parliament relative to the acquisition of lands required for undertakings or works of a public nature, and to the compensation to be made for the same, and that as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in each of the several Acts relating to such undertakings as for insuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves:—

It is Enacted,

I. That this Act shall apply to every undertaking authorized by any Act which shall hereafter be passed, and which shall authorize the purchase or taking of lands for such undertaking, and this Act shall be incorporated with such Act; and all the clauses and provisions of this Act, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by any such Act, shall apply to the undertaking authorized thereby, so far as the same shall be applicable to such undertaking, and shall, as well as the clauses and provisions of every other Act which shall be incorporated with such Act, form part of such Act, and be construed together therewith, as forming one Act.

II. And with respect to the construction of this Act and of Acts to be incorporated therewith,—it is enacted as follows:—The expression “the special Act,” used in this Act, shall be construed to mean any Act which shall be hereafter passed which shall authorize the taking of lands for the undertaking to which the same relates, and with which this Act shall be so incorporated as aforesaid; and the word “prescribed,” used in this Act in reference to any matter herein stated, shall be construed to refer to such matter as the same shall be prescribed or provided for in the special Act, and the sentence in which such word shall occur shall be construed as if, instead of the word “prescribed,” the expression “prescribed for that purpose in the special Act” had been used; and the expression “the works” or “the undertaking” shall mean the works or undertaking, of whatever nature, which shall by the special Act be authorized to be executed; and the expression “the promoters of the undertaking” shall mean the parties, whether company, undertakers, commissioners, trustees, corporations, or private persons, by the special Act empowered to execute such works or undertaking.

III. The following words and expressions, both in this and the special Act, shall have the several meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something either in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; (that is to say,)

Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number, and words importing the plural number only shall include the singular number:

Words importing the masculine gender only shall include females:

The word “Lands” shall extend to messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments of any tenure:

The word “Lease” shall include an agreement for a lease:

The word “Month” shall mean calendar month:

The expression “Superior Courts” shall mean Her Majesty’s superior courts of record at Westminster or Dublin, as the case may require:

The word “Oath” shall include affirmation in the case of Quakers, or other declaration lawfully substituted for an oath in the case of any other persons exempted by law from the necessity of taking an oath:

The word “County” shall include any riding or other like division of a county, and shall also include county of a city or county of a town:

The word “Sheriff” shall include under-sheriff, or other legally competent deputy; and where any matter in relation to lands is required to be done by any sheriff, or by any clerk of the peace, the expression “the Sheriff” or the expression “the Clerk of the Peace,” shall in such case be construed to mean the sheriff or the clerk of the peace of the county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or place where such lands shall be situate; and if the lands in question, being the property of one and the same party, be situate not wholly in one county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or place, the same expression shall be construed to mean the sheriff or clerk of the peace of any county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or place where any part of such lands shall be situate:

The word “Justices” shall mean Justices of the Peace acting for the county, city, liberty, cinque port, or place where the matter requiring the cognizance of any such Justice shall arise, and who shall not be interested in the matter; and where such matter shall arise in respect of lands being the property of one and the same party, situate not wholly in any one county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or place, the same shall mean a Justice acting for the county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or place where any part of such lands shall be situate, and who shall not be interested in such matter; and where any matter shall be authorized or required to be done by two Justices, the expression "Two Justices" shall be understood to mean two Justices assembled and acting together:

Where under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any notice shall be required to be given to the owner of any lands, or where any act shall be authorized or required to be done with the consent of any such owner, the word "Owner" shall be understood to mean any person or corporation who, under the provisions of this or the special Act, would be enabled to sell and convey lands to the promoters of the undertaking:

The expression "the Bank" shall mean the Bank of England where the same shall relate to monies to be paid or deposited in respect of lands situate in England, and shall mean the Bank of Ireland where the same shall relate to monies to be paid or deposited in respect of lands situate in Ireland.

IV. That in citing this Act in other Acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845."

And after reciting that it may be convenient in some cases to incorporate with Acts of Parliament hereafter to be passed some portion only of the provisions of this Act:—

It is Enacted,

v. That for the purpose of making any such incorporation, it shall be sufficient in any such Act to enact that the clauses of this Act with respect to the matter so proposed to be incorporated (describing such matter as it is described in this Act in the words introductory to the enactment with respect to such matter,) shall be incorporated with such Act, and thereupon all the clauses and provisions of this Act with respect to the matter so incorporated shall, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by such Act, form part of such Act, and such Act shall be construed as if the substance of such clauses and provisions were set forth therein with reference to the matter to which such Act shall relate.

vi. And with respect to the purchase of lands by agreement,—it is enacted as follows: Subject to the provisions of this and the special Act it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to agree with the owners of any lands by the special Act authorized to be taken, and which shall be required for the purposes of such Act, and with all parties having any estate or interest in such lands, or by this or the special Act enabled to sell and convey the same, for the absolute purchase, for a consideration in money, of any such lands, or such parts thereof as they shall think proper, and of all estates and interests in such lands of what kind soever.

vii. It shall be lawful for all parties, being seised, possessed of, or entitled to any such lands, or any estate or interest therein, to sell and convey or release the same to the promoters of the undertaking, and to enter into all necessary agreements for that purpose; and particularly it shall be lawful for all or any of the following parties so seised, possessed, or entitled as aforesaid to sell, convey, or release; (that is to say,) all corporations, tenants in tail or for life, married women seised in their own right or entitled to dower, guardians, committees of lunatics and idiots, trustees or feoffees in trust for charitable or other purposes, executors and administrators, and all parties for the time being entitled to the receipt of the rents and profits of any such lands in possession or subject to any estate in dower, or to any lease for life, or for lives and years, or for years, or any less interest; and the power so to sell and convey or release as aforesaid may lawfully be exercised by all such parties, other than married women entitled to dower, or lessees for life, or for lives and years, or for years, or for any less interest, not only on behalf of themselves and their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and successors, but also for and on behalf of every person entitled in reversion, remainder, or expectancy after them, or in defeasance of the estates of such parties, and as to such married women, whether they be of full age or not, as if they were sole and of full age, and as to such guardians, on behalf of their wards, and as to such committees, on behalf of the lunatics and idiots of whom they are the committees, respectively, and that to the same extent as such wives, wards, lunatics and idiots respectively could have exercised the same power under the authority of this or the special Act if they had respectively been under no disability, and as to such trustees, executors, and administrators, on behalf of their cestuique trusts, whether infants, issue unborn, lunatics, femmes covert, or other persons, and that to the same extent as such cestuique trusts respectively could have exercised the same powers under the authority of this and the special Act if they had respectively been under no disability.

viii. The power hereinafter given to enfranchise copyhold lands, as well as every other power required to be exercised by the lord of any manor pursuant to the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, and the power to release lands from any rent, charge, or incumbrance, and to agree for the apportionment of any such rent, charge, or incumbrance, shall extend to and may lawfully be exercised by every party hereinbefore enabled to sell and convey or release lands to the promoters of the undertaking.

ix. The purchase money or compensation to be paid for any lands to be purchased or taken from any party under any disability or incapacity, and not having power to sell or convey such lands except under the provisions of this or the special Act, and the compensation to be paid for any permanent damage or injury to any such lands, shall not, except where the same shall have been determined by the verdict of a jury, or by arbitration, or by the valuation of a surveyor appointed by two Justices under the provision hereinafter contained, be less than shall be determined by the valuation of two able practical surveyors, one of whom shall be nominated by the promoters of the undertaking, and the other by the other party, and if such two surveyors cannot agree in the valuation, then by such third surveyor as any two Justices shall upon application of either party, after notice to the other party, for that purpose nominate; and each of such two surveyors, if they agree, or if not then the surveyor nominated by the said Justices, shall annex to the valuation a declaration in writing, subscribed by them or him, of the correctness thereof; and all such purchase money or compensation shall be deposited in the Bank for the benefit of the parties interested, in manner hereinafter mentioned.

x. It shall be lawful for any person seised in fee of, or entitled to dispose of absolutely for his own benefit, any lands authorized to be purchased for the purposes of the special Act to sell and convey such lands or any part thereof unto the promoters of the undertaking, in consideration of an annual rent charge payable by the promoters of the undertaking, but, except as aforesaid, the consideration to be paid for the purchase of any such lands, or for any damage done thereto, shall be in a gross sum.

XI. The yearly rents reserved by any such conveyance shall be charged on the tolls or rates, if any, payable under the special Act, and shall be otherwise secured in such manner as shall be agreed between the parties, and shall be paid by the promoters of the undertaking as such rents become payable; and if at any time any such rents be not paid within thirty days after they so become payable, and after demand thereof in writing, the person to whom any such rent shall be payable may either recover the same from the promoters of the undertaking, with costs of suit, by action of debt in any of the superior courts, or it shall be lawful for him to levy the same by distress of the goods and chattels of the promoters of the undertaking.

XII. In case the promoters of the undertaking shall be empowered by the special Act to purchase lands for extraordinary purposes, it shall be lawful for all parties who, under the provisions hereinbefore contained, would be enabled to sell and convey lands, to sell and convey the lands so authorized to be purchased for extraordinary purposes.

XIII. It shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to sell the lands which they shall have so acquired for extraordinary purposes, or any part thereof, in such manner, and for such considerations, and to such persons, as the promoters of the undertaking may think fit, and again to purchase other lands for the like purposes, and afterwards sell the same, and so from time to time; but the total quantity of land to be held at any one time by the promoters of the undertaking, for the purposes aforesaid, shall not exceed the prescribed quantity.

XIV. The promoters of the undertaking shall not, by virtue of the power to purchase land for extraordinary purposes, purchase more than the prescribed quantity from any party under legal disability, or who would not be able to sell and convey such lands except under the powers of this and the special Act; and if the promoters of the undertaking purchase the said quantity of land from any party under such legal disability, and afterwards sell the whole or any part of the land so purchased, it shall not be lawful for any party being under legal disability to sell to the promoters of the undertaking any other lands in lieu of the land so sold or disposed of by them.

XV. Nothing in this or the special Act contained shall enable any municipal corporation to sell for the purposes of the special Act, without the approbation of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or any three of them, any lands which they could not have sold without such approbation before the passing of the special Act, other than such lands as the company are by the powers of this or the special Act empowered to purchase or take compulsorily.

XVI. And with respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement,—it is enacted as follows: Where the undertaking is intended to be carried into effect by means of a capital to be subscribed by the promoters of the undertaking, the whole of the capital or estimated sum for defraying the expenses of the undertaking shall be subscribed under contract binding the parties thereto, their heirs, executors, and administrators, for the payment of the several sums by them respectively subscribed, before it shall be lawful to put in force any of the powers of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, in relation to the compulsory taking of land for the purposes of the undertaking.

XVII. A certificate under the hands of two Justices, certifying that the whole of the prescribed sum has been subscribed, shall be sufficient evidence thereof, and on the application of the promoters of the undertaking, and the production of such evidence as such Justices think proper and sufficient, such Justices shall grant such certificate accordingly.

XVIII. When the promoters of the undertaking shall require to purchase or take any of the lands which by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, they are authorized to purchase or take, they shall give notice thereof to all the parties interested in such lands, or to the parties enabled by this Act to sell and convey or release the same, or such of the said parties as shall, after diligent inquiry, be known to the promoters of the undertaking, and by such notice shall demand from such parties the particulars of their estate and interest in such lands, and of the claims made by them in respect thereof; and every such notice shall state the particulars of the lands so required, and that the promoters of the undertaking are willing to treat for the purchase thereof, and as to the compensation to be made to all parties for the damage that may be sustained by them by reason of the execution of the works.

XIX. All notices required to be served by the promoters of the undertaking upon the parties interested in or entitled to sell any such lands shall either be served personally on such parties, or left at their last usual place of abode, if any such can after diligent inquiry be found, and in case any such parties shall be absent from the United Kingdom, or cannot be found after diligent inquiry, shall also be left with the occupier of such lands, or, if there be no such occupier, shall be affixed upon some conspicuous part of such lands.

XX. If any such party be a corporation aggregate such notice shall be left at the principal office of business of such corporation, or if no such office can after diligent inquiry be found, shall be served on some principal member, if any, of such corporation, and such notice shall also be left with the occupier of such lands, or, if there be no such occupier, shall be affixed upon some conspicuous part of such lands.

XXI. If, for twenty-one days after the service of such notice, any such party shall fail to state the particulars of his claim in respect of any such land, or to treat with the promoters of the undertaking in respect thereof, or if such party and the promoters of the undertaking shall not agree as to the amount of the compensation to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking for the interest in such lands belonging to such party, or which he is by this or the special Act enabled to sell, or for any damage that may be sustained by him by reason of the execution of the works, the amount of such compensation shall be settled in the manner hereinafter provided for settling cases of disputed compensation.

XXII. If no agreement be come to between the promoters of the undertaking and the owners of or parties by this Act enabled to sell and convey or release any lands taken or required for or injuriously affected by the execution of the undertaking, or any interest in such lands, as to the value of such lands or of any interest therein, or as to the compensation to be made in respect thereof, and if in any such case the compensation claimed shall not exceed 50*l*., the same shall be settled by two Justices.

XXIII. If the compensation claimed or offered in any such case shall exceed 50*l*., and if the party claiming compensation desire to have the same settled by arbitration, and signify such desire by notice in writing to the promoters of the undertaking, before they have issued their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury in respect of such lands, under the provisions hereinafter contained, stating in such notice the nature of the interest in respect of which such party claims compensation, and the amount of the compensation so claimed, the same shall be so settled accordingly; but unless the party claiming compensation shall as aforesaid signify his desire to have the question of such compensation settled by arbitration, or if when the matter shall have been referred to arbitration the arbitrators or their umpire shall for three months have failed to make their or his award, or if no final award shall be made, the question of such compensation shall be settled by the verdict of a jury, as hereinafter provided.

XXIV. It shall be lawful for any Justice, upon the application of either party with respect to any question of disputed compensation by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, authorized to be settled by two Justices, to summon the other party to appear before two Justices, at a time and place to be named in the summons, and upon the appearance of such parties, or in the absence of any of them, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such Justices to hear and determine such question, and for that purpose to examine such parties or any of them, and their witnesses, upon oath, and the costs of every such inquiry shall be in the discretion of such Justices, and they shall settle the amount thereof.

XXV. When any question of disputed compensation by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, authorized or required to be settled by arbitration, shall have arisen, then, unless both parties shall concur in the appointment of a single arbitrator, each party, on the request of the other party, shall nominate and appoint an arbitrator, to whom such dispute shall be referred; and every appointment of an arbitrator shall be made on the part of the promoters of the undertaking under the hands of the said promoters or any two of them, or of their secretary or clerk, and on the part of any other party under the hand of such party, or if such party be a corporation aggregate under the common seal of such corporation; and such appointment shall be delivered to the arbitrator, and shall be deemed a submission to arbitration on the part of the party by whom the same shall be made; and after any such appointment shall have been made neither party shall have power to revoke the same without the consent of the other, nor shall the death of either party operate as a revocation; and if for the space of fourteen days after any such dispute shall have arisen, and after a request in writing, in which shall be stated the matter so required to be referred to arbitration, shall have been served by the one party on the other party to appoint an arbitrator, such last-mentioned party fail to appoint such arbitrator, then upon such failure the party making the request, and having himself appointed an arbitrator, may appoint such arbitrator to act on behalf of both parties, and such arbitrator may proceed to hear and determine the matters which shall be in dispute, and in such case the award or determination of such single arbitrator shall be final.

XXVI. If, before the matters so referred shall be determined, any arbitrator appointed by either party die, or become incapable, the party by whom such arbitrator was appointed may nominate and appoint in writing some other person to act in his place, and if, for the space of seven days after notice in writing from the other party for that purpose, he fail to do so, the remaining or other arbitrator may proceed ex parte; and every arbitrator so to be substituted as aforesaid shall have the same powers and authorities as were vested in the former arbitrator at the time of such his death or disability as aforesaid.

XXVII. Where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed such arbitrators shall, before they enter upon the matters referred to them, nominate and appoint, by writing under their hands, an umpire to decide on any such matters on which they shall differ, or which shall be referred to him under the provisions of this or the special Act, and if such umpire shall die, or become incapable to act, they shall forthwith after such death or incapacity appoint another umpire in his place, and the decision of every such umpire on the matters so referred to him shall be final.

XXVIII. If in either of the cases aforesaid the said arbitrators shall refuse, or shall, for seven days after request of either party to such arbitration, neglect to appoint an umpire, the Board of Trade, in any case in which a railway company shall be one party to the arbitration, and two Justices in any other case, shall, on the application of either party to such arbitration, appoint an umpire, and the decision of such umpire on the matters on which the arbitrators shall differ, or which shall be referred to him under this or the special Act, shall be final.

XXIX. If, when a single arbitrator shall have been appointed, such arbitrator shall die or become incapable to act before he shall have made his award, the matters referred to him shall be determined by arbitration under the provisions of this or the special Act in the same manner as if such arbitrator had not been appointed.

XXX. If, where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, either of the arbitrators refuse or for seven days neglect to act the other arbitrator may proceed ex parte, and the decision of such other arbitrator shall be as effectual as if he had been the single arbitrator appointed by both parties.

XXXI. If, where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, and where neither of them shall refuse or neglect to act as aforesaid, such arbitrators shall fail to make their award within twenty-one days after the day on which the last of such arbitrators shall have been appointed, or within such extended time (if any,) as shall have been appointed for that purpose by both such arbitrators under their hands, the matters referred to them shall be determined by the umpire to be appointed as aforesaid.

XXXII. The said arbitrators or their umpire may call for the production of any documents in the possession or power of either party which they or he may think necessary for determining the question in dispute, and may examine the parties or their witnesses on oath, and administer the oaths necessary for that purpose.

XXXIII. Before any arbitrator or umpire shall enter into the consideration of any matters referred to him, he shall in the presence of a Justice make and subscribe the following declaration; that is to say,

'I A.B. do solemnly and sincerely declare, That I will faithfully and honestly, and to the best of my Skill and Ability, hear and determine the Matters referred to me under the Provisions of the Act [naming the special Act].' A.B.

'Made and subscribed in the Presence of'

And such declaration shall be annexed to the award when made; and if any arbitrator or umpire having made such declaration shall wilfully act contrary thereto he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

XXXIV. All the costs of any such arbitration, and incident thereto to be settled by the arbitrators, shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking, unless the arbitrators shall award the same or a less sum than shall have been offered by the promoters of the undertaking, in which case each party shall bear his own costs incident to the arbitration, and the costs of the arbitrators shall be borne by the parties in equal proportions.

XXXV. The arbitrators shall deliver their award in writing to the promoters of the undertaking, and the said promoters shall retain the same, and shall forthwith, on demand, at their own expense, furnish a copy thereof to the other party to the arbitration, and shall at all times, on demand, produce the said award, and allow the same to be inspected or examined by such party or any person appointed by him for that purpose.

XXXVI. The submission to any such arbitration may be made a rule of any of the superior courts, on the application of either of the parties.

XXXVII. No award made with respect to any question referred to arbitration under the provisions of this or the special Act shall be set aside for irregularity or error in matter of form.

XXXVIII. Before the promoters of the undertaking shall issue their warrant for summoning a jury for settling any case of disputed compensation they shall give not less than ten days' notice to the other party of their intention to cause such jury to be summoned, and in such notice the promoters of the undertaking shall state what sum of money they are willing to give for the interest in such lands sought to be purchased by them from such party, and for the damage to be sustained by him by the execution of the works.

XXXIX. In every case in which any such question of disputed compensation shall be required to be determined by the verdict of a jury, the promoters of the undertaking shall issue their warrant to the sheriff, requiring him to summon a jury for that purpose, and such warrant shall be under the common seal of the promoters of the undertaking if they be a corporation, or if they be not a corporation under the hands and seals of such promoters or any two of them; and if such sheriff be interested in the matter in dispute such application shall be made to some coroner of the county in which the lands in question, or some part thereof, shall be situate, and if all the coroners of such county be so interested, such application may be made to some person having filled the office of sheriff or coroner in such county, and who shall be then living there, and who shall not be interested in the matter in dispute; and with respect to the persons last mentioned preference shall be given to one who shall have most recently served either of the said offices; and every ex-sheriff, coroner, or ex-corer shall have power, if he think fit, to appoint a deputy or assessor.

XL. Throughout the enactments contained in this Act relating to the reference to a jury, where the term "Sheriff" is used, the provisions applicable thereto shall be held to apply to every coroner or other person lawfully acting in his place; and in every case in which any such warrant shall have been directed to any other person than the sheriff, such sheriff shall immediately on receiving notice of the delivery of the warrant, deliver over, on application for that purpose, to the person to whom the same shall have been directed, or to any person appointed by him to receive the same, the jurors book and special jurors list belonging to the county where the lands in question shall be situate.

XLI. Upon the receipt of such warrant the sheriff shall summon a jury of twenty-four indifferent persons, duly qualified to act as common jurymen in the superior courts, to meet at a convenient time and place to be appointed by him for that purpose, such time not being less than fourteen nor more than twenty-one days after the receipt of such warrant, and such place not being more than eight miles distant from the lands in question, unless by consent of the parties interested, and he shall forthwith give notice to the promoters of the works of the time and place so appointed by him.

XLII. Out of the jurors appearing upon such summons a jury of twelve persons shall be drawn by the sheriff, in such manner as juries for trials of issues joined in the superior courts are by law required to be drawn, and if a sufficient number of jurymen do not appear in obedience to such summons the sheriff shall return other indifferent men, duly qualified as aforesaid, of the bystanders, or others that can speedily be procured, to make up the jury to the number aforesaid; and all parties concerned may have their lawful challenges against any of the jurymen, but no such party shall challenge the array.

XLIII. The sheriff shall preside on the said inquiry, and the party claiming compensation shall be deemed the plaintiff, and shall have all such rights and privileges as the plaintiff is entitled to in the trial of actions at law; and if either party so request in writing, the sheriff shall summon before him any person considered necessary to be examined as a witness touching the matters in question, and on the like request the sheriff shall order the jury, or any six or more of them, to view the place or matter in controversy, in like manner as views may be had in the trial of actions in the superior courts.

XLIV. If the sheriff make default in any of the matters hereinbefore required to be done by him in relation to any such trial or inquiry, he shall forfeit 50*l.* for every such offence, and such penalty shall be recoverable by the promoters of the undertaking by action in any of the superior courts; and if any person summoned and returned upon any jury under this or the special Act, whether common or special, do not appear, or if appearing, he refuse to make oath, or in any other manner unlawfully neglect his duty, he shall, unless he shew reasonable excuse to the satisfaction of the sheriff, forfeit a sum not exceeding 10*l.*, and every such penalty payable by a sheriff or jurymen shall be applied in satisfaction of the costs of the inquiry, so far as the same will extend; and, in addition to the penalty hereby imposed, every such jurymen shall be subject to the same regulations, pains, and penalties as if such jury had been returned for the trial of an issue joined in any of the superior courts.

XLV. If any person duly summoned to give evidence upon any such inquiry, and to whom a tender of his reasonable expenses shall have been made, fail to appear at the time and place specified in the summons without sufficient cause, or if any person, whether summoned or not, who shall appear as a witness refuse to be examined on oath touching the subject-matter in question, every person so offending shall forfeit to the party aggrieved a sum not exceeding 10*l*.

XLVI. Not less than ten days' notice of the time and place of the inquiry shall be given in writing by the promoters of the undertaking to the other party.

XLVII. If the party claiming compensation shall not appear at the time appointed for the inquiry such inquiry shall not be further proceeded in, but the compensation to be paid shall be such as shall be ascertained by a surveyor appointed by two Justices in manner hereinafter provided.

XLVIII. Before the jury proceed to inquire of and assess the compensation or damage in respect of which their verdict is to be given they shall make oath that they will truly and faithfully inquire of and assess such compensation or damage, and the sheriff shall administer such oaths, as well as the oaths of all persons called upon to give evidence.

XLIX. Where such inquiry shall relate to the value of lands to be purchased, and also to compensation claimed for injury done or to be done to the lands held therewith, the jury shall deliver their verdict separately for the sum of money to be paid for the purchase of the lands required for the works, or of any interest therein belonging to the party with whom the question of disputed compensation shall have arisen, or which under the provisions herein contained, he is enabled to sell or convey, and for the sum of money to be paid by way of compensation for the damage, if any, to be sustained by the owner of the lands by reason of the severing of the lands taken from the other lands of such owner, or otherwise injuriously affecting such lands by the exercise of the powers of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith.

L. The sheriff before whom such inquiry shall be held shall give judgment for the purchase-money or compensation assessed by such jury, and the verdict and judgment shall be signed by the sheriff, and being so signed shall be kept by the clerk of the peace among the records of the General or Quarter Sessions of the county in which the lands or any part thereof shall be situate in respect of which such purchase-money or compensation shall have been awarded; and such verdicts and judgments shall be deemed records, and the same or true copies thereof shall be good evidence in all courts and elsewhere, and all persons may inspect the said verdicts and judgments, and may have copies thereof or extracts therefrom, on paying for each inspection thereof 1*s*., and for every one hundred words copied or extracted therefrom 6*d*., which copies or extracts the clerk of the peace is hereby required to make out and to sign and certify the same to be true copies.

LI. On every such inquiry before a jury, where the verdict of the jury shall be given for a greater sum than the sum previously offered by the promoters of the undertaking, all the costs of such inquiry shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking; but if the verdict of the jury be given for the same or a less sum than the sum previously offered by the promoters of the undertaking; or if the owner of the lands shall have failed to appear at the time and place appointed for the inquiry, having received due notice thereof, one-half of the costs of summoning, impanelling, and returning the jury, and of taking the inquiry and recording the verdict and judgment thereon, in case such verdict shall be taken, shall be defrayed by the owner of the lands, and the other half by the promoters of the undertaking, and each party shall bear his own costs, other than as aforesaid, incident to such inquiry.

LII. The costs of any such inquiry shall, in case of difference, be settled by one of the Masters of the Court of Queen's Bench of England or Ireland, according as the lands are situate, on the application of either party, and such costs shall include all reasonable costs, charges, and expenses incurred in summoning, impanelling, and returning the jury, taking the inquiry, the attendance of witnesses, the employment of counsel and attorneys, recording the verdict and judgment thereon, and otherwise incident to such inquiry.

LIII. If any such costs shall be payable by the promoters of the undertaking, and if within seven days after demand such costs be not paid to the party entitled to receive the same, they shall be recoverable by distress, and on application to any Justice he shall issue his warrant accordingly; and if any such costs shall be payable by the owner of the lands or of any interest therein, the same may be deducted and retained by the promoters of the undertaking, out of any money awarded by the jury to such owner, or determined by the valuation of a surveyor under the provision hereinafter contained; and the payment or deposit of the remainder, if any, of such money shall be deemed payment and satisfaction of the whole thereof, or if such costs shall exceed the amount of the money so awarded or determined, the excess shall be recoverable by distress, and on application to any Justice he shall issue his warrant accordingly.

LIV. If either party desire any such question of disputed compensation as aforesaid to be tried before a special jury, such question shall be so tried, provided that notice of such desire, if coming from the other party, be given to the promoters of the undertaking before they have issued their warrant to the sheriff; and for that purpose the promoters of the undertaking shall by their warrant to the sheriff require him to nominate a special jury for such trial; and thereupon the sheriff shall, as soon as conveniently may be after the receipt by him of such warrant, summon both the parties to appear before him, by themselves or their attorneys, at some convenient time and place appointed by him for the purpose of nominating a special jury (not being less than five nor more than eight days from the service of such summons); and at the place and time so appointed the sheriff shall proceed to nominate and strike a special jury, in the manner in which such juries shall be required by the laws for the time being in force to be nominated or struck by the proper officers of the superior courts, and the sheriff shall appoint a day, not later than the eighth day after striking of such jury, for the parties or their agents to appear before him to reduce the number of such jury, and thereof shall give four days' notice to the parties; and on the day so appointed the sheriff shall proceed to reduce the said special jury to the number of twenty, in the manner used and accustomed by the proper officers of the superior courts.

L.V. The special jury on such inquiry shall consist of twelve of the said twenty who shall first appear on the names being called over, the parties having their lawful challenges against any of the said jurymen; and if a full jury do not appear, and if after such challenges a full jury do not remain, then, upon the application of either party, the sheriff shall add to the list of such jury the names of any other disinterested persons qualified to act as special or common jurymen, who shall not have been previously struck off the aforesaid list, and who may then be attending the Court, or can speedily be procured, so as to complete such jury, all parties having their lawful challenges against such persons; and the sheriff shall proceed to the trial and adjudication of the matters in question by such jury, and such trial shall be attended in all respects with the like incidents and consequences, and the like penalties shall be applicable, as hereinbefore provided in the case of a trial by common jury.

LVI. Any other inquiry than that for the trial of which such special jury may have been struck and reduced as aforesaid may be tried by such jury, provided the parties thereto respectively shall give their consent to such trial.

LVII. No jurymen shall, without his consent, be summoned or required to attend any such proceeding as aforesaid more than once in any year.

LVIII. The purchase-money or compensation to be paid for any lands to be purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking from any party who, by reason of absence from the kingdom, is prevented from treating, or who cannot after diligent inquiry be found, or that any such party failed to appear on such inquiry before a jury as aforesaid, after due notice to him for that purpose, such Justices shall, by writing under their hands, nominate an able practical surveyor for determining such compensation as aforesaid, and such surveyor shall determine the same accordingly, and shall annex to his valuation as hereinafter mentioned.

LIX. Upon application by the promoters of the undertaking to two Justices, and upon such proof as shall be satisfactory to them that any such party is, by reason of absence from the kingdom, prevented from treating, or cannot after diligent inquiry be found, or that any such party failed to appear on such inquiry before a jury as aforesaid, after due notice to him for that purpose, such Justices shall, by writing under their hands, nominate an able practical surveyor for determining such compensation as aforesaid, and such surveyor shall determine the same accordingly, and shall annex to his valuation a declaration in writing subscribed by him of the correctness thereof.

LX. Before such surveyor shall enter upon the duty of making such valuation as aforesaid he shall, in the presence of such Justices, or one of them, make and subscribe the declaration following at the foot of such nomination; (that is to say),
'I A.B. do solemnly and sincerely declare, that I will faithfully, impartially, and honestly, according to the best of my Skill and Ability, execute the Duty of making the Valuation hereby referred to me.' A.B.

'Made and subscribed in the Presence of'

And if any surveyor shall corruptly make such declaration, or having made such declaration shall wilfully act contrary thereto, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

LXI. The said nomination and declaration shall be annexed to the valuation to be made by such surveyor, and shall be preserved together therewith by the promoters of the undertaking, and they shall at all times produce the said valuation and other documents, on demand, to the owner of the lands comprised in such valuation, and to all other parties interested therein.

LXII. All the expenses of and incident to every such valuation shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking.

LXIII. In estimating the purchase-money or compensation to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking, in any of the cases aforesaid, regard shall be had by the Justices, arbitrators, or surveyors, as the case may be, not only to the value of the land to be purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking, but also to the damage, if any, to be sustained by the owner of the lands by reason of the severing of the lands taken from the other lands of such owner, or otherwise injuriously affecting such other lands by the exercise of the powers of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith.

LXIV. When the compensation payable in respect of any lands, or any interest therein, shall have been ascertained by the valuation of a surveyor, and deposited in the Bank under the provisions herein contained, by reason that the owner of or party entitled to convey such lands or such interest therein as aforesaid could not be found or was absent from the kingdom, if such owner or party shall be dissatisfied with such valuation it shall be lawful for him, before he shall have applied to the Court of Chancery for payment or investment of the monies so deposited under the provisions herein contained, by notice in writing to the promoters of the undertaking, to require the question of such compensation to be submitted to arbitration, and thereupon the same shall be so submitted accordingly, in the same manner as in other cases of disputed compensation hereinbefore authorized or required to be submitted to arbitration.

LXV. The question to be submitted to the arbitrators in the case last aforesaid shall be, whether the said sum so deposited as aforesaid by the promoters of the undertaking was a sufficient sum, or whether any and what further sum ought to be paid or deposited by them.

LXVI. If the arbitrators shall award that a further sum ought to be paid or deposited by the promoters of the undertaking they shall pay or deposit, as the case may require, such further sum within fourteen days after the making of such award, and in default thereof the same may be enforced by attachment, or recovered with costs by action or suit in any of the superior courts.

LXVII. If the arbitrators shall determine that the sum so deposited was sufficient, the costs of and incident to such arbitration, to be determined by the arbitrators, shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators, but if the arbitrators shall determine that a further sum ought to be paid or deposited by the promoters of the undertaking, all the costs of and incident to the arbitration shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking.

LXVIII. If any party shall be entitled to any compensation in respect of any lands, or of any interest therein, which shall have been taken for or injuriously affected by the execution of the works, and for which the promoters of the undertaking shall not have made satisfaction under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, and if the compensation claimed in such case shall exceed the sum of 50*l*., such party may have the same settled either by arbitration or by the verdict of a jury, as he shall think fit; and if such party desire to have the same settled by arbitration, it shall be lawful for him to give notice in writing to the promoters of the undertaking of such his desire, stating in such notice the nature of the interest in such lands in respect of which he claims compensation, and the amount of the compensation so claimed therein; and unless the promoters of the undertaking be willing to pay the amount of compensation so claimed, and shall enter into a written agreement for that purpose within twenty-one days after the receipt of any such notice from any party so entitled, the same shall be settled by arbitration in the manner herein provided; or if the party so entitled as aforesaid desire to have such question of compensation settled by jury, it shall be lawful for him to give notice in writing of such his desire to the promoters of the undertaking, stating such particulars as aforesaid, and unless the promoters of the undertaking be willing to pay the amount of compensation so claimed, and enter into a written agreement for that purpose, they shall, within twenty-one days after the receipt of such notice, issue their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury for settling the same in the manner herein provided, and in default thereof they shall be liable to pay to the party so entitled as aforesaid the amount of compensation so claimed, and the same may be recovered by him, with costs, by action in any of the superior courts.

LXX. And with respect to the purchase-money or compensation coming to parties having limited interests, or prevented from treating, or not making title,—it is enacted as follows: If the purchase-money or compensation which shall be payable in respect of any lands, or any interest therein, purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking from any corporation, tenant for life or in tail, married woman seised in her own right or entitled to dower, guardian, committee of lunatic or idiot, trustee, executor or administrator, or person having a partial or qualified interest only in such lands, and not entitled to sell or convey the same except under the provisions of this or the special Act, or the compensation to be paid for any permanent damage to any such lands, amount to or exceed the sum of 200*l*. the same shall be paid into the Bank, in the name and with the privy of the Accountant General of the Court of Chancery in England if the same relate to lands in England or Wales, or the Accountant General of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland if the same relate to lands in Ireland, to be placed to the account there of such Accountant General, ex parte the promoters of the undertaking (describing them by their proper name), in the matter of the special Act (citing it), pursuant to the method prescribed by any Act for the time being in force for regulating monies paid into the said courts; and such monies shall remain so deposited until the same be applied to some one or more of the following purposes; (that is to say,)

In the purchase or redemption of the land tax, or the discharge of any debt or incumbrance affecting the land in respect of which such money shall have been paid, or affecting other lands settled therewith to the same or the like uses, trusts, or purposes; or

In the purchase of other lands to be conveyed, limited, and settled upon the like uses, trusts, and purposes, and in the same manner, as the lands in respect of which such money shall have been paid stood settled; or

If such money shall be paid in respect of any buildings taken under the authority of this or the special Act, or injured by the proximity of the works, in removing or replacing such buildings, or substituting others in their stead, in such manner as the Court of Chancery shall direct; or

In payment to any party becoming absolutely entitled to such money.

LXXI. Such money may be so applied as aforesaid upon an order of the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, made on the petition of the party who would have been entitled to the rents and profits of the lands in respect of which such money shall have been deposited; and until the money can be so applied it may, upon the like order, be invested by the said Accountant General in the purchase of 3*l*. per cent. Consolidated or 3*l*. per cent. reduced Bank annuities, or in government or real securities, and the interest, dividends, and annual proceeds thereof paid to the party who would for the time being have been entitled to the rents and profits of the lands.

LXXII. If such purchase-money or compensation shall not amount to the sum of 200*l*., and shall exceed the sum of 20*l*., the same shall either be paid into the Bank, and applied in the manner hereinbefore directed with respect to sums amounting to or exceeding 200*l*., or the same may lawfully be paid to two trustees, to be nominated by the parties entitled to the rents or profits of the lands in respect whereof the same shall be payable, such nomination to be signified by writing under the hands of the party so entitled; and in case of the coverture, infancy, lunacy, or other incapacity of the parties entitled to such monies, such nomination may lawfully be made by their respective husbands, guardians, committees, or trustees; but such last-mentioned application of the monies shall not be made unless the promoters of the undertaking approve thereof and of the trustees named for the purpose; and the money so paid to such trustees, and the produce arising therefrom, shall be by such trustees applied in the manner hereinbefore directed with respect to money paid into the Bank, but it shall not be necessary to obtain any order of the Court for that purpose.

LXXIII. If such money shall not exceed the sum of 20*l*., the same shall be paid to the parties entitled to the rents and profits of the lands in respect whereof the same shall be payable, for their own use and benefit, or in case of the coverture, infancy, idioty, lunacy, or other incapacity of any such parties, then such money shall be paid, for their use, to the respective husbands, guardians, committees, or trustees of such persons.

LXXIV. All sums of money exceeding 20*l*., which may be payable by the promoters of the undertaking in respect of the taking, using, or interfering with any lands under a contract or agreement with any person who shall not be entitled to dispose of such lands, or of the interest therein contracted to be sold by him, absolutely for his own benefit, shall be paid into the Bank or to trustees in manner aforesaid; and it shall not be lawful for any contracting party not entitled as aforesaid to retain to his own use any portion of the sums so agreed or contracted to be paid for or in respect of the taking, using, or interfering with any such lands, or in lieu of bridges, tunnels, or other accommodation works, or for assenting to or not opposing the passing of the Bill authorising the taking of such lands, but all such monies shall be deemed to have been contracted to be paid for and on account of the several parties interested in such lands, as well in possession as in remainder, reversion, or expectancy: Provided always, that it shall be in the discretion of the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, or the said trustees, as the case may be, to allot to any tenant for life, or for any other partial or qualified estate, for his own use, a portion of the sum so paid into the Bank, or to such trustees as aforesaid, as compensation for any injury, inconvenience, or annoyance which he may be considered to sustain, independently of the actual value of the lands to be taken, and of the damage occasioned to the lands held therewith, by reason of the taking of such lands and the making of the works.

LXXIV. Where any purchase-money or compensation paid into the Bank under the provisions of this or the special Act shall have been paid in respect of any lease for a life or lives or years, or for a life or lives and years, or any estate in lands less than the whole fee simple thereof, or of any reversion dependent on any such lease or estate, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, on the petition of any party interested in such money, to order that the same shall be laid out, invested, accumulated, and paid in such manner as the said Court may consider will give to the parties interested in such money the same benefit therefrom as they might lawfully have had from the lease, estate, or reversion in respect of which such money shall have been paid, or as near thereto as may be.

LXXV. Upon deposit in the Bank in manner hereinbefore provided of the purchase-money or compensation agreed or awarded to be paid in respect of any lands purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, the owner of such lands, including in such term all parties by this Act enabled to sell or convey lands, shall, when required so to do by the promoters of the undertaking, duly convey such lands to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct; and in default thereof, or if he fail to adduce a good title to such lands to their satisfaction, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed-poll under their common seal, if they be a corporation, or if they be not a corporation under the hands and seals of the promoters, or any two of them, containing a description of the lands in respect of which such default shall be made, and reciting the purchase or taking thereof, by the promoters of the undertaking, and the names of the parties from whom the same were purchased or taken, and the deposit made in respect thereof, and declaring the fact of such default having been made, and such deed-poll shall be stamped with the stamp duty which would have been payable upon a conveyance to the promoters of the undertaking of the lands described therein; and thereupon all the estate and interest in such lands of or capable of being sold and conveyed by the party between whom and the promoters of the undertaking such agreement shall have been come to, or as between whom and the promoters of the undertaking such purchase-money or compensation shall have been determined by a jury, or by arbitrators, or by a surveyor appointed by two Justices as herein provided, and shall have been deposited as aforesaid, shall vest absolutely in the promoters of the undertaking, and as against such parties, and all parties on behalf of whom they are hereinbefore enabled to sell and convey, the promoters of the undertaking shall be entitled to immediate possession of such lands.

LXXVI. If the owner of any such lands purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking, or of any interest therein, on tender of the purchase-money or compensation either agreed or awarded to be paid in respect thereof, refuse to accept the same, or neglect or fail to make out a title to such lands, or to the interest therein claimed by him, to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking, or if he refuse to convey or release such lands as directed by the promoters of the undertaking, or if any such owner be absent from the kingdom, or cannot after diligent inquiry be found, or fail to appear on the inquiry before a jury, as herein provided for, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to deposit the purchase-money or compensation payable in respect of such lands, or any interest therein, in the Bank, in the name and with the privy of the Accountant General of the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, to be placed, except in the cases herein otherwise provided for, to his account there, to the credit of the parties interested in such lands (describing them so far as the promoters of the undertaking can do), subject to the controul and disposition of the said Court.

LXXVII. Upon any such deposit of money as last aforesaid being made the cashier of the Bank shall give to the promoter of the undertaking, or to the party paying in such money by their direction, a receipt for such money, specifying therein for what and for whose use (described as aforesaid) the same shall have been received, and in respect of what purchase the same have been paid in; and it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed-poll under their common seal if they be a corporation, or if they be not a corporation under the hands and seals of the said promoters, or any two of them, containing a description of the lands in respect whereof such deposit shall have been made, and declaring the circumstances under which and the names of the parties to whose credit such deposit shall have been made, and such deed-poll shall be stamped with the stamp duty which would have been payable upon a conveyance to the promoters of the undertaking of the lands described therein; and thereupon all the estate and interest in such lands of the parties for whose use and in respect whereof such purchase-money or compensation shall have been deposited shall vest absolutely in the promoters of the undertaking, and as against such parties they shall be entitled to immediate possession of such lands.

LXXVIII. Upon the application by petition of any party making claim to the money so deposited as last aforesaid, or any part thereof, or to the lands in respect whereof the same shall have been so deposited, or any part of such lands, or any interest in the same, the said Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland may, in a summary way, as to such Court shall seem fit, order such money to be laid out or invested in the public funds, or may order distribution thereof, or payment of the dividends thereof, according to the respective estates, titles, or interests of the party making claim to such money or lands, or any part thereof, and may make such other order in the premises as to such Court shall seem fit.

LXXIX. If any question arise respecting the title to the lands in respect whereof such monies shall have been so paid deposited as aforesaid, the parties respectively in possession of such lands, as being the owners thereof, or in receipt of the rents of such lands, as being entitled thereto at the time of such lands being purchased or taken, shall be deemed to have been lawfully entitled to such lands, until the contrary be shewn to the satisfaction of the Court; and unless the contrary be shewn as aforesaid, the parties so in possession, and all parties claiming under them, or consistently with their possession, shall deemed entitled to the money so deposited, and to the dividends or interest of the annuities or securities purchased therewith, and the same shall be paid and applied accordingly.

LXXX. In all cases of monies deposited in the Bank under the provisions of this or the special Act, or an Act incorporated therewith, except where such monies shall have been so deposited by reason of the wilful refusal of any party entitled thereto to receive the same, or to convey or release the lands in respect whereof the same shall be payable, or by reason of the wilful neglect of any party to make out a good title to the land required, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland to order the costs of the following matters, including therein all reasonable charges and expenses incident thereto, to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking; (that is to say,) the costs of the purchase or taking of the lands, or which shall have been incurred in consequence thereof, other than such costs as are herein otherwise provided for, and the costs of the investment of such monies in government or real securities, and of the reinvestment thereof in the purchase of other lands, and also the costs of obtaining the proper orders for any of the purposes aforesaid, and of the orders for the payment of the dividends and interest of the securities upon which such monies shall be invested, and for the payment out of court of the principal of such monies, or of the securities whereon the same shall be invested, and of all proceedings relating thereto, except such as are occasioned by litigation between adverse claimants: Provided always, that the costs of one application only for reinvestment in land shall be allowed, unless it shall appear to the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland that it is for the benefit of the parties interested in the said monies that the same should be invested in the purchase of lands, in different sums and at different times, in which case it shall be lawful for the Court, if it think fit, to order the costs of any such investments to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking.

LXXXI. And with respect to the conveyances of lands,—it is enacted as follows: Conveyances of lands to be purchased under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, may be according to the forms in the Schedules (A.) and (B.) respectively to this Act annexed, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit, or by deed in any other form which the promoters of the undertaking may think fit; and all conveyances made according to the forms in the said Schedules or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit shall be effectual to vest the lands thereby conveyed in the promoters of the undertaking, and shall operate to merge all terms of years attendant by express declaration, or by construction of law, on the estate or interest so thereby conveyed, and to bar and to destroy all such estates tail, and all other estates, rights, titles, remainders, reversions, limitations, trusts, and interests whatsoever, of and in the lands comprised in such conveyances which shall have been purchased or compensated for by the consideration therein mentioned; but although terms of years be thereby merged, they shall in equity afford the same protection as if they had been kept on foot, and assigned to a trustee for the promoters of the undertaking to attend the reversion and inheritance.

LXXXII. The costs of all such conveyances shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking, and such costs shall include all charges and expenses incurred, on the part as well of the seller as of the purchaser, of all conveyances and assurances of any such lands, and of any outstanding terms or interests therein, and of deducing, evidencing, and verifying the title to such lands, terms, or interests, and of making out and furnishing such abstracts and attested copies as the promoters of the undertaking may require, and all other reasonable expenses incident to the investigation, deduction, and verification of such title.

LXXXIII. If the promoters of the undertaking and the party entitled to any such costs shall not agree as to the amount thereof, such costs shall be taxed by one of the taxing Masters of the Court of Chancery, or by a Master in Chancery in Ireland, upon an order of the same Court, to be obtained upon petition in a summary way by either of the parties; and the promoters of the undertaking shall pay what the said Master shall certify to be due in respect of such costs to the party entitled thereto, or in default thereof the same may be recovered in the same way as any other costs payable under an order of the said Court, or the same may be recovered by distress in the manner hereinbefore provided in other cases of costs; and the expense of taxing such costs shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking, unless upon such taxation one-sixth part of the amount of such costs shall be disallowed, in which case the costs of such taxation shall be borne by the party whose costs shall be so taxed, and the amount thereof shall be ascertained by the said Master, and deducted by him accordingly in his certificate of such taxation.

LXXXIV. And with respect to the entry upon lands by the promoters of the undertaking,—it is enacted as follows: The promoters of the undertaking shall not, except by consent of the owners and occupiers, enter upon any lands which shall be required to be purchased or permanently used for the purposes and under the powers of this or the special Act, until they shall either have paid to every party having any interest in such lands, or deposited in the Bank, in the manner herein mentioned, the purchase-money or compensation agreed or awarded to be paid to such parties respectively for their respective interests therein: Provided always, that for the purpose merely of surveying and taking levels of such lands, and of probing or boring to ascertain the nature of the soil, and of setting out the line of the works, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, after giving not less than three nor more than fourteen days' notice to the owners or occupiers thereof, to enter upon such lands without previous consent, making compensation for any damage thereby occasioned to the owners or occupiers thereof.

LXXXV. Provided also, that if the promoters of the undertaking shall be desirous of entering upon and using any such lands before an agreement shall have been come to or an award made, or verdict given for the purchase-money or compensation to be paid by them in respect of such lands, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to deposit in the Bank by way of security, as hereinafter mentioned, either the amount of purchase-money or compensation claimed by any party interested in or entitled to sell and convey such lands, and who shall not consent to such entry, or such a sum as shall, by a surveyor appointed by two Justices in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of parties who cannot be found, be determined to be the value of such lands, or of the interest therein which such party is entitled to or enabled to sell and convey, and also to give to such party a bond, under the common seal of the promoters if they be a corporation, or if they be not a corporation under the hands and seals of the said promoters, or any two of them, with two sufficient sureties to be approved of by two Justices in case the parties differ, in a penal sum equal to the sum so to be deposited, conditioned for payment to such party, or for deposit in the Bank for the benefit of the parties interested in such lands, as the case may require, under the provisions herein contained, of all such purchase-money or compensation, as may in manner hereinbefore provided be determined to be payable by the promoters of the undertaking in respect of the lands so entered upon, together with interest thereon, at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum, from the time of entering on such lands, until such purchase-money or compensation shall be paid to such party, or deposited in the Bank for the benefit of the parties interested in such lands, under the provisions herein contained; and upon such deposit by way of security being made as aforesaid, and such bond being delivered or tendered to such non-consenting party as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to enter upon and use such lands, without having first paid or deposited the purchase-money or compensation in other cases required to be paid or deposited by them before entering upon any lands to be taken by them under the provisions of this or the special Act.

LXXXVI. The money so to be deposited as last aforesaid shall be paid into the Bank in the name and with the privity of the Accountant General of the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, to be placed to his account there to the credit of the parties interested in or entitled to sell and convey the lands so to be entered upon, and who shall not have consented to such entry, subject to the controul and disposition of the said Court; and upon such deposit being made, the cashier of the Bank shall give to the promoters of the undertaking, or to the party paying in such money by their direction a receipt for such money, specifying therein for what purpose and to whose credit the same shall have been paid in.

LXXXVII. The money so deposited as last aforesaid shall remain in the Bank, by way of security to the parties whose lands shall so have been entered upon for the performance of the condition of the bond to be given by the promoters of the undertaking, as hereinbefore mentioned, and the same may, on the application by petition of the promoters of the undertaking, be ordered to be invested in bank annuities or government securities, and accumulated; and upon the condition of such bond being fully performed it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, upon a like application, to order the money so deposited, or the funds in which the same shall have been invested, together with the accumulation thereof, to be repaid or transferred to the promoters of the undertaking, or if such condition shall not be fully performed, it shall be lawful for the said Court to order the same to be applied in such manner as it shall think fit for the benefit of the parties for whose security the same shall so have been deposited.

LXXXVIII. If at any time the company be unable, by reason of the closing of the office of the Accountant General of the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, to obtain his authority in respect of the payment of any sum of money so authorized to be deposited in the Bank by way of security as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the company to pay into the Bank to the credit of such party or matter as the case may require (subject nevertheless to being dealt with as hereinafter provided, and not otherwise), such sum of money as the promoters of the undertaking shall, by some writing signed by their secretary or solicitors for the time being, addressed to the Governor and Company of the Bank in that behalf, request, and upon any such payment being made the cashier of the Bank shall give a certificate thereof; and in every such case, within ten days after the re-opening of the said Accountant General's office, the solicitor for the promoters of the undertaking shall there bespeak the direction for the payment of such sum into the name of the Accountant General, and upon production of such direction at the Bank of England the money so previously paid in shall be placed to the credit of the said Accountant General accordingly, and the receipt for the said payment be given to the party making the same in the usual way for the purpose of being filed at the report office.

LXXXIX. If the promoters of the undertaking or any of their contractors shall, except as aforesaid, wilfully enter upon and take possession of any lands which shall be required to be purchased or permanently used for the purposes of the special Act, without such consent as aforesaid, or without having made such payment for the benefit of the parties interested in the lands, or such deposit by way of security as aforesaid, the promoters of the undertaking shall forfeit to the party in possession of such lands the sum of 10*l.*, over and above the amount of any damage done to such lands by reason of such entry and taking possession as aforesaid, such penalty and damage respectively to be recovered before two Justices; and if the promoters of the undertaking or their contractors shall, after conviction in such penalty as aforesaid, continue in unlawful possession of any such lands, the promoters of the undertaking shall be liable to forfeit the sum of 2*5l.* for every day they or their contractors shall so remain in possession as aforesaid, such penalty to be recoverable by the party in possession of such lands, with costs, by action in any of the superior courts: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be held to subject the promoters of the undertaking to the payment of any such penalties as aforesaid, if they shall bond fide and without collusion have paid the compensation agreed or awarded to be paid in respect of the said lands to any person whom the promoters of the undertaking may have reasonably believed to be entitled thereto, or shall have deposited the same in the Bank for the benefit of the parties interested in the lands, or made such deposit by way of security in respect thereof as hereinbefore mentioned, although such person may not have been legally entitled thereto.

xc. On the trial of any action for any such penalty as aforesaid the decision of the Justices under the provision hereinbefore contained shall not be held conclusive as to the right of entry on any such lands by the promoters of the undertaking.

xc*i.* If in any case in which, according to the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, the promoters of the undertaking are authorized to enter upon and take possession of any lands required for the purposes of the undertaking, the owner or occupier of any such lands or any other person refuse to give up the possession thereof, or hinder the promoters of the undertaking from entering upon or taking possession of the same, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to issue their warrant to the sheriff to deliver possession of the same to the person appointed in such warrant to receive the same, and upon the receipt of such warrant the sheriff shall deliver possession of any such lands accordingly, and the costs accruing by reason of the issuing and execution of such warrant, to be settled by the sheriff, shall be paid by the person refusing to give possession, and the amount of such costs shall be deducted and retained by the promoters of the undertaking from the compensation, if any, then payable by them to such party, or if no such compensation be payable to such party, or if the same be less than the amount of such costs, then such costs, or the excess thereof beyond such compensation, if not paid on demand, shall be levied by distress, and upon application to any Justice for that purpose he shall issue his warrant accordingly.

xcii. That no party shall at any time be required to sell or convey to the promoters of the undertaking a part only of any house or other building or manufactory, if such party be willing and able to sell and convey the whole thereof.

xciii. And with respect to small portions of intersected land,—it is enacted as follows: If any lands not being situate in a town or built upon shall be so cut through and divided by the works as to leave, either on both sides or on one side thereof, a less quantity of land than half a statute acre, and if the owner of such small parcel of land require the promoters of the undertaking to purchase the same along with the other land required for the purposes of the special Act, the promoters of the undertaking shall purchase the same accordingly, unless the owner thereof have other land adjoining to that so left into which the same can be thrown, so as to be conveniently occupied therewith; and if such owner have any other land so adjoining, the promoters of the undertaking shall, if so required by the owner, at their own expense, throw the piece of land so left into such adjoining land, by removing the fences and levelling the sites thereof, and by soiling the same in a sufficient and workmanlike manner.

xciv. If any such land shall be so cut through and divided as to leave on either side of the works a piece of land of less extent than half a statute acre, or of less value than the expense of making a bridge, culvert, or such other communication between the land so divided as the promoters of the undertaking are, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, compellable to make, and if the owner of such lands have not other lands adjoining such piece of land, and require the promoters of the undertaking to make such communication, then the promoters of the undertaking may require such owner to sell to them such piece of land, and any dispute as to the value of such piece of land, or as to what would be the expense of making such communication, shall be ascertained as herein provided for cases of disputed compensation; and on the occasion of ascertaining the value of the land required to be taken for the purposes of the works, the jury or the arbitrators, as the case may be, shall, if required by either party, ascertain by their verdict or award the value of any such severed piece of land, and also what would be the expense of making such communication.

xcv. And with respect to copyhold lands,—it is enacted as follows: Every conveyance to the promoters of the undertaking, of any lands which shall be of copyhold or customary tenure, or of the nature thereof, shall be entered on the rolls of the manor of which the same shall be held or parcel; and on payment to the steward of such manor of such fees as would be due to him on the surrender of the same lands to the use of a purchaser thereof he shall make such enrolment; and every such conveyance, when so inrolled, shall have the like effect, in respect of such copyhold or customary lands, as if the same had been of freehold tenure, nevertheless, until such lands shall have been enfranchised by virtue of the powers hereinafter contained, they shall continue subject to the same fines, rents, heriots, and services as were theretofore payable and of right accustomed.

xcvi. Within three months after the enrolment of the conveyance of any such copyhold or customary lands, or within one month after the promoters of the undertaking shall enter upon and make use of the same for the purposes of the works, whichever shall first happen, or if more than one parcel of such lands holden of the same manor shall have been taken by them, then within one month after the last of such parcels shall have been so taken or entered on by them, the promoters of the undertaking shall procure the whole of the lands holden of such manor so taken by them to be enfranchised, and for that purpose shall apply to the lord of the manor whereof such lands are holden to enfranchise the same, and shall pay to him such compensation in respect thereof as shall be agreed upon between them and him, and if the parties fail to agree respecting the amount of the compensation to be paid for such enfranchisement the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation; and in estimating such compensation the loss in respect of the fines, heriots, and other services payable on death, descent, or alienation, or any other matters which would be lost by the vesting of such copyhold or customary lands in the promoters of the undertaking, or by the enfranchisement of the same, shall be allowed for.

xcvii. Upon payment or tender of the compensations so agreed upon or determined, or on deposit thereof in the Bank in any of the cases hereinbefore in that behalf provided, the lord of the manor whereof such copyhold or customary lands shall be holden shall enfranchise such lands, and the lands so enfranchised shall for ever thereafter be held in free and common socage; and in default of such enfranchisement by the lord of the manor, or if he fail to adduce a good title thereto to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking, it shall be lawful for them, if they think fit, to execute a deed poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them, and thereupon the lands in respect of the enfranchisement whereof such compensation shall have been deposited as aforesaid shall be deemed to be enfranchised, and shall be for ever thereafter held in free and common socage.

xcviii. If any such copyhold or customary lands be subject to any customary or other rent, and part only of the land subject to any such rent be required to be taken for the purposes of the special Act, the apportionment of such rent may be settled by agreement between the owner of the lands and the lord of the manor on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and if such apportionment be not so settled by agreement, then the same shall be settled by two Justices; and the enfranchisement of any copyhold or customary lands taken by virtue of this or the special Act, or the apportionment of such rents, shall not affect in other respects any custom by or under which any such copyhold or customary lands not taken for such purposes shall be held; and if any of the lands so required be released from any portion of the rents to which they were subject jointly with any other lands, such last-mentioned lands shall be charged with the remainder only of such rents; and with reference to any such apportioned rents, the lord of the manor shall have all the same rights and remedies over the lands to which such apportioned rent shall have been assigned or attributed as he had previously over the whole of the lands subject to such rents for the whole of such rents.

xcix. And with respect to any such lands being common or waste lands,—it is enacted as follows: The compensation in respect of the right in the soil of any lands subject to any rights of common shall be paid to the lord of the manor, in case he shall be entitled to the same, or to such party, other than the commoners, as shall be entitled to such right in the soil; and the compensation in respect of all other commonable and other rights in or over such lands, including therein any commonable or other rights to which the lord of the manor may be entitled, other than his right in the soil of such lands, shall be determined and paid and applied in manner hereinafter provided with respect to common lands the right in the soil of which shall belong to the commoners; and upon payment or deposit in the Bank of the compensation so determined all such commonable and other rights shall cease and be extinguished.

c. Upon payment or tender to the lord of the manor, or such other party as aforesaid, of the compensation which shall have been agreed upon or determined in respect of the right in the soil of any such lands, or on deposit thereof in the Bank in any of the cases hereinbefore in that behalf provided, such lord of the manor, or such other party as aforesaid, shall convey such lands to the promoters of the undertaking, and such conveyance shall have the effect of vesting such lands in the promoters of the undertaking, in like manner as if such lord of the manor, or such other party as aforesaid, had been seised in fee simple of such lands at the time of executing such conveyance; and in default of such conveyance it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them, and thereupon the lands in respect whereof such last-mentioned compensation shall have been deposited as aforesaid shall vest absolutely in the promoters of the undertaking, and they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof, subject nevertheless to the commonable and other rights theretofore affecting the same, until such rights shall have been extinguished by payment or deposit of the compensation for the same in manner hereinafter provided.

ci. The compensation to be paid with respect to any such lands, being common lands, or in the nature thereof, the right to the soil of which shall belong to the commoners, as well as the compensation to be paid for the commonable and other rights in or over common lands the right in the soil whereof shall not belong to the commoners, other than the compensation to the lord of the manor, or other party entitled to the soil thereof, in respect of his right in the soil thereof, shall be determined by agreement between the promoters of the undertaking and a committee of the parties entitled to commonable or other rights in such lands, to be appointed as next hereinafter mentioned.

cii. It shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to convene a meeting of the parties entitled to commonable or other rights over or in such lands to be held at some convenient place in the neighbourhood of the lands, for the purpose of their appointing a committee to treat with the promoters of the undertaking for the compensation to be paid for the extinction of such commonable or other rights; and every such meeting shall be called by public advertisement, to be inserted once at least in two consecutive weeks in some newspaper circulating in the county or in the respective counties and in the neighbourhood in which such lands shall be situate, the last of such insertions being not more than fourteen nor less than seven days prior to any such meeting; and notice of such meeting shall also, not less than seven days previous to the holding thereof, be affixed upon the door of the parish church where such meeting is intended to be held, or if there be no such church some other place in the neighbourhood to which notices are usually affixed; and if such lands be parcel or holden of a manor, a like notice shall be given to the lord of such manor.

ciii. It shall be lawful for the meeting so called to appoint a committee, not exceeding five in number, of the parties entitled to any such rights; and at such meeting the decision of the majority of the persons entitled to commonable rights present shall bind the minority and all absent parties.

civ. It shall be lawful for the committee so chosen to enter into an agreement with the promoters of the undertaking for the compensation to be paid for the extinction of such commonable and other rights, and all matters relating thereto, for and on behalf of themselves and all other parties interested therein; and all such parties shall be bound by such agreement; and it shall be lawful for such committee to receive the compensation so agreed to be paid, and the receipt of such committee, or of any three of them, for such compensation, shall be an effectual discharge for the same; and such compensation, when received, shall be apportioned by the committee among the several persons interested therein, according to their respective interests, but the promoters of the undertaking shall not be bound to see to the apportionment or to the application of such compensation, nor shall they be liable for the misapplication or non-application thereof.

cv. If upon such committee being appointed they shall fail to agree with the promoters of the undertaking as to the amount of the compensation to be paid as aforesaid, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation.

cvi. If, upon being duly convened by the promoters of the undertaking, no effectual meeting of the parties entitled to such commonable or other rights shall take place, or if, taking place, such meeting fail to appoint such committee, the amount of such compensation shall be determined by a surveyor, to be appointed by two Justices, as hereinbefore provided in the case of parties who cannot be found.

cvi. Upon payment or tender to such committee, or any three of them, or if there shall be no such committee then upon deposit in the Bank in the manner provided in the like case of the compensation which shall have been agreed upon or determined in respect of such commonable or other rights, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them, and thereupon the lands in respect of which such compensation shall have been so paid or deposited shall vest in the promoters of the undertaking, freed and discharged from all such commonable or other rights, and they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof; and it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, by an order to be made upon petition, to order payment of the money so deposited to a committee to be appointed as aforesaid, or to make such other order in respect thereto, for the benefit of the parties interested, as it shall think fit.

cvi. And with respect to lands subject to mortgage,—it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to purchase or redeem the interest of the mortgagee of any such lands which may be required for the purposes of the special Act, and that whether they shall have previously purchased the equity of redemption of such lands or not, and whether the mortgagee thereof be entitled thereto in his own right or in trust for any other party, and whether he be in possession of such lands by virtue of such mortgage or not, and whether such mortgage affect such lands solely, or jointly with any other lands not required for the purposes of the special Act, and in order thereto the promoters of the undertaking may pay or tender to such mortgagee the principal and interest due on such mortgage, together with his costs and charges, if any and also six months additional interest, and thereupon such mortgagee shall immediately convey his interest in the land comprised in such mortgage to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct, or the promoters of the undertaking may give notice in writing to such mortgagee that they will pay off the principal and interest due on such mortgage at the end of six months, computed from the day of giving such notice; and if they shall have given any such notice, or if the party entitled to the equity of redemption of any such lands shall have given six months' notice of his intention to redeem the same, then at the expiration of either of such notices, or at any intermediate period, upon payment or tender by the promoters of the undertaking to the mortgagee of the principal money due on such mortgage, and the interest which would become due at the end of six months from the time of giving either of such notices, together with his costs and expenses, if any, such mortgagee shall convey or release his interest in the lands comprised in such mortgage to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct.

CIX. If, in either of the cases aforesaid, upon such payment or tender, any mortgagee shall fail to convey or release his interest in such mortgage as directed by the promoters of the undertaking, or if he fail to adduce a good title thereto to their satisfaction, then it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to deposit in the Bank, in the manner provided by this Act in like cases, the principal and interest, together with the costs, if any, due on such mortgage, and also, if such payment be made before the expiration of six months' notice as aforesaid, such further interest as would at that time become due; and it shall be lawful for them, if they think fit, to execute a deed poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them; and thereupon, as well as upon such conveyance by the mortgagee, if any such be made, all the estate and interest of such mortgagee, and of all persons in trust for him, or for whom he may be a trustee, in such lands, shall vest in the promoters of the undertaking, and they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof in case such mortgagee were himself entitled to such possession.

CX. If any such mortgaged lands shall be of less value than the principal, interest, and costs secured thereon, the value of such lands, or the compensation to be made by the promoters of the undertaking in respect thereof, shall be settled by agreement between the mortgagee of such lands and the party entitled to the equity of redemption thereof on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and if the parties aforesaid fail to agree respecting the amount of such value or compensation, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation; and the amount of such value or compensation, being so agreed upon or determined, shall be paid by the promoters of the undertaking to the mortgagee in satisfaction of his mortgage debt so far as the same will extend, and upon payment or tender thereof the mortgagee shall convey or release all his interest in such mortgaged lands to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct.

CXI. If, upon such payment or tender as aforesaid being made, any such mortgagee fail so to convey his interest in such mortgage, or to adduce a good title thereto to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking, it shall be lawful for them to deposit the amount of such value or compensation in the Bank, in the manner provided by this Act in like cases, and every such payment or deposit shall be accepted by the mortgagee in satisfaction of his mortgage debt, so far as the same will extend, and shall be a full discharge of such mortgaged lands from all money due thereon; and it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them; and thereupon such lands, as to all such estate and interest as were then vested in the mortgagee, or any person in trust for him, shall become absolutely vested in the promoters of the undertaking, and they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof in case such mortgagee were himself entitled to such possession; nevertheless, all rights and remedies possessed by the mortgagee against the mortgagor, by virtue of any bond or covenant or other obligation, other than the right to such lands, shall remain in force in respect of so much of the mortgage debt as shall not have been satisfied by such payment or deposit.

CXII. If a part only of any such mortgaged lands be required for the purposes of the special Act, and if the part so required be of less value than the principal money, interest, and costs secured on such lands, and the mortgagee shall not consider the remaining part of such lands a sufficient security for the money charged thereon, or be not willing to release the part so required, then the value of such part, and also the compensation (if any) to be paid in respect of the severance thereof or otherwise, shall be settled by agreement between the mortgagee and the party entitled to the equity of redemption of such land on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other, and if the parties aforesaid fail to agree respecting the amount of such value or compensation, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation, and the amount of such value or compensation, being so agreed upon or determined, shall be paid by the promoters of the undertaking to such mortgagee in satisfaction of his mortgage debt, so far as the same will extend; and thereupon such mortgagee shall convey or release to them, or as they shall direct, all his interest in such mortgaged lands the value whereof shall have been so paid; and a memorandum of what shall have been so paid shall be indorsed on the deed creating such mortgage, and shall be signed by the mortgagee; and a copy of such memorandum shall at the same time (if required) be furnished by the promoters of the undertaking, at their expense, to the party entitled to the equity of redemption of the lands comprised in such mortgage deed.

CXIII. If, upon payment or tender to any such mortgagee of the amount of the value or compensation so agreed upon or determined, such mortgagee shall fail to convey or release to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct, his interest in the lands in respect of which such compensation shall so have been paid or tendered, or if he shall fail to adduce a good title thereto to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, to pay the amount of such value or compensation into the Bank, in the manner provided by this Act in the case of monies required to be deposited in such Bank, and such payment or deposit shall be accepted by such mortgagee in satisfaction of his mortgage debt, so far as the same will extend, and shall be a full discharge of the portion of the mortgaged lands so required from all money due thereon; and it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a deed poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them; and thereupon such lands shall become absolutely vested in the promoters of the undertaking, as to all such estate and interest as were then vested in the mortgagee, or any person in trust for him, and in case such mortgagee were himself entitled to such possession they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof; nevertheless, every such mortgagee shall have the same powers and remedies for recovering or compelling payment of the mortgage money, or the residue thereof (as the case may be), and the interest thereof respectively, upon and out of the residue of such mortgaged lands, or the portion thereof not required for the purposes of the special Act, as he would otherwise have had or been entitled to for recovering or compelling payment thereof upon or out of the whole of the lands originally comprised in such mortgage.

cxiv. Provided always, that in any of the cases hereinbefore provided with respect to lands subject to mortgage, if in the mortgage deed a time shall have been limited for payment of the principal money thereby secured, and under the provisions hereinbefore contained the mortgagee shall have been required to accept payment of his mortgage money, or of part thereof, at a time earlier than the time so limited, the promoters of the undertaking shall pay to such mortgagee, in addition to the sum which shall have been so paid off, all such costs and expenses as shall be incurred by such mortgagee in respect of or which shall be incidental to the re-investment of the sum so paid off, such costs in case of difference to be taxed and payment thereof enforced in the manner herein provided with respect to the costs of conveyances; and if the rate of interest secured by such mortgage be higher than at the time of the same being so paid off can reasonably be expected to be obtained on re-investing the same, regard being had to the then current rate of interest, such mortgagee shall be entitled to receive from the promoters of the undertaking, in addition to the principal and interest hereinbefore provided for, compensation in respect of the loss to be sustained by him by reason of his mortgage money being so prematurely paid off, the amount of such compensation to be ascertained, in case of difference, as in other cases of disputed compensation; and until payment or tender of such compensation as aforesaid the promoters of the undertaking shall not be entitled, as against such mortgagee, to possession of the mortgaged lands under the provision hereinbefore contained.

cxv. And with respect to lands charged with any rent service, rent-charge, or chief or other rent, or other payment or incumbrance not hereinbefore provided for,—it is enacted as follows: If any difference shall arise between the promoters of the undertaking and the party entitled to any such charge upon any lands required to be taken for the purposes of the special Act, respecting the consideration to be paid for the release of such lands therefrom, or from the portion thereof affecting the lands required for the purposes of the special Act, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation.

cxvi. If part only of the lands charged with any such rent service, rent-charge, chief or other rent, payment, or incumbrance, be required to be taken for the purposes of the special Act, the apportionment of any such charge may be settled by agreement between the party entitled to such charge and the owner of the lands on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and if such apportionment be not so settled by agreement the same shall be settled by two Justices; but if the remaining part of the lands so jointly subject be a sufficient security for such charge, then, with consent of the owner of the lands so jointly subject, it shall be lawful for the party entitled to such charge to release therefrom the lands required, on condition or in consideration of such other lands remaining exclusively subject to the whole thereof.

cxvii. Upon payment or tender of the compensation so agreed upon or determined to the party entitled to any such charge as aforesaid, such party shall execute to the promoters of the undertaking a release of such charge; and if he fail so to do, or if he fail to adduce a good title to such charge, to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking, it shall be lawful for them to deposit the amount of such compensation in the Bank in the manner hereinbefore provided in like cases, and also, if they think fit, to execute a deed poll, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them, and thereupon the rent service, rent-charge, chief or other rent, payment or incumbrance, or the portion thereof in respect whereof such compensation shall so have been paid, shall cease and be extinguished.

cxviii. If any such lands be so released from any such charge or incumbrance, or portion thereof, to which they were subject jointly with other lands, such last-mentioned lands shall alone be charged with the whole of such charge, or with the remainder thereof, as the case may be, and the party entitled to the charge shall have all the same rights and remedies over such last-mentioned lands, for the whole or for the remainder of the charge, as the case may be, as he had previously over the whole of the lands subject to such charge; and if upon any such charge or portion of charge being so released the deed or instrument creating or transferring such charge be tendered to the promoters of the undertaking for the purpose, they or two of them shall subscribe, or if they be a corporation shall affix their common seal to a memorandum of such release indorsed on such deed or instrument, declaring what part of the lands originally subject to such charge shall have been purchased by virtue of the special Act, and if the lands be released from part of such charge, what proportion of such charge shall have been released, and how much thereof continues payable, or if the lands so required shall have been released from the whole of such charge, then that the remaining lands are thenceforward to remain exclusively charged therewith; and such memorandum shall be made and executed at the expense of the promoters of the undertaking, and shall be evidence in all courts and else where of the facts therein stated, but not so as to exclude any other evidence of the same facts.

cxix. And with respect to lands subject to leases,—it is enacted as follows: If any lands shall be comprised in a lease for a term of years unexpired, part only of which lands shall be required for the purposes of the special Act, the rent payable in respect of the lands comprised in such lease shall be apportioned between the lands so required and the residue of such lands; and such apportionment may be settled by agreement between the lessor and lessee of such lands on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and if such apportionment be not so settled by agreement between the parties such apportionment shall be settled by two Justices; and after such apportionment the lessee of such lands shall, as to the future accruing rent, be liable only to so much of the rent as shall be so apportioned in respect of the lands not required for the purposes of the special Act; and as to the lands not so required, and as against the lessee, the lessor shall have all the same rights and remedies for the recovery of such portion of rent as previously to such apportionment he had for the recovery of the whole rent reserved by such lease; and all the covenants, conditions, and agreements of such lease, except as to the amount of rent to be paid, shall remain in force with regard to that part of the land which shall not be required for the purposes of the special Act, in the same manner as they would have done in case such part only of the land had been included in the lease.

CXL. Every such lessee as last aforesaid shall be entitled to receive from the promoters of the undertaking compensation for the damage done to him in his tenancy by reason of the severance of the lands required from those not required, or otherwise by reason of the execution of the works.

CXLI. If any such lands shall be in the possession of any person having no greater interest therein than as tenant for a year or from year to year, and if such person be required to give up possession of any lands so occupied by him before the expiration of his term or interest therein, he shall be entitled to compensation for the value of his unexpired term or interest in such lands, and for any just allowance which ought to be made to him by an in-coming tenant, and for any loss or injury he may sustain, or if a part only of such lands be required, compensation for the damage done to him in his tenancy by severing the lands held by him, or otherwise injuriously affecting the same; and the amount of such compensation shall be determined by two Justices, in case the parties differ about the same; and upon payment or tender of the amount of such compensation all such persons shall respectively deliver up to the promoters of the undertaking, or to the person appointed by them to take possession thereof, any such lands in their possession required for the purposes of the special Act.

CXLII. If any party, having a greater interest than as tenant at will, claim compensation in respect of any unexpired term or interest under any lease or grant of any such lands, the promoters of the undertaking may require such party to produce the lease or grant in respect of which such claim shall be made, or the best evidence thereof in his power; and if, after demand made in writing by the promoters of the undertaking, such lease or grant or such best evidence thereof, be not produced within twenty-one days, the party so claiming compensation shall be considered as a tenant holding only from year to year, and be entitled to compensation accordingly.

CXLIII. That the powers of the promoters of the undertaking for the compulsory purchase or taking of lands for the purposes of the special Act shall not be exercised after the expiration of the prescribed period, and if no period be prescribed not after the expiration of three years from the passing of the special Act.

CXLIV. And with respect to interests in lands which have by mistake been omitted to be purchased,—it is enacted as follows: If, at any time after the promoters of the undertaking shall have entered upon any lands which under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, they were authorized to purchase, and which shall be permanently required for the purposes of the special Act, any party shall appear to be entitled to any estate, right, or interest in or charge affecting such lands which the promoters of the undertaking shall through mistake or inadvertence have failed or omitted duly to purchase or to pay compensation for, then, whether the period allowed for the purchase of lands shall have expired or not, the promoters of the undertaking shall remain in the undisturbed possession of such lands, provided, within six months after notice of such estate, right, interest, or charge, in case the same shall not be disputed by the promoters of the undertaking, or in case the same shall be disputed then within six months after the right thereto shall have been finally established by law in favour of the party claiming the same, the promoters of the undertaking shall purchase or pay compensation for the same, and shall also pay to such party, or to any other party who may establish a right thereto, full compensation for the mesne profits or interest which would have accrued to such parties respectively in respect thereof during the interval between the entry of the promoters of the undertaking thereon and the time of the payment of such purchase-money or compensation by the promoters of the undertaking, so far as such mesne profits or interest may be recoverable in law or equity; and such purchase-money or compensation shall be agreed on or awarded and paid in like manner as according to the provisions of this Act the same respectively would have been agreed on or awarded and paid in case the promoters of the undertaking had purchased such estate, right, interest, or charge before their entering upon such land, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit.

CXLV. In estimating the compensation to be given for any such last-mentioned lands, or any estate or interest in the same, or for any mesne profits thereof, the jury, or arbitrator, or Justices, as the case may be, shall assess the same according to what they shall find to have been the value of such lands, estate or interest, and profits, at the time such lands were entered upon by the promoters of the undertaking, and without regard to any improvements or works made in the said lands by the promoters of the undertaking, and as though the works had not been constructed.

CXLVI. In addition to the said purchase-money, compensation, or satisfaction, and before the promoters of the undertaking shall become absolutely entitled to any such estate, interest, or charge, or to have the same merged or extinguished for their benefit, they shall, when the right to any such estate, interest, or charge shall have been disputed by the company, and determined in favour of the party claiming the same, pay the full costs and expenses of any proceedings at law or in equity for the determination or recovery of the same to the parties with whom any such litigation in respect thereof shall have taken place; and such costs and expenses shall, in case the same shall be disputed, be settled by the proper officer of the court in which such litigation took place.

CXLVII. And with respect to lands acquired by the promoters of the undertaking under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, but which shall not be required for the purposes thereof,—is enacted, as follows: Within the prescribed period, or if no period be prescribed within ten years after the expiration of the time limited by the special Act for the completion of the works, the promoters of the undertaking shall absolutely sell and dispose of all such superfluous lands, and apply the purchase-money arising from such sales to the purposes of the special Act; and in default thereof all such superfluous lands remaining unsold at the expiration of such period shall thereupon vest in and become the property of the owners of the lands adjoining thereto, in proportion to the extent of their lands respectively adjoining the same.

CXLVIII. Before the promoters of the undertaking dispose of any such superfluous lands they shall, unless such lands be situate within a town, or be lands built upon or used for building purposes, first offer to sell the same to the person then entitled to the lands (if any) from which the same were originally severed; or if such person refuse to purchase the same, or cannot after diligent inquiry be found, then the like offer shall be made to the person or to the several persons whose lands shall immediately adjoin the lands so proposed to be sold, such persons being capable of entering into a contract for the purchase of such lands; and where more than one such person shall be entitled to such right of pre-emption such offer shall be made to such persons in succession, one after another, in such order as the promoters of the undertaking shall think fit.

CXXIX. If any such persons be desirous of purchasing such lands, then within six weeks after such offer of sale they shall signify their desire in that behalf to the promoters of the undertaking, or if they decline such offer, or if for six weeks they neglect to signify their desire to purchase such lands, the right of pre-emption of every such person so declining or neglecting in respect of the lands included in such offer shall cease; and a declaration in writing made before a Justice by some person not interested in the matter in question, stating that such offer was made and was refused, or not accepted within six weeks from the time of making the same, or that the person or all the persons entitled to the right of pre-emption were out of the country, or could not after diligent inquiry be found, or were not capable of entering into a contract for the purchase of such lands, shall in all courts be sufficient evidence of the facts therein stated.

CXXX. If any person entitled to such pre-emption be desirous of purchasing any such lands, and such person and the promoters of the undertaking do not agree as to the price thereof, then such price shall be ascertained by arbitration, and the costs of such arbitration shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators.

CXXXI. Upon payment or tender to the promoters of the undertaking of the purchase-money so agreed upon or determined as aforesaid they shall convey such lands to the purchasers thereof by deed under the common seal of the promoters of the undertaking, if they be a corporation, or if not a corporation under the hands and seals of the promoters of the undertaking or any two of the directors or managers thereof acting by the authority of the body; and a deed so executed shall be effectual to vest the lands comprised therein in the purchaser of such lands for the estate which shall so have been purchased by him; and a receipt under such common seal, or under the hands of two of the directors or managers of the undertaking as aforesaid, shall be a sufficient discharge to the purchaser of any such lands for the purchase-money in such receipt expressed to be received.

CXXXII. In every conveyance of lands to be made by the promoters of the undertaking under this or the special Act the word "grant" shall operate as express covenants by the promoters of the undertaking, for themselves and their successors, or for themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, as the case may be, with the respective grantees therein named, and the successors, heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of such grantees, according to the quality or nature of such grants, and of the estate or interest therein expressed to be thereby conveyed, as follows, except so far as the same shall be restrained or limited by express words contained in any such conveyance; (that is to say,)

A covenant that, notwithstanding any act or default done by the promoters of the undertaking, they were at the time of the execution of such conveyance seised or possessed of the lands or premises thereby granted for an indefeasible estate of inheritance in fee simple, free from all incumbrances done or occasioned by them, or otherwise for such estate or interest as therein expressed to be thereby granted, free from incumbrances done or occasioned by them:

A covenant that the grantee of such lands, his heirs, successors, executors, administrators, and assigns, (as the case may be), shall quietly enjoy the same against the promoters of the undertaking, and their successors, and all other persons claiming under them, and be indemnified and saved harmless by the promoters of the undertaking and their successors from all incumbrances created by the promoters of the undertaking:

A covenant for further assurance of such lands, at the expense of such grantee, his heirs, successors, executors, administrators, or assigns (as the case may be,) by the promoters of the undertaking, or their successors, and all other persons claiming under them:

And all such grantees, and their several successors, heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns respectively, according to their respective quality or nature, and the estate or interest in such conveyance expressed to be conveyed, may in all actions brought by them assign breaches of covenants, as they might do if such covenants were expressly inserted in such conveyances.

CXXXIII. That if the promoters of the undertaking become possessed by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, of any lands charged with the land tax, or liable to be assessed to the poor's rate, they shall from time to time, until the works shall be completed and assessed to such land tax or poor's rate, be liable to make good the deficiency in the several assessments for land tax and poor's rate by reason of such lands having been taken or used for the purposes of the works, and such deficiency shall be computed according to the rental at which such lands, with any building thereon, were valued or rated at the time of the passing of the special Act; and on demand of such deficiency the promoters of the undertaking, or their treasurer, shall pay all such deficiencies to the collector of the said assessments respectively; nevertheless, if at any time the promoters of the undertaking think fit to redeem such land tax, they may do so in accordance with the powers in that behalf given by the Acts for the redemption of the land tax.

CXXXIV. That any summons or notice, or any writ or other proceeding at law or in equity, requiring to be served upon the promoters of the undertaking, may be served by the same being left at or transmitted through the post directed to the principal office of the promoters of the undertaking, or one of the principal offices where there shall be more than one, or being given or transmitted through the post directed to the secretary, or in case there be no secretary the solicitor of the said promoters.

CXXXV. That if any party shall have committed any irregularity, trespass, or other wrongful proceeding in the execution of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or by virtue of any power or authority thereby given, and if before action brought in respect thereof, such party make tender of sufficient amends to the party injured, such last-mentioned party shall not recover in any such action; and if no such tender shall have been made it shall be lawful for the defendant, by leave of the Court where such action shall be pending, at any time before issue joined, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit, and thereupon such proceedings shall be had as in other cases where defendants are allowed to pay money into court.

CXXVI. And with respect to the recovery of forfeitures, penalties, and costs,—it is enacted as follows: Every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special Act, or by any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before two Justices; and on complaint being made to any Justice he shall issue a summons requiring the party complained against to appear before two Justices at a time and place to be named in such summons; and every such summons shall be served on the party offending either in person or by leaving the same with some inmate at his usual place of abode; and upon the appearance of the party complained against, or in his absence, after proof of the due service of such summons, it shall be lawful for any two Justices to proceed to the hearing of the complaint, and that although no information in writing or in print shall have been exhibited before them; and upon proof of the offence, either by the confession of the party complained against, or upon the oath of one credible witness or more, it shall be lawful for such Justices to convict the offender, and upon such conviction to adjudge the offender to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, as well as such costs attending the conviction as such Justices shall think fit.

CXXVII. If, forthwith upon any such adjudication as aforesaid, the amount of the penalty or forfeiture, and of such costs as aforesaid, be not paid, the amount of such penalty, and costs shall be levied by distress, and such Justices or either of them shall issue their or his warrant of distress accordingly.

CXXVIII. Where in this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any sum of money, whether in the nature of penalty, costs, or otherwise, is directed to be levied by distress, such sum of money shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party liable to pay the same; and the overplus arising from the sale of such goods and chattels, after satisfying such sum of money and the expenses of the distress and sale, shall be returned, on demand, to the party whose goods shall have been distrained.

CXXIX. The Justices by whom any such penalty or forfeiture shall be imposed may, where the application thereof is not otherwise provided for, award not more than one-half thereof to the informer, and shall award the remainder to the overseers of the poor of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed to be applied in aid of the poor's rate of such parish, or if the place wherein the offence shall have been committed, shall be extra-parochial then such Justices shall direct such remainder to be applied in aid of the poor's rate of such extra-parochial place, or if there shall not be any poor's rate therein in aid of the poor's rate of any adjoining parish or district.

CXL. If any such sum shall be payable by the promoters of the undertaking, and if sufficient goods of the said promoters cannot be found whereon to levy the same, it may, if the amount thereof do not exceed 20*l.*, be recovered by distress of the goods of the treasurer of the said promoters, and the Justices aforesaid, or either of them, on application, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly; but no such distress shall issue against the goods of such treasurer unless seven days previous notice in writing, stating the amount so due, and demanding payment thereof, have been given to such treasurer or left at his residence; and if such treasurer pay any money under such distress as aforesaid he may retain the amount so paid by him, and all costs and expenses occasioned thereby, out of any money belonging to the promoters of the undertaking coming into his custody or controul, or he may sue them for the same.

CXLI. No distress levied by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be deemed unlawful, nor shall any party making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, warrant of distress, or other proceeding relating thereto, nor shall such party be deemed a trespasser ab initio on account of any irregularity afterwards committed by him, but all persons aggrieved by such defect or irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action upon the case.

CXLII. No person shall be liable to the payment of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, for any offence made cognizable before a Justice, unless the complaint respecting such offence shall have been made before such Justice within six months next after the commission of such offence.

CXLIII. It shall be lawful for any Justice to summon any person to appear before him as a witness in any matter in which such Justice shall have jurisdiction under the provisions of this or the special Act at a time and place mentioned in such summons, and to administer to him an oath to testify the truth in such matter; and if any person so summoned shall, without reasonable excuse, refuse or neglect to appear at the time and place appointed for that purpose, having been paid or tendered a reasonable sum for his expenses, or if any person appearing shall refuse to be examined upon oath or to give evidence before such Justice, every such person shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l.* for every such offence.

CXLIV. The Justices before whom any person shall be convicted of any offence against this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, may cause the conviction to be drawn up according to the form in the Schedule (C.) to this Act annexed.

CXLV. No proceeding in pursuance of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, nor shall the same be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of the superior courts.

CXLVI. If any party shall feel aggrieved by any determination or adjudication of any Justice with respect to any penalty or forfeiture under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, such party may appeal to the General Quarter Sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal shall have arisen; but no such appeal shall be entertained unless it be made within four months next after the making of such determination or adjudication, nor unless ten days notice in writing of such appeal, stating the nature and grounds thereof, be given to the party against whom the appeal shall be brought, nor unless the appellant forthwith after such notice enter into recognizances, with two sufficient sureties, before a Justice, conditioned duly to prosecute such appeal, and to abide the order of the Court thereon.

CXLVII. At the Quarter Sessions for which such notice shall be given the Court shall proceed to hear and determine the appeal in a summary way, or they may, if they think fit, adjourn it to the following sessions; and upon the hearing of such appeal the Court may, if they think fit, mitigate any penalty or forfeiture, or they may confirm or quash the adjudication, and order any money paid by the appellant, or levied by distress upon his goods, to be returned to him, and may also order such further satisfaction to be made to the party injured as they may judge reasonable; and they may make such order concerning the costs, both of the adjudication and of the appeal, as they may think reasonable.

CLXVIII. Provided and enacted, That notwithstanding anything herein or in the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, contained, every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special Act or any Act incorporated therewith, or by any bye-law in pursuance thereof, in respect of any offence which shall take place within the metropolitan police district, shall be recovered, enforced, accounted for, and, except where the application thereof is otherwise specially provided for, shall be paid to the receiver of the metropolitan police district, and shall be applied in the same manner as penalties or forfeitures, other than fines upon drunken persons, or upon constables for misconduct, or for assaults upon police constables, are directed to be recovered, enforced, accounted for, paid, and applied by an Act, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, intituled 'An Act for regulating the Police Courts in the Metropolis,' and every order or conviction of any of the police magistrates in respect of any such forfeiture or penalty shall be subject to the like appeal and upon the same terms as is provided in respect of any order or conviction of any of the said police magistrates by the said last-mentioned Act; and every magistrate by whom any order or conviction shall have been made shall have the same power of binding over the witnesses who shall have been examined, and such witnesses shall be entitled to the same allowance of expenses as he or they would have had or been entitled to in case the order, conviction, and appeal had been made in pursuance of the provisions of the said last-mentioned Act.

CLXIX. That any person who upon any examination upon oath under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall wilfully and corruptly give false evidence, shall be liable to the penalties of wilful and corrupt perjury.

CL. And with respect to the provision to be made for affording access to the special Act by all parties interested,—it is enacted as follows: The company shall, at all times after the expiration of six months after the passing of the special Act, keep in their principal office of business a copy of the special Act, printed by the printers to Her Majesty, or some of them; and where the undertaking shall be a railway, canal, or other like undertaking, the works of which shall not be confined to one town or place, shall also within the space of such six months deposit in the office of each of the clerks of the peace of the several counties into which the works shall extend a copy of such special Act so printed as aforesaid; and the said clerks of the peace shall receive, and they and the company respectively shall retain, the said copies of the special Act, and shall permit all persons interested to inspect the same, and make extracts or copies therefrom, in the like manner, and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided in the case of certain plans and sections by an Act, 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 83, intituled 'An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties and other Persons to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament.'

CLI. If the company shall fail to keep or deposit, as hereinbefore mentioned, any of the said copies of the special Act, they shall forfeit 20*l.* for every such offence, and also 5*l.* for every day afterwards during which such copy shall be not so kept or deposited.

CLII. That this Act shall not extend to Scotland.

CLIII. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in the present session of Parliament.

By this Act,

After reciting that it is expedient to comprise in one general Act sundry provisions usually introduced into Acts of Parliament relative to the acquisition of lands in Scotland required for undertakings or works of a public nature, and the compensation to be made for the same, and that as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in each of the several Acts relating to such undertakings as for insuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves:—

It is Enacted,

1. That this Act shall apply to every undertaking in Scotland authorized by any Act of Parliament which shall hereafter be passed, and which shall authorize the taking of lands for such undertaking, and this Act shall be incorporated with such Act; and all the provisions of this Act, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by any such Act, shall apply to the undertaking authorized thereby, so far as the same shall be applicable to such undertaking, and shall, as well as the clauses and provisions of every other Act which shall be incorporated with such Act, form part of such Act, and be construed together therewith as forming one Act.

II. And with respect to the construction of this Act, and other Acts to be incorporated therewith,—it is enacted as follows: The expression “the special Act” used in this Act shall be construed to mean any Act which shall be hereafter passed and which shall authorize the taking of lands for the undertaking to which the same relates, and with which this Act shall be so incorporated as aforesaid; and the word “prescribed” used in this Act, in reference to any matter herein stated, shall be construed to refer to such matter as the same shall be prescribed or provided for in the special Act; and the sentence in which such word shall occur shall be construed as if instead of the word “prescribed” the expression “prescribed for that purpose in the special Act” had been used; and the expression “the works” or “the undertaking” shall mean the works or undertaking, of whatever nature, which shall by the special Act be authorized to be executed; and the expression “the promoters of the undertaking” shall mean the parties, whether company, undertakers, commissioners, trustees, corporations, or private persons by the special Act empowered to execute such works or undertaking.

III. That the following words and expressions both in this and the special Act shall have the several meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something either in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; (that is to say),

Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number; and words importing the plural number only shall include the singular number:

Words importing the masculine gender only shall include females:

The word “Lands” shall extend to houses, lands, tenements, and heritages of any description or tenure:

The word “Lease” shall include a missive of lease:

The word “Month” shall mean calendar month:

The “Lord Ordinary” shall mean the lord ordinary of the Court of Session in Scotland officiating on the bills in time of vacation, or the junior lord ordinary, if in time of session, as the case may be:

The word “Oath” shall include affirmation in the case of Quakers, or other declaration or solemnity lawfully substituted for an oath in the case of any other persons exempted by law from the necessity of taking an oath:

The word “County” shall include any ward or other like division of a county:

The word “Sheriff” shall include the sheriff substitute:

The word “Justices” shall mean Justices of the Peace acting for the county, city, liberty, or place where the matter requiring the cognisance of any such Justice shall arise, and who shall not be interested in the matter; and where such matter shall arise in respect of lands, being the property of one and the same party, situate not wholly in any one county, city, liberty, or place, the same shall mean a Justice acting for the county, city, liberty, or place, where any part of such lands shall be situate, and who shall not be interested in such matter; and where any matter shall be authorized or required to be done by two Justices, the expression “two Justices” shall be understood to mean two or more Justices assembled and acting together:

Where, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any notice shall be required to be given to the owner of any lands, or where any Act shall be authorized or required to be done with the consent of any such owner, the word “Owner” shall be understood to mean any person or corporation, or trustees or others, who, under the provisions of this or the special Act, would be enabled to sell and convey lands to the promoters of the undertaking:

The expression “the Bank” shall mean any one of the incorporated or chartered banks in Scotland.

IV. That in citing this Act in other Acts of Parliament and in legal instruments it shall be sufficient to use the expression “The Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845.”

And after reciting that it may be convenient in some cases to incorporate with Acts of Parliament hereafter to be passed some portion only of the provisions of this Act:—

It is Enacted,

V. That for the purpose of making any such incorporation it shall be sufficient in any such Act to enact that the clauses of this Act, with respect to the matter so proposed to be incorporated (describing such matter as it is described in this Act in the words introductory to the enactment with respect to such matter) shall be incorporated with such Act; and thereupon all the clauses and provisions of this Act with respect to the matter so incorporated shall, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by such Act, form part of such Act, and such Act shall be construed as if the substance of such clauses and provisions were set forth therein with reference to the matter to which such Act shall relate.

VI. And with respect to the purchase of lands by agreement,—it is enacted as follows: Subject to the provisions of this and the special Act, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to agree with the owners of any lands by the special Act authorized to be taken, and which shall be required for the purposes of such Act, and with all parties having any right or interest in such lands, or by this or the special Act enabled to sell and convey the same, for the absolute purchase of any such lands, or such parts thereof as they shall think proper, and for the purchase of all rights and interests in such lands of what kind soever.

VII. It shall be lawful for all parties, being possessed of any lands, or any such right or interest therein, to contract for, sell, convey, and dispose of such lands, or of such right therein, to the promoters of the undertaking, and to enter into all necessary agreements for these purposes, and particularly it shall be lawful for the parties following so to do; (that is to say), all corporations, heirs of entail, life-renters, or persons holding any other partial or qualified estate or interest, married women seised in their own right or entitled to terce or dower, or any other right or interest, husbands, tutors, curators, and other guardians for infants, minors, lunatics, or idiots, fatuous or furious persons, or for persons under any other disability or incapacity, judicial factors, trustees or feoffees in trust for charitable or other purposes, executors, and administrators; and the power so to contract for, sell, convey, and dispose of as aforesaid may lawfully be exercised by all such parties, not only on behalf of themselves and their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and successors, but also for and on behalf of every person entitled in reversion or expectancy after them, and as to such married women as if they were sole, and as to such tutors, curators, guardians, judicial factors, and trustees, on behalf of those for whom they respectively act, whether infants, minors, those unborn, bankrupts, lunatics, idiots, fatuous and furious persons, married women, or other incapacitated persons, and that to the same extent as such infants, minors, bankrupts, lunatics, idiots, fatuous and furious persons, married women, and other incapacitated persons respectively could have exercised the same power under the authority of this and the special Act if they had respectively been under no disability.

VIII. The power hereinafter given to discharge any lands from feu duties or casualties of superiority, as well as every other power required to be exercised by any superior pursuant to the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, and the power to discharge lands from any rent, payment, charge, feu duties, ground annuals, or other real burdens or incumbrances, and to agree for the apportionment of any such rent, payment, charge, feu duties, ground annuals, or other real burdens and incumbrances, shall extend to and may lawfully be exercised by every party hereinbefore enabled to contract for, sell, dispose of, or convey lands or rights or interests therein to the company.

IX. The purchase-money or compensation to be paid for any lands, or any rights or interests therein, to be purchased or taken from any party under any disability or incapacity, and not having power to sell or convey such lands, or rights or interests therein, except under the provisions of this or the special Act, and the compensation to be paid for any permanent damage or injury to any such lands, shall not, except where the same shall have been determined by the sheriff, or by the verdict of a jury, or by arbitration, or by the valuation of a valuator appointed by the sheriff under the provision hereinafter contained, be less than shall be determined by the valuation of two able practical valutors, one of whom shall be nominated by the promoters of the undertaking, and the other by the other party, and if such two valutors cannot agree in the valuation then by such third valuator as the sheriff shall, upon application of either party, after notice to the other party, for that purpose nominate; and each of such two valutors, if they agree, or if not, then the valuator nominated by the said sheriff, shall annex to the valuation a declaration in writing, subscribed by them or him, of the correctness thereof; and all such purchase-money or compensation shall be deposited in the Bank, for the benefit of the parties interested, in manner hereinafter mentioned.

X. It shall be lawful for all parties entitled to dispose of absolutely any lands authorized to be purchased for the purposes of the special Act to convey such lands or any part thereof unto the promoters of the undertaking in consideration of an annual feu duty or ground annual payable by the promoters of the undertaking.

XI. The feu duties or ground annuals stipulated by any such conveyance shall be charged on the tolls or rates, if any, payable under the special Act, and shall be otherwise secured in such manner as shall be agreed between the parties, and shall be paid by the promoters of the undertaking as such feu duties or ground annuals become payable, and if at any time the same be not paid within thirty days after they so become payable, and after demand thereof in writing, the person to whom any such feu duties or ground annuals shall be payable may either recover the same from the promoters of the undertaking, with expenses of suit, by action in any competent court, or it shall be lawful for him to levy the same by poiding and sale of the goods and effects of the promoters of the undertaking.

XII. In case the promoters of the undertaking shall be empowered by the special Act to purchase lands for extraordinary purposes, it shall be lawful for all parties who, under the provisions hereinbefore contained, would be enabled to sell, feu, and convey lands, to sell, feu, and convey the lands so authorized to be purchased for extraordinary purposes.

XIII. It shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to sell the lands which they shall have so acquired for extraordinary purposes, or any part thereof, in such manner and for such considerations and to such persons as the promoters of the undertaking may think fit, and again to purchase other lands for the like purposes, and afterwards sell the same, and so from time to time, but the total quantity of land to be held at any one time by the promoters of the undertaking for the purposes aforesaid shall not exceed the prescribed quantity.

XIV. The promoters of the undertaking shall not, by virtue of the power to purchase land for extraordinary purposes, purchase or acquire more than the prescribed quantity from any party under legal disability, or who would not be able to sell or convey such lands, except under the powers of this and the special Act; and if the promoters of the undertaking purchase or acquire the said quantity of land from any party under such legal disability, and afterwards sell or dispose of the whole or any part of the land so purchased, it shall not be lawful for any party, being under legal disability, to sell or convey to any promoters of the undertaking any other lands in lieu of the land so sold or disposed of by them.

XV. Where the undertaking is intended to be carried into effect by means of a capital to be subscribed by the promoters of the undertaking, the whole of the capital of the company or estimated sum for defraying the expenses of the undertaking shall be subscribed under contract binding the parties thereto, their heirs, executors, and administrators, for the payment of the several sums by them respectively subscribed before it shall be lawful to put in force any of the powers of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, in relation to the compulsory taking of land for the purposes of the undertaking.

XVI. A certificate, under the hands of the sheriff, certifying that the whole of the prescribed sum has been subscribed, shall be sufficient evidence thereof; and on the application of the promoters of the undertaking, and the production of such evidence as such sheriff thinks proper and sufficient, such sheriff shall grant such certificate accordingly.

XVII. And with respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement,—it is enacted as follows: When the promoters of the undertaking shall require to purchase any of the lands which by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, they are authorized to purchase or take, they shall give notice thereof to all the parties interested in such lands, or to the parties enabled by this or the special Act to sell and convey the same, or their rights and interests therein, or such of the said parties as shall, after diligent inquiry, be known to the promoters of the undertaking, and by such notice shall demand from such parties the particulars of their interest in such lands, and of the claims made by them in respect thereof; and every such notice shall state the particulars of the land so required, and that the promoters of the undertaking are willing to treat for the purchase thereof, and as to the compensation to be made to all parties for the damage that may be sustained by them by reason of the execution of the works.

XVIII. All notices required to be served by the promoters of the undertaking upon the parties interested in or entitled to sell any such lands shall either be served personally on such parties, or left at their last usual place of abode, if any such can, after diligent inquiry, be found; and in case any such parties shall be absent from the United Kingdom, or cannot be found after diligent inquiry, such notices when the same are to be given to an owner of lands shall be served on the factor or agent, if any, of such owner, and shall also be left with the occupier of such lands, or, if there be no such occupier, shall be affixed upon some conspicuous part of such lands.

XIX. If for twenty-one days after the service of such notice any such party shall fail to state the particulars of his claim in respect of any such land, or to treat with the promoters of the undertaking in respect thereof, or if such party and the promoters of the undertaking shall not agree as to the amount of the compensation to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking for the interest in such lands belonging to such party, or which he is by this or the special Act enabled to sell, or for any damage that may be sustained by him by reason of the execution of the works, the amount of such compensation shall be settled in the manner hereinafter provided for settling cases of disputed compensation.

XX. If no agreement be come to between the promoters of the undertaking and the owners of or parties by this or the special Act enabled to sell and convey any lands taken or required for or injuriously affected by the execution of the undertaking, or any interest in such lands, as to the value of such lands, or of any interest therein, or as to the compensation to be made in respect thereof, it shall be lawful for the parties to refer the same to arbitration.

XXI. If the compensation claimed and disputed shall not exceed 50*l.*, unless both parties agree to refer such compensation to arbitration, the same shall be settled by the sheriff.

XXII. It shall be lawful for the sheriff, upon the application of either party with respect to any such question of disputed compensation, to issue an order for the other party to appear before such sheriff, at a time and place to be named in the order; and upon the appearance of such parties, or in the absence of any of them upon proof of due service of the order, it shall be lawful for such sheriff to hear and determine such question, and for that purpose to examine such parties or any of them, and their witnesses, upon oath, without written pleadings or reducing the evidence to writing; and the expenses of every such inquiry excepting the remunerative expenses of the sheriff, shall be in the discretion of such sheriff, and he shall settle the amount thereof; and the determination of the sheriff upon such question shall be final and conclusive, and not subject to review or appeal in any form or court whatever.

XXIII. If the compensation claimed or offered in any case shall exceed 50*l.*, and if the party claiming such compensation desire to have the same settled by arbitration, and signify such desire to the promoters of the undertaking, before they have presented their petition to the sheriff to summon a jury in respect of such lands, under the provisions hereinafter contained, by a notice in writing, stating in such notice the nature of the interest in such lands in respect of which he claims compensation, and the amount of the compensation so claimed, and unless the promoters of the undertaking be willing to pay the amount of compensation so claimed, and shall enter into a written agreement for that purpose, then, within twenty-one days after the receipt of any such notice from any party so entitled, the same shall be settled by arbitration in the manner hereinafter provided.

XXIV. When any question of disputed compensation by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, authorized or required to be settled by arbitration, shall have arisen, then, unless both parties shall concur in the appointment of a single arbiter, each party, on the request of the other party, shall nominate and appoint an arbiter, to whom such dispute shall be referred; and every appointment of an arbiter shall be made on the part of the company under the hand of the secretary or any two of the directors of the company, and on the part of any other party under the hand of such party, or if such party be a company or corporation under the hand of the proper officer or person authorized by such company or corporation, and such appointment shall be delivered to the arbiters, and shall be deemed a submission to arbitration on the part of the party by whom the same shall be made; and after any such appointment shall have been made neither party shall have power to revoke the same without the consent of the other, nor shall the death of either party operate as such revocation; and if for the space of fourteen days after any such dispute shall have arisen, and after a request in writing, in which shall be stated the matters so required to be referred to arbitration, shall have been served by the one party on the other party to appoint an arbiter, such other party fail to appoint an arbiter, then upon such failure the party making the request and having himself appointed an arbiter, may appoint such arbiter to act on behalf of both parties, and such arbiter may proceed to hear and determine the matters which shall be in dispute, and in such case the award or determination of such single arbiter shall be final.

XXV. If, before the matters so referred shall be determined, any arbiter appointed by either party die, or become incapable, the party by whom such arbiter was appointed may nominate and appoint in writing some other person to act in his place, and if for the space of seven days after notice in writing from the other party for that purpose he fail to do so, the remaining or other arbiter may proceed ex parte; and every arbiter so to be substituted as aforesaid shall have the same powers and authorities as were vested in the former arbiter at the time of such his death or disability as aforesaid.

XXVI. Where more than one arbiter shall have been appointed such arbiters shall, before they enter upon the matters referred to them, nominate and appoint, by writing under their hands, an oversman to decide on any such matters on which they shall differ, or which shall be referred to him under the provisions of this or the special Act; and if such oversman shall die, or become incapable to act, they shall forthwith after such death or incapacity appoint another oversman in his place; and the decision of every such oversman on the matters on which the arbiters shall differ shall be final.

XXVII. If in either of the cases aforesaid the said arbiters shall refuse, or shall, for seven days after request of either party to such arbitration, neglect to appoint an oversman, it shall be lawful for the Lord Ordinary on the application of either party to such arbitration, to appoint an oversman, and the decision of such oversman on the matters on which the arbiters shall differ, or which shall be referred to him under this or the special Act, shall be final.

XXVIII. If, when a single arbiter shall have been appointed, such arbiter shall die, or become incapable to act, before he shall have made his award, the matters referred to him shall be determined by arbitration, under the provisions of this or the special Act, in the same manner as if such arbiter had not been appointed.

XXX. If, when more than one arbiter shall have been appointed, either of the arbiters refuse or for seven days neglect to act, the other arbiter may proceed ex parte, and the decision of such arbiter shall be as effectual as if he had been the single arbiter appointed by both parties.

XXXI. If, where more than one arbiter shall have been appointed, and neither of them shall refuse or neglect to act as aforesaid, such arbiters shall fail to make their award within twenty-one days after the day on which the last of such arbiters shall have been appointed, or within such extended time as shall have been appointed for that purpose by both such arbiters under this Act, the matters referred to them shall be determined by the umpire to be appointed as aforesaid.

XXXII. The said arbiters or their oversman may call for the production of any documents in the possession or power of either party which they or he may think necessary for determining the question in dispute, and may examine the parties or their witnesses on oath, and administer the oaths necessary for that purpose, and take all evidence competent according to the law of Scotland.

XXXIII. All the expenses of any such arbitration and incident thereto, to be settled by the arbiters or oversman, as the case may be, shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking, unless the arbiters or oversman shall award the same sum as or a less sum than shall have been offered by the promoters of the undertaking, in which case each party shall bear his own expenses incident to the arbitration; and in all cases the expenses of the arbiters or oversman, as the case may be, and of recording the decreet arbitral or award in the books of the council and session, shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking.

XXXIV. The arbiters shall make their decreet arbitral or award in writing, and shall cause the same to be recorded in the books of council and session, or shall deliver the same to the promoters of the undertaking, to be by them so recorded, and the said promoters shall, on demand, at their own expense, furnish an extract thereof from the said books to the other party to the arbitration; and extracts of decreets arbitral or awards shall bear faith in all courts and cases the same as the original writings, unless the originals be improven.

XXXV. No award made with respect to any question referred to arbitration under the provisions of this or the special Act shall be set aside for irregularity or error in matter of form.

XXXVI. If the party claiming compensation shall not, as hereinbefore provided, signify his desire to have the question of such compensation settled by arbitration; or if, when the matter shall have been referred to arbitration, the arbiters or their umpire shall for three months have failed to make their or his award, the question of such compensation shall be settled by the verdict of a jury, as hereinafter provided.

XXXVII. But if any party entitled to any compensation in respect of any such lands or interest therein, exceeding 50*l.* as aforesaid, shall desire to have the amount of such compensation determined by a jury, it shall in like manner be lawful for him to give notice in writing to the promoters of the undertaking of such his desire, stating in such notice the nature of the interest in such lands in respect of which he claims compensation, and the amount of the compensation so claimed by him; and unless the promoters of the undertaking be willing to pay the amount of compensation so claimed, and shall enter into a written agreement for that purpose, then, within twenty-one days after the receipt of any such notice from any party so entitled, they shall, unless the question shall previously have been agreed to be settled by arbitration, present their petition to the sheriff to summon a jury for settling the same in the manner hereinafter provided, and in default thereof they shall be liable to pay to the party so entitled as aforesaid the amount of compensation so claimed, and the same may be recovered by him, with costs, by action in any competent court.

XXXVIII. Before the promoters of the undertaking shall present their petition for summoning a jury for settling any case of disputed compensation they shall give not less than ten days' notice to the other party of their intention to cause such jury to be summoned; and in such notice the promoters of the undertaking shall state what sum of money they are willing to give for the interest in such lands sought to be purchased by them from such party, and for the damage to be sustained by him by the execution of the works.

XXXIX. In every case in which any such question of disputed compensation shall be required to be determined by the verdict of a jury the promoters of the undertaking shall present their petition to the sheriff to summon a jury for that purpose; and such petition shall, if the promoters be a company or corporation, be signed by the secretary or proper officer or person authorized by such company or corporation, and if they be not a company or corporation such petition shall be signed by the promoters, or any two of them if more than one.

XL. Upon the receipt of such petition as aforesaid the sheriff shall summon a jury of twenty-five indifferent persons, duly qualified to act as common jurymen for the trial of civil causes in the court of session, to meet at a time and place to be named by the sheriff in the warrant for that purpose.

XLI. Not less than ten days' notice of the time and place of the inquiry shall be given in writing by the promoters of the undertaking to the other party, or to his known agent.

XLII. Out of the jurors appearing upon such summons a jury of thirteen persons shall be drawn by ballot; and if a sufficient number of jurymen do not appear in obedience to such summons the sheriff shall return other indifferent men, duly qualified as aforesaid, of the bystanders, or others that can speedily be procured, to make up the jury to the number aforesaid; and all parties concerned may have their lawful challenges for cause against any of the jurymen; and each party may have three peremptory challenges.

XLIII. The sheriff shall preside on the said inquiry; and the party claiming compensation shall be deemed the pursuer, and the proceedings at such trials shall be conducted in like manner as in criminal trials; and, if either party so request, the sheriff shall order the jury, or any seven or more of them, to view the place or matter in controversy.

XLIII. If any person summoned and returned upon any jury under this or the special Act, whether common or special, do not appear, or if appearing he refuse to make oath, or in any other manner unlawfully neglect his duty, he shall, unless he shew reasonable excuse to the satisfaction of the sheriff, forfeit a sum not exceeding 10*l.*; and every such penalty shall be applied in satisfaction of the costs of the inquiry, so far as the same will extend; and, in addition to the penalty hereby imposed, every such jurymen shall be subject to the same regulations, pains, and penalties as if such jury had been returned for the trial of a civil cause in the court of session.

XLIV. If either party so request in writing, the sheriff shall summon before him any person considered necessary to be examined as a witness touching the matters in question.

XLV. If any person duly summoned to give evidence upon any such inquiry, and to whom a tender of his reasonable expenses shall have been made, fail to appear at the time and place specified in the summons, without sufficient cause, or if any person, whether summoned or not, who shall appear as a witness, refuse to be examined on oath touching the subject matter in question, every person so offending shall forfeit to the party aggrieved a sum not exceeding 10*l.*, and, in addition to the penalty hereby imposed, shall be subject to the same regulations, pains, and penalties as if such witness, having been duly summoned, had failed to appear, or having appeared had refused to be examined in any other cause.

XLVI. If the party claiming compensation shall not appear at the time appointed for the inquiry such inquiry shall not be further proceeded in, but the compensation to be paid shall be such as shall be ascertained by a valuator appointed by the sheriff in manner hereinafter provided.

XLVII. Before the jury proceed to inquire of and assess the compensation or damage in respect of which their verdict is to be given they shall make oath that they will truly and faithfully inquire of and assess such compensation or damage; and the sheriff shall administer such oaths, as well as the oaths of all persons called upon to give evidence.

XLVIII. Where such inquiry shall relate to the value of lands to be purchased, and also to compensation claimed for injury done or to be done to the lands held therewith, the jury shall deliver their verdict by a majority of their number separately for the sum of money to be paid for the purchase of the lands required for the works, or of any interest therein belonging to the party with whom the question of disputed compensation shall have arisen, or which under the provisions herein contained, such party is entitled to sell or convey, and for the sum of money to be paid by way of compensation for the damage, if any, to be sustained by the owner of the lands by reason of severing of the lands taken from the other lands of such owner, or otherwise injuriously affecting such lands by the exercise of the powers of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith: Provided always, that if the parties agree to dispense with such separation the verdict may be returned for one sum.

XLIX. The sheriff before whom such inquiry shall be held shall give judgment for the purchase-money or compensation assessed by such jury; and the verdict and judgment shall be signed by the sheriff, and being so signed shall be kept by the clerk of the sheriff court among the records of that court; and such verdicts and judgments shall be deemed records, and the same or official copies thereof shall be good evidence in all courts and elsewhere; and all persons may inspect the said verdicts and judgments, and may have copies thereof or extracts therefrom on paying for each inspection thereof 1*s.* and for every one hundred words copied or extracted therefrom 6*d.*

L. On every such inquiry before a jury all the expenses of such inquiry shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking, unless the verdict of the jury be given for the same or a less sum than the sum previously offered by the promoters of the undertaking, or unless the owner or party interested in the lands shall have failed to appear at the time and place appointed for the inquiry, having received due notice thereof, in either of which cases one half of the expenses of the promoters of the undertaking shall be defrayed by the owner of or party interested in the lands.

LI. The expenses of any such inquiry shall, in case of difference, be settled by the sheriff on the application of either party; and such expenses shall include all reasonable charges and expenses incurred in summoning, impanelling, and returning the jury, taking the inquiry, the attendance of witnesses, the employment of counsel and agents, recording the verdict and judgment thereon, and otherwise incident to such inquiry, including the remuneration to the sheriff for his time and labour, and his reasonable travelling expenses, which remuneration for time and labour, exclusive of travelling expenses, shall be five guineas and no more for any inquiry as aforesaid, whether with or without a jury, unless such inquiry shall occupy more than one day or period of eight hours, in which case there shall be paid to the sheriff a sum of five guineas for each day or period of eight hours the inquiry may occupy, including the time necessarily occupied in travelling to and from the place of trial: Provided always, that the time occupied in travelling shall not in reference to any inquiry be computed at more than two days; and in all cases of inquiry as aforesaid before the sheriff, with or without a jury, the remuneration or expenses of the sheriff shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking.

LII. If any such costs shall be payable by the promoters of the undertaking, and if within seven days after demand such expenses be not paid to the party entitled to receive the same, they shall be recoverable by pawning and sale, and on application to the sheriff he shall issue his warrant accordingly; and if any such expenses shall be payable by the owner of the lands, or of any interest therein, the same may be deducted and retained by the promoters of the undertaking out of any money awarded by the jury to such owner or party interested, or determined by the valuation of a valuator under the provision hereinafter contained; and the payment or deposit of the remainder, if any, of such money shall be deemed payment and satisfaction of the whole thereof, or, if such expenses shall exceed the amount of the money so awarded or determined, the excess shall be recoverable by pawning and sale, and on application to the sheriff he shall issue his warrant accordingly.

LIII. If either party desire any such question of disputed compensation as aforesaid to be tried before a special jury, such question shall be so tried, provided that notice of such desire, if coming from the other party, be given to the promoters of the undertaking before they have presented their petition to the sheriff; and for that purpose the promoters of the undertaking shall, by their petition to the sheriff, require him to nominate a special jury for such trial; and thereupon the sheriff shall, as soon as conveniently may be after the receipt by him of such petition, summon both the parties to appear before him, by themselves or their agents, at some convenient time and place appointed by him, for the purpose of nominating a special jury (not being less than five days from the service of such summons); and at the place and time so appointed the sheriff shall proceed to nominate a special jury in the manner in which such juries shall be required by the laws for the time being in force to be nominated by the sheriff in other cases, and the sheriff shall appoint a day for the parties or their agents to appear before him to reduce the number of such jury, and thereof shall give four days' notice to the parties; and on the day so appointed the sheriff shall proceed to reduce the said special jury to the number of twenty, in the manner used and accustomed in reducing special juries in the court of session.

LIV. The special jury on such inquiry shall consist of thirteen of the said twenty who shall first appear on the names being called over, the parties having their lawful challenges against any of the said jurymen; and if a full jury do not appear, or if after such challenges a full jury do not remain, then, upon the application of either party, the sheriff shall add to the list of such jury the names of any other disinterested persons, qualified to act as special or common jurymen, who shall not have been previously struck off the aforesaid list, and who may then be attending the court, or can speedily be procured so as to complete such jury, all parties having their lawful challenges against such persons; and the sheriff shall proceed to the trial and adjudication of the matters in question by such jury; and such trial shall be attended in all respects with the like incidents and consequences, and the like penalties shall be applicable as hereinbefore provided in the case of a trial by common jury.

LV. Any other inquiry than that for the trial of which such special jury may have been struck and reduced as aforesaid may be tried by such jury, provided the parties thereto respectively shall give their consent to such trial.

LVI. The purchase-money or compensation to be paid for any lands to be purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking from any party who, by reason of absence from the kingdom, is prevented from treating, or who cannot after diligent inquiry be found, or who shall not appear at the time appointed for the inquiry before the jury, after due notice thereof, and the compensation to be paid for any permanent injury to such lands, shall be such as shall be determined by the valuation of such valuator as the sheriff shall nominate for that purpose, as hereinafter mentioned.

LVII. Upon application by the promoters of the undertaking to the sheriff, and upon such proof as shall be satisfactory to him that any such party is, by reason of absence from the kingdom, prevented from treating, or cannot after diligent inquiry be found, or that any such party failed to appear on such inquiry before a jury as aforesaid, after due notice to him for that purpose, such sheriff shall, by writing under his hand, nominate a valuator for determining such compensation as aforesaid, and such valuator shall determine the same accordingly, and shall annex to his valuation a declaration in writing, subscribed by him, of the correctness thereof.

LVIII. Before such valuator shall enter upon the duty of making such valuation as aforesaid he shall, in the presence of such sheriff, make and subscribe the oath following at the foot of such nomination; (that is to say,)

'I A.B. do solemnly swear, that I will faithfully, impartially, and honestly, according to the best of my Skill and Ability, execute the Duty of making the Valuation hereby referred to me. So help me God. A. B.

'Sworn and subscribed in the Presence of

And if any valuator shall corruptly make such oath, or having made such oath shall wilfully act contrary thereto, he shall be guilty of and incur the pains of perjury.

LIX. The said nomination and declaration shall be annexed to the valuation to be made by such valuator, and shall be preserved together therewith, by the promoters of the undertaking, and they shall at all times produce the said valuation and other documents, on demand, to the owner of the lands comprised in such valuation, and to all other parties interested therein.

LX. All the expenses of and incident to every such valuation shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking.

LXI. In estimating the purchase-money or compensation to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking in any of the cases aforesaid regard shall be had not only to the value of the land to be purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking, but also to the damage, if any, to be sustained by the owner of the lands by reason of the severing of the lands taken from the other lands of such owner, or otherwise injuriously affecting such lands by the exercise of the powers of this or the special Act, or any other Act incorporated therewith.

LXII. On estimating the purchase-money or compensation to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking in any of the cases aforesaid, the sheriff, arbiters, valuator, or jury, as the case may be, shall apportion the said compensation among the parties who may be interested in the said lands as joint owners or lessees, or as holding some security or burden or claim thereon or interest therein, and who shall have been parties to the said trial or arbitration or valuation: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent any person having a separate interest from having the same separately tried.

LXIII. When the compensation payable in respect of any lands, or any interest therein, shall have been ascertained by the valuation of a valuator, and deposited in the Bank under the provisions herein contained, by reason that the owner of or party entitled to convey such lands, or such interest therein as aforesaid, could not be found, or was absent from the kingdom, and if such owner or party shall be dissatisfied with such valuation, it shall be lawful for him, before he shall have applied to the court of session for payment or investment of the monies so deposited under the provisions herein contained, by notice in writing to the promoters of the undertaking, to require the question of such compensation to be submitted to arbitration, and thereupon the same shall be so submitted to and settled by arbitration in the manner hereinbefore provided for settling disputes by arbitration.

LXIV. The question to be submitted to the arbiters in the case last aforesaid shall be, whether the said sum so deposited as aforesaid by the promoters of the undertaking was a sufficient sum, or whether any and what further sum ought to be paid or deposited by them.

STAT.—VOL. XXIII.

O

LXV. If the arbiters shall decide that a further sum ought to be paid or deposited by the promoters of the undertaking they shall pay or deposit, as the case may require, such further sum within fourteen days after the making of such decret arbitral or award, or in default thereof the same may be enforced by diligence, or recovered, with expenses, by action in any competent court.

LXVI. If the arbiters shall determine that the sum so deposited was sufficient, the expenses of and incident to such arbitration, to be determined by the arbiters, shall be in the discretion of the arbiters; but if the arbiters shall determine that a further sum ought to be paid or deposited by the promoters of the undertaking, all the expenses of and incident to the arbitration shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking.

LXVII. And with respect to the purchase-money or compensation coming to parties having limited interests, or prevented from treating, or not making title,—it is enacted as follows: The purchase-money or compensation which shall be payable in respect of any lands, or any interest therein purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking from any corporation, heir of entail, life-renter, married woman seised in her own right or entitled to terce or dower, or any other right or interest, husband, tutors, curators, or other guardians for any infant, minor, lunatic, or idiot, fatuous or furious person, or for any person under any other disability or incapacity, judicial factor, trustee, executor, or administrator, or person having a partial or qualified interest only in such lands, and not entitled to sell or convey the same, except under the provisions of this or the special Act, or the compensation to be paid for any permanent damage to any such lands, shall, if it amount to or exceed the sum of 200*l.*, the same shall be paid into the Bank, to the intent that such monies shall be applied, under the authority of the court of session, to some one or more of the following purposes; (that is to say,)

In the purchase or redemption of the land tax, or the discharge of any debt or incumbrance affecting the land in respect of which such money shall have been paid, or affecting other lands settled therewith on the same heirs, or for the same trusts or purposes, or affecting succeeding heirs of entail in any such lands, whether imposed and constituted by the entailor, or in virtue of powers given by the entail, or in virtue of powers conferred by any Act of Parliament.

In the purchase of other lands to be conveyed, limited, and settled upon the same heirs, and the like trusts and purposes, and in the same manner, as the lands in respect of which such money shall have been paid stood settled; or

If such monies shall be paid in respect of any buildings taken under the authority of this or the special Act, or injured by the proximity of the works, or in removing or replacing such buildings, or substituting others in their stead, in such manner as the said court shall direct; or

In payment to any party becoming absolutely entitled to such money.

LXVIII. Such money may be so applied as aforesaid upon an order of the court of session, made on the petition of the party who would have been entitled to the rents and profits of the lands in respect of which such money shall have been deposited; and until the money can be so applied it shall be retained in the Bank at interest, or shall be laid out and invested in the public funds or in heritable securities, and the interest, dividends, and annual proceeds thereof shall from time to time, under the like order, be paid to the party who would for the time being have been entitled to the rents and profits of the lands.

LXIX. If such purchase-money or compensation shall not amount to the sum of 200*l.*, and shall exceed the sum of 20*l.*, the same shall either be paid into the Bank, and applied in the manner hereinbefore directed with respect to sums amounting to or exceeding 200*l.*, or the same may lawfully be paid to two trustees, to be nominated by the parties entitled to the rents or profits of the lands in respect whereof the same shall be payable, such nomination to be signified by writing under the hands of the parties so entitled; and in case of the coverture, infancy, lunacy, or other incapacity of the parties entitled to such monies, such nomination may lawfully be made by their respective husbands, guardians, tutors, curators, judicial factors, or trustees; but such last-mentioned application of the monies shall not be made unless the promoters of the undertaking approve thereof, and of the trustees named for the purpose; and the money so paid to such trustees, and the produce arising therefrom, shall, at the expense of the promoters of the undertaking, be by such trustees applied in the manner hereinbefore directed with respect to money paid into the Bank, but it shall not be necessary to obtain any order of court for that purpose.

LXX. If such money shall not exceed the sum of 20*l.* the same shall be paid to the parties entitled to the rents and profits of the lands in respect whereof the same shall be payable, for their own use and benefit; or in case of the coverture, infancy, idiotcy, lunacy, or other incapacity of any such parties, then such money shall be paid, for their use, to the respective husbands, guardians, tutors, curators, judicial factors, or trustees of such persons.

LXXI. All sums of money exceeding 20*l.* which may be payable by the promoters of the undertaking, in respect of the taking, using, or interfering with any lands under a contract or agreement with any person who shall not be entitled to dispose of such lands, or of the interest therein contracted to be sold by him, absolutely for his own benefit, shall be paid into the Bank or to trustees in manner aforesaid; and it shall not be lawful for any contracting party, not entitled as aforesaid, to retain to his own use any portion of the sums so agreed or contracted to be paid for or in respect of the taking, using, or interfering with any such lands, or for assenting to or not opposing the passing of the bill authorizing the taking of such lands, or in lieu of bridges, tunnels, or other accommodation works, but all such monies shall be deemed to have been contracted to be paid for and on account of the several parties interested in such lands, as well in possession as in succession or expectancy: Provided always, that it shall be in the discretion of the court of session or the said trustees, as the case may be, to allot to any life-renter or person holding for any other partial or qualified right or interest, for his own use, a portion of the sum so paid into the Bank or to such trustees as aforesaid as compensation for any injury, inconvenience, or annoyance which he may be considered to sustain, independently of the actual value of the lands to be taken, and of the damage occasioned to the lands held therewith by reason of the taking of such lands and the making of the works.

LXXII. Where any purchase-money or compensation paid into the Bank under the provisions of this or the special Act shall have been paid in respect of any lease for lives or years, or any right or interest in lands less than the fee thereof, or any reversion dependent on any such lease, or right or interest, it shall be lawful for the court of session, on the petition any party interested in such money, to order that the same shall be laid out, invested, accumulated, and paid in such manner as the said court may consider will give to the parties interested in such money the same benefit therefrom as they might lawfully have had from the lease, right, interest, or reversion in respect of which such money shall have been paid, or as near thereto as may be.

LXXXI. If such money shall be laid out and invested in the purchase of lands to be held under entail, or under uses, trusts, intents, and purposes, it shall not be necessary to ingross verbatim in the titles to such new lands the provisions of the entail or other investiture of the said old lands, or to mention specifically the uses, trusts, intents, and purposes for and upon which the said new lands are to be held, but it shall be sufficient to state the dates of executing and recording the deed or deeds containing the provisions and conditions subject to which, or the uses, trusts, intents, and purposes to, for, and upon which, the said old lands were held, and to declare that the said new lands shall be held subject to the same provisions and conditions, and to, for, and upon the like uses, trusts, intents, and purposes, and to record the title-deed containing such general reference in the register of tailzies, sasines, or other proper record, according to the nature of such title-deed, which the keepers of the said registers are hereby authorized and required to do without a special order to that effect: Provided always, that upon the first occasion of completing titles to the said entailed estates the lands acquired to the estate may be introduced into the titles then completed, after which they shall descend regularly as part and portion of the entailed estates.

LXXIV. Upon deposit in the Bank in manner hereinbefore provided of the purchase-money or compensation agreed or awarded to be paid in respect of any lands purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, the owner of such lands, including in such term all parties by this Act enabled to sell or convey lands, shall, when required so to do by the promoters of the undertaking, duly convey such lands to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct; and in default thereof, or if he fail to adduce a good title to such lands, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to expedite an instrument under the hands of a notary public, containing a description of the lands in respect of which such default shall be made, and reciting the purchase or taking thereof by the promoters of the undertaking, and the names of the parties from whom the same were purchased or taken, and the deposit made in respect thereof, and declaring the fact of such default having been made; and such instrument shall be stamped with the stamp duty which would have been payable upon a conveyance to the promoters of the undertaking of the lands described therein; and thereupon all the estate and interest in such lands of or capable of being sold and conveyed by the party between whom and the promoters of the undertaking such agreement shall have been come to, or as between whom and the promoters of the undertaking such purchase-money or compensation shall have been determined by the sheriff, by a jury, or by arbiters, or by a valuation appointed by the sheriff, as herein provided, and shall have been deposited as aforesaid, shall vest absolutely in the promoters of the undertaking; and as against such parties, and all parties on behalf of whom they are hereinbefore enabled to sell and convey, the promoters of the undertaking shall be entitled to immediate possession of such lands; and such instrument, being registered in the register of sasines in manner hereinafter provided in regard to conveyances of lands, shall have the same effect as a conveyance so registered.

LXXV. If the owner of any such lands purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking, or of any interest therein, on tender of the purchase-money or compensation either agreed or awarded to be paid in respect thereof, refuse to accept the same, or neglect or fail to make out a title to such lands, or to the interest therein claimed by him, to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking, or if he refuse or is unable validly to convey such lands as directed by the promoters of the undertaking, or to discharge or obtain a discharge of any burden or incumbrance thereon which was not specially excepted from discharge, or if any such owner be absent from the kingdom, or cannot after diligent inquiry be found, or fail to appear, on the inquiry before a jury, as herein provided for, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to deposit the purchase-money or compensation payable in respect of such lands or any interest therein in the Bank, to be placed, except in the cases herein otherwise provided for, to an account to be opened in the name of the parties interested in such lands (describing them, so far as the promoters of the undertaking can do), subject to the controul and disposition of the court of session.

LXXVI. Upon any such deposit of money as last aforesaid being made, the cashier or other proper officer of such Bank shall give to the promoters of the undertaking, or to the party paying in such money by their direction, a receipt for such money, specifying therein for what and for whose use (described as aforesaid) the same shall have been received, and in respect of what purchase the same shall have been paid in; and it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to expedite an instrument under the hands of a notary public, containing a description of the lands in respect whereof such deposit shall have been made, and declaring the circumstances under which and the names of the parties to whose credit such deposit shall have been made, and such instrument shall be stamped with the stamp duty which would have been payable upon a conveyance to the promoters of the undertaking of the lands described therein; and thereupon all the estate and interest in such lands of the parties for whose use and in respect whereof such purchase-money or compensation shall have been deposited shall vest absolutely in the promoters of the undertaking, and as against such parties they shall be entitled to immediate possession of such lands; and such instrument being registered in the register of sasines in manner hereinafter directed in regard to conveyances of lands, shall have the same effect as a conveyance so registered.

LXXVII. Upon the application by petition of any party making claim to the money so deposited as last aforesaid, or any part thereof, or to the lands in respect whereof the same shall have been so deposited, or any part of such lands, or any interest in the same, the said court of session may, in a summary way, as to such court shall seem fit, order such money to be laid out or invested in the public funds, or on heritable securities, or may order distribution thereof, or payment of the dividends thereof, according to the respective estates, titles, or interests of the parties making claim to such money or lands, or any part thereof, and may make such other order in the premises as to such court shall seem fit.

LXXVIII. If any question arise respecting the title to the lands in respect whereof such monies shall have been so paid or deposited as aforesaid, the parties respectively in possession of such lands, as being the owners thereof, at the time of such lands being purchased or taken, shall be deemed to have been lawfully entitled to such lands, until the contrary be shewn to the satisfaction of the court; and unless the contrary be shewn as aforesaid the parties so in possession, and all parties claiming under them, or consistently with their possession, shall be deemed entitled to the money so deposited, and to the dividends or interest of the annuities or securities purchased therewith, and the same shall be paid and applied accordingly.

LXXIX. In all cases of monies deposited in the Bank under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, except where such monies shall have been so deposited by reason of the wilful refusal of any party entitled thereto to receive the same, or to feu or convey the lands in respect whereof the same shall be payable, or by reason of his refusal or inability to discharge or obtain a discharge of any burden on such lands which was not specially excepted from discharge, or by reason of the failure or neglect of any party to make out a good title to the land required, it shall be lawful for the court of session to order the expenses of the following matters, including therein all reasonable charges and expenses incident thereto, to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking (that is to say), the expense of the purchase or taking of the lands, or which shall have been incurred in consequence thereof, other than such expenses as are herein otherwise provided for, and the expense of the investment of such monies in government or real securities, and of the re-investment thereof in the purchase of other lands, and of re-entailing any of such lands, and incident thereto, and also the expense of obtaining the proper orders for any of the purposes aforesaid, and of the orders for the payment of the dividends and interest of the securities upon which such monies shall be invested, and for the payment of the principal of such monies, or of the securities whereon the same shall be invested, and of all proceedings relating thereto, except such as are occasioned by litigation between adverse claimants: Provided always, that the expense of one application only for re-investment in land shall be allowed, unless it shall appear to the court of session that it is for the benefit of the parties interested in the said monies that the same should be invested in the purchase of lands in different sums and at different times, in which case it shall be lawful for the court, if it think fit, to order the expenses of any such investments to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking.

LXXX. And with respect to the conveyances of lands,—it is enacted as follows: Feus and conveyances of lands so to be purchased as aforesaid may be according to the form in the Schedules (A.) and (B.) respectively to this Act annexed, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit; which feus and conveyances, being duly executed, and being registered in the particular register of sasines kept for the county, burgh, or district in which the lands are locally situated, or in the general register of sasines for Scotland kept at Edinburgh, within sixty days from the last date thereof, which the respective keepers of the said registers are hereby authorized and required to do, shall give and constitute a good and undoubted right and complete and valid feudal title in all time coming to the promoters of the undertaking, and their successors and assigns, to the premises therein described, any law or custom to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided always, that it shall not be necessary for the promoters of the undertaking to record in any register of sasines any feus or conveyances in their favour which shall contain a procuratory of resignation or precept of sasine, or which may be completed by infestment; and the title of the company under such last-mentioned feus or conveyances shall be regulated by the ordinary law of Scotland, until the said feus or conveyances, or the instruments of sasine thereon, shall have been recorded in a register of sasines.

LXXXI. The expenses of all conveyances of lands shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking; and such expenses shall include all charges and expenses, incurred on the part as well of the seller as of the purchaser, of all conveyances of any such lands, and of any interests therein, and of establishing the title to such lands, and all other reasonable expenses incident to the investigation of such title.

LXXXII. If the promoters of the undertaking and the party entitled to any such expenses shall not agree as to the amount thereof, such amount shall be ascertained and decreed for by the Lord Ordinary, on a summary petition presented to him by the party entitled to recover the same; and the promoters of the undertaking shall pay to the party entitled thereto what the said Lord Ordinary shall decree for or in respect of such expenses, or in default thereof the same may be recovered in the same way as any other expenses payable under an order or decree of the court, or the same may be recovered by poinding and sale in the manner hereinbefore provided in other cases of expenses; and the expense of taxing such expenses shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking, unless upon such taxation one-sixth part of the amount of such expenses shall be disallowed, in which case the expenses of such taxation, and of or incident to the application to the Lord Ordinary, shall be borne by the party whose expenses shall be so taxed, and the amount thereof shall be ascertained by the said Lord Ordinary, and deducted by him accordingly in his judgment or decerniture.

LXXXIII. And with respect to the entry upon lands by the promoters of the undertaking,—it is enacted as follows: The promoters of the undertaking shall not, except by consent of the owners and occupiers, enter upon any lands which shall be required to be purchased or permanently used for the purposes and under the powers of this or the special Act, until they shall either have paid to every party having any interest in such lands, or deposited in the Bank in the manner herein mentioned, the purchase-money or compensation agreed or awarded to be paid to such parties respectively for their respective interests therein: Provided always, that for the purpose merely of surveying and taking levels of such lands, and of probing or boring to ascertain the nature of the soil, and of setting out the line of the works, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, after giving not less than three nor more than fourteen days' notice to the owners or occupiers thereof, to enter upon such lands without previous consent, making compensation for any damage thereby occasioned to the owners or occupiers thereof.

LXXXIV. Provided, that if the promoters of the undertaking shall be desirous of entering upon and using any such land before an agreement shall have been come to, or an award made or verdict given, for the purchase-money or compensation to be paid by them in respect of such lands, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to deposit in the Bank, by way of security, as hereinafter mentioned, either the amount of purchase-money or compensation claimed by any party interested in or entitled to sell and convey such lands, and who shall not consent to such entry, or such a sum as shall be valued, appointed by the sheriff in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of parties who cannot be found, be determined to be the value of such lands, or of the interest therein which such party is entitled to, or enabled to sell and convey, and also, if required so to do, to give to such party a bond, under the hand of the secretary or proper officer or person authorized, if the promoters be a company or corporation, or if they be not a company or corporation under the hand of the pr notes, or any two of them if more than one, with two sufficient securities, to be approved of by the sheriff in case the parties differ, for a sum equal to the sum so to be deposited, for payment to such party, or for making a deposit in the Bank for the benefit of the parties interested in such lands, as the case may require, under the provisions herein contained, of all such purchase-money or compensation as may in manner hereinbefore provided be determined to be payable by the promoters of the undertaking in respect of the lands so entered upon, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5*l.* per centum per annum from the time of entering on such lands until such purchase-money or compensation shall be paid to such party, or deposited in the Bank for the benefit of the parties interested in such lands, under the provisions herein contained; and upon such deposit by way of security being made as aforesaid, and such bond being delivered or tendered to such non-consenting party as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to enter upon and use such lands, without having first paid or deposited the purchase-money or compensation in other cases required to be paid or deposited by them before entering upon any lands to be taken by them under the provisions of this or the special Act.

XXXV. The money so to be deposited as last aforesaid shall be paid into the Bank, to be placed to an account to be opened in the name of the parties interested in or entitled to sell and convey the lands so to be entered upon, and who shall not have consented to such entry, subject to the controul and disposition of the court of session; and upon such deposit being made the cashier or other proper officer of the Bank shall give to the promoters of the undertaking, or to the party paying in such money by their direction, a receipt for such money, specifying therein for what purpose and to whose credit the same shall have been paid in.

XXXVI. The money so deposited as last aforesaid shall remain in the Bank by way of security to the parties whose lands shall so have been entered upon for the performance of the bond to be given by the promoters of the undertaking, as hereinbefore mentioned, and the same may, on the application by petition of the promoters of the undertaking, be ordered to be invested in the public funds or upon heritable securities, and accumulated; and upon the conditions of such bond being fully performed it shall be lawful for the court of session, upon a like application, to order the money so deposited, or the funds in which the same shall have been invested, together with the accumulation thereof, to be repaid or transferred to the promoters of the undertaking, or, if such conditions shall not be fully performed, it shall be lawful for the said court to order the same to be applied in such manner as it shall think fit for the benefit of the parties for whose security the same shall so have been deposited.

XXXVII. If the promoters of the undertaking or any of their contractors shall, except as aforesaid, wilfully enter upon and take possession of any lands which shall be required to be purchased or permanently used for the purposes of the special Act, without such consent as aforesaid, or without having made such payment for the benefit of the parties interested in the lands, or such deposit by way of security as aforesaid, the promoters of the undertaking shall forfeit to the party in possession of such lands the sum of 10*l.* over and above the amount of any damage done to such lands by reason of such entry and taking possession as aforesaid, such penalty and damage respectively to be recovered before the sheriff; and if the promoters of the undertaking or their contractors shall, after conviction in such penalty as aforesaid, continue in unlawful possession of any such lands, the promoters of the undertaking shall be liable to forfeit the sum of 25*l.* for every day they or their contractors shall so remain in possession as aforesaid, such penalty to be recoverable by the party in possession of such lands, with expenses, by action in any competent court: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be held to subject the promoters of the undertaking to the payment of any such penalties as aforesaid, if they shall bond fide and without collusion have paid the compensation agreed or awarded to be paid in respect of the said lands to any person whom the promoters of the undertaking may have reasonably believed to be entitled thereto, or shall have deposited the same in the Bank for the benefit of the parties interested in the lands, or made such deposit by way of security in respect thereof as hereinbefore mentioned, although such person may not have been legally entitled thereto.

XXXVIII. On the trial of any action for any such penalty as aforesaid the decision of the sheriff, under the provision hereinbefore contained, shall not be held conclusive as to the right of entry on any such lands by the promoters of the undertaking.

XXXIX. If in any case in which, according to the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, the promoters of the undertaking are authorized to enter upon and take possession of any lands required for the purposes of the undertaking, the owner or occupier of any such lands, or any other person, refuse to give up the possession thereof, or hinder the promoters of the undertaking from entering upon or taking possession of the same, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to apply by petition to the sheriff for possession of the same, and upon such application the sheriff may authorize and order possession of any such lands accordingly; and the expenses accruing by reason of such application, to be settled and decreed for by the sheriff, shall be paid by the person wrongfully refusing to give or hindering possession; and the amount of such expenses shall be deducted and retained by the promoters of the undertaking from the compensation, if any, then payable by them to such party; or if no such compensation be payable to such party, or if the same be less than the amount of such expenses, then such expenses, or the excess thereof beyond such compensation, if not paid on demand, may be levied by pouncing and sale, and the sheriff may issue his warrant accordingly.

xc. That no party shall at any time be required to sell or convey to the promoters of the undertaking a part only of any house or other building or manufactory, if such party be willing and able to sell and convey the whole thereof.

xcI. And with respect to small portions of intersected land,—it is enacted as follows: If any lands, not being situate in a town or built upon, shall be so cut through and divided by the works as to leave, either on both sides or on one side thereof, a less quantity of land than half a statute acre, and if the owner of such small parcel of land require the promoters of the undertaking to purchase the same along with the other land required for the purposes of the special Act, the promoters of the undertaking shall purchase the same accordingly, unless the owner thereof have other land adjoining to that so left into which the same can be thrown; and if such owner have any other land so adjoining, the promoters of the undertaking shall, if so required by the owner, at their own expense, throw the piece of land so left into such adjoining land, by removing the fences and levelling the sites thereof, and by soiling the same in a sufficient and workmanlike manner.

XCII. If any such land shall be so cut through and divided as to leave on either side of the works a piece of land of less extent than half a statute acre, or of less value than the expense of making a bridge, culvert, or such other communication between the land so divided as the promoters of the undertaking are, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, compellable to make, and if the owner of such lands have not other lands adjoining such piece of land, and require the promoters of the undertaking to make such communication, then the promoters of the undertaking may require such owner to sell to them such piece of land; and any dispute as to the value of such piece of land, or as to what would be the expense of making such communication, shall be ascertained as herein provided for cases of disputed compensation; and on the occasion of ascertaining the value of the land required to be taken for the purposes of the works, the sheriff, or the jury, or the arbiters, as the case may be, shall, if required by either party, ascertain by their verdict or award the value of any such severed piece of land, and also what would be the expense of making such communication.

XCIII. And with respect to such lands as shall be of the nature of common, it is enacted as follows: The promoters of the undertaking may convene a meeting of the parties entitled to any rights of property or servitude, or other rights, in or over such lands, to be held at some convenient place in the neighbourhood of the lands, for the purpose of their appointing a committee to treat with the promoters of the undertaking for the compensation to be paid for the extinction of such rights; and every such meeting shall be called by public advertisement, to be inserted once at least in two consecutive weeks in some newspaper circulating in the county or in the respective counties and in the neighbourhood in which such lands shall be situate, the last of such insertions being not more than fourteen nor less than seven days prior to any such meeting; and notice of such meeting shall also, not less than seven days previous to the holding thereof, be affixed upon the door of the church of the parish where such meeting is intended to be held, or, if there be no such church, some other place in the neighbourhood to which notices are usually affixed; and if such lands be part of a barony a like notice shall be given to the superior or baron.

XCIV. The meeting so called may appoint a committee, not exceeding five in number, of the parties entitled to any such rights; and at such meeting the decision of the majority of the persons entitled to such rights present shall bind the minority and all absent parties; but such meeting shall not be effectual for the purpose unless five at least of the parties entitled attend the same, if there be so many as five in all of the parties entitled to such rights.

XCV. It shall be lawful for the committee so chosen to enter into an agreement with the promoters of the undertaking for the compensation to be paid for the extinction of such rights, and all matters relating thereto, for and on behalf of themselves and all other parties interested therein, and all such parties shall be bound by such agreement, and it shall be lawful for such committee to receive the compensation so agreed to be paid; and the receipt of such committee, or of any three of them, for such compensation, shall be an effectual discharge for the same; and such compensation, when received, shall be apportioned by the committee among the several persons interested therein, according to their respective interests; but the promoters of the undertaking shall not be bound to see to the apportionment or to the application of such compensation, nor shall they be liable for the mis-application or non-application thereof.

XCVI. If upon such committee being appointed they shall fail to agree with the promoters of the undertaking as to the amount of the compensation to be paid as aforesaid, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation, the said committee being deemed and held to be the proprietors of the said rights, with reference to all proceedings for ascertaining the value thereof.

XCVII. If, upon being duly convened by the promoters of the undertaking, no effectual meeting of the parties entitled to such rights shall take place, or if, taking place, such meeting fail to appoint such committee, the amount of such compensation shall be determined by a valuator, to be appointed by the sheriff as hereinbefore provided in the case of parties who cannot be found.

XCVIII. Upon payment or tender to such committee, or any three of them, or if there shall be no such committee, then upon deposit in the Bank in the manner provided in the like case of the compensation which shall have been agreed upon or determined in respect of such rights, and it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to execute a disposition, duly stamped, in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them, and thereupon the lands in respect of which such compensation shall have been so paid or deposited shall vest in the promoters of the undertaking freed and discharged from all such rights, and they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof; and it shall be lawful for the court of session, by an order made upon petition, to order payment of the money so deposited as aforesaid, and to make such other order in respect thereto, for the benefit of the parties interested, as it shall think fit.

XCIX. And with respect to lands subject to any security by real lien, wadset, heritable bond, redeemable bond of annuity, or other right in security, it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to purchase or redeem the interest of any holder of any security upon such lands the whole or part of which may be required for the purposes of the special Act, and that whether such promoters shall have previously purchased the right to such lands under burden of the security thereon or not, and whether the holder of such security be entitled thereto in his own right or in trust for any other party, and whether he be in possession of such lands by virtue of such security or not, and whether such security affect such lands solely, or jointly with any other lands not required for the purposes of the special Act; and in order thereto the promoters of the undertaking may pay or tender to the holder of such security the principal and interest due on such security, together with his expenses and charges, if any, and also six months' additional interest, and thereupon such holder shall immediately convey his interest in the lands comprised in such security to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct; or the promoters of the undertaking may give notice in writing to such holder that they will pay off the principal and interest due on such security at the end of six months, computed from the day of giving such notice; and if they shall have given any such notice, or if the party entitled to the lands under burden of such security shall have given six months' notice of his intention to redeem the same, then, at the expiration of either of such notices, or at any intermediate period, upon payment or tender by the promoters of the undertaking to the holder of such security of the principal money thereon due, and the interest which would become due at the end of six months from the time of giving either of such notices, together with his expenses and charges, if any, such holder shall convey or discharge his interest in the lands comprised in such security to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct.

c. If, in either of the cases aforesaid, upon such payment or tender, any holder of such securities shall fail to convey or discharge his interest therein as directed by the promoters of the undertaking, or if he fail to adduce a good title thereto, then it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to deposit in the Bank, in the manner provided by this Act in like cases, the principal and interest, together with the expenses, if any, due on such security, and also, if such payment be made before the expiration of six months' notice as aforesaid, such further interest as would at that time become due; and it shall be lawful for them, if they think fit, to expedite an instrument under the hands of a notary public, duly stamped, and to register the same in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them; and thereupon, as well as upon such conveyance by the holder of the security, if any such be made, all the estate and interest of such holder, and of all persons in trust for him, or for whom he may be a trustee, in such lands, shall vest in the promoters of the undertaking, and they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof in case such holder were himself entitled to such possession.

cl. If any such lands subject to such security as aforesaid shall be of less value than the principal, interest, and expenses secured thereon, the value of such lands, or the compensation to be made by the promoters of the undertaking in respect thereof, shall be settled by agreement between the holder of such security and the party claiming or entitled to the lands under burden on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part; and if the parties aforesaid fail to agree respecting the amount of such value or compensation the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation; and the amount of such value or compensation, being so agreed upon or determined, shall be paid by the promoters of the undertaking to the holder of the security, in satisfaction of his claim, so far as the same will extend; and upon payment or tender thereof such holder shall, at the expense of the promoters of the undertaking, dispoise and assign his debt, so far as paid, and his security, and all his interest in such lands, to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct, and thereupon the party claiming or entitled to the said lands under burden of the security shall cease to be interested in or have any right thereto, or to any part thereof.

cII. If upon such payment or tender as aforesaid being made any holder of such security fail so to convey his interest therein, or to adduce a good title thereto to the promoters of the undertaking, it shall be lawful for them to deposit the amount of such value or compensation in the Bank in the manner provided by this Act in like cases; and every such payment or deposit shall be accepted by the holder of the security in satisfaction of his claim, so far as the same will extend, and shall be a full discharge of the lands from all money due thereon; and it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to expedite an instrument under the hands of a notary public, duly stamped, and to register the same in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them; and thereupon such lands, as to all such right and interest as were then vested in the holder of the security, or any person in trust for him, or in the party claiming or entitled to the lands under burden of the security, shall become absolutely vested in the promoters of the undertaking, and they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof; nevertheless, all rights and remedies possessed by the holder of such security for recovering payment of his debt, or the residue thereof, (as the case may be,) or the interest thereof respectively, and all expenses, shall remain in force as a claim against the grantor of such security, and against all other parties bound for the same, but not as a claim on the said lands, or against the promoters of the undertaking.

cIII. If a part only of any such lands subject to any security as aforesaid be required for the purposes of the special Act, and if the part so required be of less value than the principal money, interest, and costs secured on such lands, and the holder of the security shall not consider the remaining part of such lands a sufficient security for the money charged thereon, or be not willing to discharge the part so required, and if the promoters of the undertaking be unwilling to advance the debt on an assignment thereto, then the value of such part, and also the compensation (if any) to be paid in respect of the severance thereof, or otherwise, shall be settled by agreement between the holder of the security and the party entitled to the land under burden of the security on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other; and if the parties aforesaid fail to agree respecting the amount of such value or compensation, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation; and the amount of such value or compensation, being so agreed upon or determined, shall be paid by the promoters of the undertaking to the holder of the security, in satisfaction of his debt, so far as the same will extend, and thereupon such holder shall convey or discharge to them, or as they shall direct, all his interest in such lands the value whereof shall have been so paid, and the party claiming or entitled to the said lands under burden of the security shall cease to be interested in or have any right thereto or to any part thereof; and a memorandum of what shall have been so paid shall be indorsed on the deed or instrument creating such security, and shall be signed by the holder thereof; and a copy of such memorandum shall at the same time (if required) be furnished by the promoters of the undertaking, at their expense, to the party entitled to the lands under burden of the security.

cIV. If upon payment or tender to any holder of such security of the amount of the value or compensation so agreed upon or determined such holder shall fail to convey or discharge to the promoters of the undertaking, or as they shall direct, his interest in the lands in respect of which such compensation shall so have been paid or tendered, or if he shall fail to adduce good title thereto, it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to pay the amount of such value or compensation to the Bank in the manner provided by this Act in the case of monies required to be deposited in such Bank; and such payment or deposit shall be accepted by the holder of such security in satisfaction of his claim, so far as the same will extend, and shall be a full discharge of the portion of the lands so required from all money due thereon, and shall bar the claim of the party claiming or entitled to the said lands under burden of the security; and it shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking, if they think fit, to expedite an instrument under the hands of a notary public, duly stamped, and to register the same in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them, and thereupon such lands shall become absolutely vested in the promoters of the undertaking, as to all such right and interest as were then vested in the holder of such security, or any person in trust for him, and in case such holder were himself entitled to such possession they shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof; nevertheless, every such holder shall have the same powers and remedies for recovering or compelling payment of his claim, or the residue thereof, (as the case may be,) and the interest thereof respectively, upon and out of the residue of the lands subject to such security, or the portion thereof not required for the purposes of the special Act, as he would otherwise have had or been entitled to for recovering or compelling payment thereof upon or out of the whole of the lands originally comprised in such security.

CV. Provided always, That in any of the cases hereinbefore provided with respect to lands subject to securities, if in the deed or instrument creating the same a time shall have been limited within which the holder of the security shall not be obliged to receive payment of the principal money thereby secured, and under the provisions hereinbefore contained the holder of the security shall have been required to accept payment of his claim, or of part thereof, at a time earlier than the time so limited, the promoters of the undertaking shall pay to the holders of the security, in addition to the sum which shall have been so paid off, all such expenses as shall be incurred by him in respect of or which shall be incidental to the re-investment of the sum so paid off; such expenses, in case of difference, to be taxed, and payment thereof enforced, in the manner herein provided with respect to the expenses of conveyances.

CVI. If the rate of interest secured by such deed be higher than at the time of the same being so paid off can reasonably be expected to be obtained on re-investing the same, regard being had to the then current rate of interest, the holder of such security shall be entitled to receive from the promoters of the undertaking, in addition to the principal and interest hereinbefore provided for, compensation in respect of the loss to be sustained by him by reason of his claim being so prematurely paid off, the amount of such compensation to be ascertained, in case of difference, as in other cases of disputed compensation; and until payment or tender of such compensation as aforesaid the promoters of the undertaking shall not be entitled, as against such holder, to possession of the lands under the provision hereinbefore contained.

CVII. And with respect to any lands which shall be charged with any feu duty, ground annual, casualty of superiority, or any rent or other annual or recurring payment or incumbrance not hereinbefore provided for,—it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the promoters of the undertaking to enter upon and continue in possession of such lands, without redeeming the charges thereon, provided they pay the amount of such annual or recurring payment when due, and otherwise fulfil all obligations accordingly, and provided they shall not be called upon by the party entitled to the charge to redeem the same.

CVIII. If any difference shall arise between the promoters of the undertaking and the party entitled to any such charge upon any lands required to be taken for the purposes of the special Act, respecting the consideration to be paid for the discharge of such lands therefrom, or from the portion thereof affecting the lands required for the purposes of the special Act, the same shall be determined as in other cases of disputed compensation.

CIX. If part only of the lands charged with any such feu duty, ground annual, casualty of superiority, or any rent, payment, or incumbrance, be required to be taken for the purposes of the special Act, the apportionment of any such charge may be settled by agreement between the party entitled to such charge and the owner of the lands on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and if such apportionment be not so settled by agreement the same shall be settled by the sheriff; but if the remaining part of the lands so jointly subject be a sufficient security for such charge, then, with consent of the owner of the lands so jointly subject, it shall be lawful for the party entitled to such charge to discharge therefrom the lands required, on condition or in consideration of such other lands remaining exclusively subject to the whole thereof.

CX. Upon payment or tender of the compensation so agreed upon or determined to the party entitled to any such charge as aforesaid, such party shall execute to the promoters of the undertaking a discharge thereof; and if he fail so to do, or if he fail to adduce a good title to such charge, it shall be lawful for them to deposit the amount of such compensation in the Bank in the manner hereinbefore provided in like cases; and also, if they think fit, to expedite an instrument under the hands of a notary public, duly stamped, and to register the same in the manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the purchase of lands by them; and thereupon the feu duty, ground annual, casualty of superiority, rent, payment, or incumbrance, or the portion thereof in respect whereof such compensation shall so have been paid, shall cease and be extinguished.

CXI. If any such lands be so discharged from any such charge or incumbrance, or portion thereof, to which they were subject jointly with other lands, such last-mentioned lands shall alone be charged with the whole of such charge, or with the remainder thereof, as the case may be, and the party entitled to the charge shall have all the same rights and remedies over such last-mentioned lands, for the whole or for the remainder of the charge, as the case may be, as he had previously over the whole of the lands subject to such charge; and upon any such charge or portion of charge being so discharged the promoters of the undertaking, if required so to do, shall execute and grant in due form a probative deed or instrument, declaring what part of the lands originally subject to such charge shall have been purchased by virtue of the special Act, and if the lands be discharged from part of such charge, what proportion of such charge shall have been discharged, and how much thereof continues payable, or if the lands so required shall have been discharged from the whole of such charge, then that the remaining lands are thenceforward to remain exclusively charged therewith; and such deed or instrument shall be made and executed at the expense of the promoters of the undertaking, and shall be competent evidence in all courts and elsewhere of the facts therein stated.

CXII. And with respect to lands subject to leases,—it is enacted as follows: If any lands shall be comprised in a lease or missive of lease for a term of years unexpired, part only of which lands shall be required for the purposes of the special Act, the rent payable in respect of the lands comprised in such lease or missive of lease shall be apportioned between the lands so required and the residue of such lands, and such apportionment may be settled by agreement between the lessor and lessee of such lands on the one part, and the promoters of the undertaking on the other part, and if such apportionment be not so settled by agreement between the parties such apportionment shall be settled by the sheriff; and after such apportionment the lessee of such lands shall, as to all future accruing rent, be liable only to so much of the rent as shall be so apportioned in respect of the lands not required for the purposes of the special Act; and as to the lands not so required, and as against the lessee, the lessor shall have all the same rights and remedies for the recovery of such portion of rent as previously to such apportionment he had for the recovery of the whole rent reserved by such lease or missive of lease; and all the obligations, conditions, and agreements of such lease or missive of lease, except as to the amount of rent to be paid, shall remain in force with regard to that part of the land which shall not be required for the purposes of the special Act, in the same manner as they would have been in case such part only of the land had been included in the lease or missive of lease.

CXIII. Every such lessee as last aforesaid shall be entitled to receive from the promoters of the undertaking compensation for the damage done to him in his tenancy by reason of the severance of the lands required from those not required, or otherwise by reason of the execution of the works.

CXIV. If any such lands shall be in the possession of any person having no greater interest therein than as tenant for a year or from year to year, and if such person be required to give up possession of any lands so occupied by him before the expiration of his term or interest therein, he shall be entitled to compensation for the value of his unexpired term or interest in such lands, and for any just allowance which ought to be made to him by any in-coming tenant, and for any loss or injury he may sustain, or if a part only of such lands be required, compensation for the damage done to him in his tenancy by the severing of the lands held by him, or otherwise injuriously affecting the same, and the amount of such compensation shall be determined by the sheriff, in case the parties differ about the same; and upon payment or tender of the amount of such compensation all such persons shall respectively deliver up to the promoters of the undertaking, or to the person appointed by them to take possession thereof, any such lands in their possession required for the purposes of the special Act.

CXV. If any party, having a greater interest than as tenant for a year or from year to year, claim compensation in respect of any unexpired term or interest under any lease, missive of lease, or grant of any such lands, the promoters of the undertaking may require such party to produce the lease, missive of lease, or grant in respect of which such claim shall be made, or other legal evidence thereof in his power; and if, after demand made in writing by the promoters of the undertaking, such lease, missive of lease, or grant, or other legal evidence thereof, be not produced within twenty-one days, the party so claiming compensation shall be considered as a tenant holding only from year to year, and be entitled to compensation accordingly.

CXVI. That the powers of the promoters of the undertaking for the compulsory purchase or taking of lands for the purposes of the special Act shall not be exercised after the expiration of the prescribed period, and if no period be prescribed not after the expiration of three years from the passing of the special Act.

CXVII. And with respect to interest in lands which have by mistake been omitted to be purchased,—it is enacted as follows: If at any time after the promoters of the undertaking shall have entered upon any lands which under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, they were authorized to purchase, and which shall be permanently required for the purposes of the special Act, any party shall appear to be entitled to any estate, right, or interest in or charge affecting such lands which the promoters of the undertaking shall through mistake or inadvertency have failed or omitted duly to purchase or to pay compensation for, then, whether the period allowed for the purchase of lands shall have expired or not, the promoters of the undertaking shall remain in the undisturbed possession of such lands, provided, within six months after notice of such estate, right, interest, or charge, in case the same shall not be disputed by the promoters of the undertaking, or in case the same shall be disputed, then within six months after the right thereto shall have been finally established by law in favour of the party claiming the same, the promoters of the undertaking shall purchase or pay compensation for the same, and shall also pay to such party, or to any other party who may establish a right thereto, full compensation for the profits or interest which would have accrued to such parties respectively in respect thereof during the interval between the entry of the promoters of the undertaking thereon and the time of the payment of such purchase-money or compensation by the promoters of the undertaking, so far as such profits or interest may be recoverable in law; and such purchase-money or compensation shall be agreed on or awarded and paid in like manner as according to the provisions of this Act the same respectively would have been agreed on or awarded and paid in case the promoters of the undertaking had purchased such estate, right, interest, or charge before their entering upon such land, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit.

CXVIII. In estimating the compensation to be given for any such last-mentioned lands, or any estate or interest in the same, or for any profits thereof, the jury, or arbiters, or sheriff, as the case may be, shall assess the same according to what they shall find to have been the value of such lands, estate, or interest, and profits, at the time such lands were entered upon by the promoters of the undertaking, and without regard to any improvements or works made in the said lands by the promoters of the undertaking, and as though the works had not been constructed.

CXIX. In addition to the said purchase-money, compensation, or satisfaction, and before the promoters of the undertaking shall become absolutely entitled to any such estate, interest, or charge, or to have the same merged or extinguished for their benefit, they shall, when the right to any such estate, interest, or charge shall have been disputed by the company, and determined in favour of the party claiming the same, pay the full expenses of any proceedings at law or in equity for the determination or recovery of the same to the parties with whom any such litigation in respect thereof shall have taken place; and such expenses shall, in case the same shall be disputed, be settled by the proper officer of the court in which such litigation took place.

CXX. And with respect to lands acquired by the promoters of the undertaking, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, but which shall not be required for the purposes thereof,—it is enacted as follows: Within the prescribed period, or if no period be prescribed within ten years after the expiration of the time limited by the special Act for the completion of the works, the promoters of the undertaking shall absolutely sell and dispose of all such superfluous lands in such manner as they may deem most advantageous, and apply the purchase-money arising from such sales to the purposes of the special Act, and in default thereof all such superfluous lands remaining unsold at the expiration of such period shall thereupon vest in and become the property of the owners of the lands adjoining thereto in proportion to the extent of their lands respectively adjoining the same.

CXXI. Before the promoters of the undertaking dispose of any such superfluous lands they shall, unless such lands be situate within a town, or be lands built upon, or be used for building purposes, first offer to sell the same to the person then entitled to the lands (if any) from which the same were originally severed; or if such person refuse to purchase the same, or cannot, after diligent inquiry, be found, then the like offer shall be made to the person or to the several persons whose lands shall immediately adjoin the lands so proposed to be sold, such persons being capable of entering into a contract for the purchase of such lands; and where more than one such person shall be entitled to such right of pre-emption such offer shall be made to such persons in succession, one after another, in such order as the promoters of the undertaking shall think fit.

CXXII. If any such persons be desirous of purchasing such lands, then, within six weeks after such offer of sale, they shall signify their desire in that behalf to the promoters of the undertaking; or if they decline such offer, or if for six weeks they neglect to signify their desire to purchase such lands, the right of pre-emption of every such person so declining or neglecting, in respect of the lands included in such offer, shall cease; and a declaration in writing, made before the sheriff by some person not interested in the matter in question, stating that such offer was made, and was refused, or not accepted within six weeks from the time of making the same, or that the person or all the persons entitled to the right of pre-emption were out of the country, or could not, after diligent inquiry, be found, or were not capable of entering into a contract for the purchase of such lands, shall in all courts be sufficient evidence of the facts therein stated.

CXXIII. If any person entitled to such pre-emption be desirous of purchasing any such lands, and such person and the promoters of the undertaking do not agree as to the price thereof, then such price shall be ascertained by arbitration, and the expenses of such arbitration shall be in the discretion of the arbiters.

CXXIV. Upon payment or tender to the promoters of the undertaking of the purchase-money so agreed upon or determined as aforesaid they shall convey such lands to the purchasers thereof by deed, under the common seal of the promoters of the undertaking, if they be a corporation, or if not a corporation under the hands of the promoters of the undertaking or any two of the directors or managers thereof acting by the authority of the body; and a deed so executed shall be effectual to vest the lands comprised therein in the purchaser of such lands for the estate which shall so have been purchased by him, and a receipt under such common seal, or under the hands of two of the directors or managers of the undertaking, as aforesaid, shall be a sufficient discharge to the purchaser of any such lands for the purchase-money in such receipt expressed to be received.

CXXV. That in every conveyance of lands to be made by the promoters of the undertaking under this or the special Act the word "dispose" shall operate as a clause of absolute warranty by the promoters of the undertaking, for themselves and their successors, or for themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, as the case may be, to the respective disponees therein named, and the successors, heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of such disponees, according to the quality or nature of such conveyances, and of the estate or interest therein expressed to be thereby conveyed, except so far as the same shall be restrained or limited by express words contained in such conveyance.

CXXVI. That the rights and titles to be granted in manner herein mentioned in and to any lands taken and used for the purposes of this Act shall, unless otherwise specially provided for, in nowise affect or diminish the right of superiority in the same, which shall remain entire in the person granting such rights and titles; but in the event of the lands so used or taken being a part or portion of other lands held by the same owner under the same titles, the said company shall not be liable for any feu duties or casualties to the superiors thereof, nor shall the said company be bound to enter with the said superiors: Provided always, that before entering into possession of any lands full compensation shall be made to the said superiors for all loss which they may sustain by being deprived of any casualties, or otherwise by reason of any procedure under this Act.

CXXVII. That if the promoters of the undertaking become possessed, by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, of any lands charged with the land tax, or liable to be assessed to the poor's rate or prison assessment, they shall from time to time, until the works shall be completed and assessed to such land tax and poor's rate and prison assessment, be liable to make good the deficiency in the several assessments for land tax and poor's rate and prison assessment by reason of such lands having been taken or used for the purposes of the work; and such deficiency shall be computed according to the rental at which such lands, with any building thereon, were valued or rated at the time of the passing of the special Act; and on demand of such deficiency the promoters of the undertaking or their treasurer shall pay all such deficiencies to the collector of the said assessments respectively; nevertheless, if at any time the promoters of the undertaking think fit to redeem such land tax they may do so, in accordance with the powers in that behalf given by the Acts for the redemption of the land tax.

CXXVIII. And with respect to the giving of notices,—it is enacted as follows: Any summons or notice, or any writ or other proceeding at law or equity required to be served upon the promoters of the undertaking, may be served by the same being left at or transmitted through the post, directed to the principal office of the promoters of the undertaking, or one of the principal offices where there shall be more than one, or being given personally, or transmitted through the post, directed to the secretary, or in case there be no secretary then by being given to the solicitor of the said promoters.

CXXIX. That if any party shall have committed any irregularity, trespass, or other wrongful proceeding in the execution of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or by virtue of any power or authority thereby given, and if, before action brought in respect thereof, such party make tender of sufficient amends to the party injured, such last-mentioned party shall not recover in any such action; and if no such tender shall have been made it shall be lawful for the defender, by leave of the Court where such action shall be pending, at any time before the record is closed to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit, and thereupon such proceedings shall be had as in other cases where defenders are allowed to pay money into court.

CCXX. And with respect to the recovery of forfeitures, penalties, and expenses,—it is enacted as follows : Every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or by any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before the sheriff or two Justices ; and on complaint being made to any sheriff or Justice he shall issue an order requiring the party complained against to appear before himself, if the order be issued by a sheriff, or before two or more Justices, if the order be issued by a Justice, at a time and place to be named in such order ; and every such order shall be served on the party offending either in person or by leaving the same with some inmate at his usual place of abode ; and upon the appearance of the party complained against, or in his absence, after proof of the due service of such order, it shall be lawful for any sheriff or two Justices to proceed to the hearing of the complaint ; and upon proof of the offence, either by the confession of the party complained against, or upon the oath of one credible witness or more, it shall be lawful for such sheriff or Justices to convict the offender, and upon such conviction to adjudge the offender to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, as well as such expenses attending the conviction as such sheriff or Justices shall think fit.

CCXXI. If forthwith upon any such adjudication as aforesaid the amount of the penalty or forfeiture, and of such expenses as aforesaid, be not paid, the amount of such penalty and expenses may be levied by pouncing and sale, and such sheriff or Justices shall issue his or their warrant of pouncing and sale accordingly.

CCXXII. If any such sum shall be payable by the promoters of the undertaking, and if sufficient goods of the said promoters cannot be found whereon to levy the same, it may, if the amount thereof do not exceed 20*l.*, be recovered by pouncing and sale of the goods of the treasurer of the said promoters, and the sheriff, on application, shall issue his warrant accordingly ; but no such pouncing and sale shall be executed against the goods of such treasurer unless seven days previous notice in writing, stating the amount so due, and demanding payment thereof, have been given to such treasurer, or left at his residence ; and if such treasurer pay any money under such pouncing and sale as aforesaid he may retain the amount so paid by him, and all expenses occasioned thereby, out of any money belonging to the promoters of the undertaking coming into his custody or controul, or he may sue the promoters of the undertaking for the same.

CCXXIII. Where in this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any sum of money, whether in the nature of penalty, expenses, or otherwise, is directed to be levied by pouncing and sale, such sum of money shall be levied by pouncing and sale of the goods and effects of the party liable to pay the same, and the overplus arising from the sale of such goods and effects, after satisfying such sum of money, and the expenses of the pouncing and sale, shall be returned, on demand, to the party whose goods shall have been seized.

CCXXIV. No pouncing and sale made by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be deemed unlawful, nor shall any party making the same be deemed a trespasser or wrongdoer, on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, warrant, or other proceeding relating thereto, but all persons aggrieved by such defect or irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action before the sheriff court.

CCXXV. The sheriff or Justices by whom any such penalty or forfeiture shall be imposed, where the application thereof is not otherwise provided for, may award not more than one-half thereof to the informer, and shall award the remainder to the kirk session, or treasurer or collector of the funds for the poor, of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed, for the benefit of the poor of such parish.

CCXXVI. No person shall be liable to the payment of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, for any offence made cognizable before the sheriff or Justices, unless the complaint respecting such offence shall have been made before such sheriff or some Justice within six months next after the commission of such offence.

CCXXVII. The sheriff or Justice or Justices before whom any person shall be convicted of any offence against this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, may cause the conviction to be drawn up according to the form in the Schedule (C.) to this Act annexed.

CCXXVIII. No proceeding in pursuance of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, nor shall the same be removed by suspension or otherwise into any superior court.

CCXXIX. In all cases which may come before any sheriff substitute under this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, in which written pleadings shall have been allowed, and a written record shall have been made up, and where the evidence which has been led by the parties shall have been reduced to writing, but in no other case whatever, it shall be competent for any of the parties thereto, within seven days after a final judgment shall have been pronounced by such sheriff substitute, to appeal against the same to the sheriff of the county, by lodging a minute of appeal with the sheriff clerk of such county or his deputy ; and the said sheriff shall thereupon review the proceedings of the said sheriff substitute, and whole process, and, if he think proper, hear the parties viâ voce thereon, and pronounce judgment ; and such judgment shall in no case be subject to review by suspension or advocacy, or by reduction on any ground whatever.

CXL. If any party shall feel aggrieved by any determination or adjudication of any Justice or two or more Justices, with respect to any penalty or forfeiture under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, such party may appeal to the General Quarter Sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal shall have arisen ; but no such appeal shall be entertained unless it be made within four months next after the making of such determination or adjudication, nor unless ten days' notice in writing of such appeal, stating the nature and grounds thereof, be given to the party against whom the appeal shall be brought, nor unless the appellant forthwith after such notice enter into recognizances, with two sufficient sureties, before a Justice, conditioned duly to prosecute such appeal, and to abide the order of the Court thereon.

CXLI. At the Quarter Sessions for which such notice shall be given the Court shall proceed to hear and determine the appeal in a summary way, or they may, if they think fit, adjourn it to the following sessions; and upon the hearing of such appeal the Court may, if they think fit, mitigate any penalty or forfeiture, or they may confirm or quash the adjudication, and order any money paid by the appellant, or levied by distress upon his goods, to be returned to him, and may also order such further satisfaction to be made to the party injured as they may judge reasonable, and they may make such order concerning the expenses, both of the adjudication and of the appeal, as they may think reasonable.

CXLII. And with respect to the provision to be made for affording access to the special Act by all parties interested,—it is enacted as follows: The company shall at all times, after the expiration of six months after the passing of the special Act, keep in their principal office of business a copy of the special Act, printed by the printers to Her Majesty, or some of them; and where the undertaking shall be a railway, canal, or other like undertaking, the works of which shall not be confined to one county, shall also within the space of such six months deposit in the office of each of the sheriff clerks of the several counties into which the works shall extend a copy of such special Act, so printed as aforesaid; and the said sheriff clerks shall receive, and they and the company respectively shall retain, the said copies of the special Act, and shall permit all persons interested to inspect the same, and make extracts or copies therefrom, in the like manner and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided in the case of certain plans and sections by an Act, 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 83, intituled, 'An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties and other Persons to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament.'

CXLIII. If the company shall fail to keep or deposit, as hereinbefore mentioned, any of the said copies of the special Act, they shall forfeit 20*l.* for every such offence, and also 5*l.* for every day afterwards during which such copy shall be not so kept or deposited.

CXLIV. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in the present session of Parliament.

By this Act,

After reciting that it is expedient to comprise in one general Act sundry provisions usually introduced into Acts of Parliament authorizing the construction of railways, and that as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in each of the several Acts relating to such undertakings as for insuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves: And that a bill is now pending in Parliament, intituled 'An Act for consolidating in One Act certain Provisions usually inserted in Acts authorizing the taking of Lands for Undertakings of a public Nature,' and which is intended to be called 'The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845:'

It is Enacted,

1. That this Act shall apply to every railway which shall by any Act which shall hereafter be passed be authorized to be constructed, and this Act shall be incorporated with such Act; and all the clauses and provisions of this Act, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by any such Act, shall apply to the undertaking authorized thereby, so far as the same shall be applicable to such undertaking, and shall, as well as the clauses and provisions of every other Act which shall be incorporated with such Act, form part of such Act, and be construed, together therewith, as forming one Act.

II. And with respect to the construction of this Act and of other Acts to be incorporated therewith,—it is enacted as follows: The expression “the special Act,” used in this Act, shall be construed to mean any Act which shall be hereafter passed authorizing the construction of a railway, and with which this Act shall be so incorporated as aforesaid; and the word “prescribed,” used in this Act in reference to any matter herein stated, shall be construed to refer to such matter as the same shall be prescribed or provided for in the special Act, and the sentence in which such word shall occur shall be construed as if, instead of the word “prescribed,” the expression “prescribed for that purpose in the special Act” had been used; and the expression “the lands” shall mean the lands which shall by the special Act be authorized to be taken or used for the purposes thereof; and the expression “the undertaking” shall mean the railway and works, of whatever description, by the special Act authorized to be executed.

III. The following words and expressions, both in this and the special Act, shall have the meanings hereby assigned to them unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; (that is to say,)

Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number, and words importing the plural number only shall include also the singular number:

Words importing the masculine gender only shall include females:

The word “Lands” shall include messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments of any tenure:

The word “Lease” shall include an agreement for a lease:

The word “Toll” shall include any rate or charge or other payment payable under the special Act for any passenger, animal, carriage, goods, merchandise, articles, matters, or things conveyed on the railway:

The word “Goods” shall include things of every kind conveyed upon the railway:

The word “Month” shall mean calendar month:

The expression “Superior Courts” shall mean Her Majesty’s superior courts of record at Westminster or Dublin, as the case may require:

The word “Oath” shall include affirmation in the case of Quakers, or other declaration lawfully substituted for an oath in the case of any other persons exempted by law from the necessity of taking an oath:

The word “County” shall include any riding or other like division of a county, and shall also include county of a city or county of a town:

The word “Sheriff” shall include under-sheriff, or other legally competent deputy; and where any matter in relation to any lands is required to be done by any sheriff, or clerk of the peace, the expression “the Sheriff,” or the expression “the Clerk of the Peace,” shall in such case be construed to mean the sheriff or the clerk of the peace of the county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or place where such lands shall be situate; and if the lands in question, being the property of one and the same party, be situate not wholly in one county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or place, the same expression shall be construed to mean the sheriff or clerk of the peace of any county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or place where any part of such lands shall be situate:

The word “Justice” shall mean Justice of the Peace acting for the county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or place where the matter requiring the cognizance of any such Justice shall arise, and who shall not be interested in the matter; and where such matter shall arise in respect of lands being the property of one and the same party, situate not wholly in any one county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or place, shall mean a Justice acting for the county, city, borough, liberty, cinque port, or place where any part of such lands shall be situate, and who shall not be interested in such matter; and where any matter shall be authorized or required to be done by two Justices, the expression “Two Justices” shall be understood to mean two Justices assembled and acting together:

Where under the provisions of this or the special Act, any notice shall be required to be given to the owner of any lands, or where any act shall be authorized or required to be done with the consent of any such owner, the word “Owner” shall be understood to mean any person or corporation who, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, would be enabled to sell and convey lands to the company:

The expression “the Company” shall mean the company or party which shall be authorized by the special Act to construct the railway:

The expression “the Railway” shall mean the railway and works by the special Act authorized to be constructed:

The expression “the Board of Trade” shall mean the lords of the committee of Her Majesty’s Privy Council appointed for trade and foreign plantations:

The expression “the Bank” shall mean the Bank of England where the same shall relate to monies to be paid or deposited in respect of lands situate in England, and shall mean the Bank of Ireland where the same shall relate to monies to be paid or deposited in respect of lands situate in Ireland:

The expression “Turnpike Road” shall, when applied to any road in Ireland, include any road upon which Her Majesty’s mails are or shall be carried in mail carriages; or such other roads as the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland shall consider to require arches of greater width or height than by this Act is required for public carriage roads:

The expression “Surveyor,” applied to a road or highway, shall, as to railways in Ireland, include the county surveyor: The expression “Overseers of the Poor,” when applied to Ireland, shall include the poor law guardians of the elector division and the clerk of the guardians of the union through which such railway may pass.

IV. That in citing this Act in other Acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression “The Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.”

And after reciting that it may be convenient, in some cases, to incorporate with Acts hereafter to be passed some parts only of the provisions of this Act;—

It is Enacted,

v. That, for the purpose of making any such incorporation, it shall be sufficient in any such Act to enact that the clauses of this Act with respect to the matter so proposed to be incorporated (describing such matter as it is described in this Act, in the words introductory to the enactment with respect to such matter), shall be incorporated with such Act, and thereupon all the clauses and provisions of this Act with respect to the matter so incorporated shall, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by such Act, form part of such Act, and such Act shall be construed as if the substance of such clauses and provisions were set forth therein with reference to the matter to which such Act shall relate.

vi. And with respect to the construction of the railway and the works connected therewith,—it is enacted as follows: In exercising the power given to the company by the special Act to construct the railway, and to take lands for that purpose, the company shall be subject to the provisions and restrictions contained in this Act and in the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act; and the company shall make to the owners and occupiers of and all other parties interested in any lands taken or used for the purposes of the railway, or injuriously affected by the construction thereof, full compensation for the value of the lands so taken or used, and for all damage sustained by such owners, occupiers, and other parties, by reason of the exercise, as regards such lands, of the powers by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, vested in the company; and, except where otherwise provided by this or the special Act, the amount of such compensation shall be ascertained and determined in the manner provided by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act for determining questions of compensation with regard to lands purchased or taken under the provisions thereof; and all the provisions of the said last-mentioned Act shall be applicable to determining the amount of any such compensation, and to enforcing the payment or other satisfaction thereof.

vii. If any omission, mis-statement, or erroneous description shall have been made of any lands, or of the owners, lessees, or occupiers of any lands, described on the plans or books of reference mentioned in the special Act, or in the Schedule to the special Act, it shall be lawful for the company, after giving ten days' notice to the owners of the lands affected by such proposed correction, to apply to two Justices for the correction thereof; and if it shall appear to such Justices that such omission, mis-statement, or erroneous description arose from mistake, they shall certify the same accordingly, and they shall in such certificate state the particulars of any such omission, and in what respect any such matter shall have been mis-stated or erroneously described; and such certificate shall be deposited with the clerks of the peace of the several counties in which the lands affected thereby shall be situate, and shall also be deposited with the parish clerks of the several parishes in England, and with the postmasters of the post towns in or nearest to such parishes in Ireland, in which the lands affected thereby shall be situate; and such certificate shall be kept by such clerks of the peace, parish clerks, and postmasters respectively along with the other documents to which they relate; and thereupon such plan, book of reference, or Schedule shall be deemed to be corrected according to such certificate; and it shall be lawful for the company to make the works in accordance with such certificate.

viii. It shall not be lawful for the company to proceed in the execution of the railway unless they shall have previously to the commencement of such work deposited with the clerks of the peace of the several counties in or through which the railway is intended to pass a plan and section of all such alterations from the original plan and section as shall have been approved of by Parliament, on the same scale and containing the same particulars as the original plan and section of the railway, and shall also have deposited with the clerks of the several parishes in England, and the postmasters of the post towns in or nearest to such parishes in Ireland, in or through which such alterations shall have been authorized to be made, copies or extracts of or from such plans and sections as shall relate to such parishes respectively.

ix. The said clerks of the peace, parish clerks, and postmasters shall receive the said plans and sections of alterations, and, copies and extracts thereof respectively, and shall retain the same, as well as the said original plans and sections, and shall permit all persons interested to inspect any of the documents aforesaid, and to make copies and extracts of and from the same, in the like manner, and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided in the case of the original plans and sections by an act 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 83, intituled, 'An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties and other Persons to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament.'

x. True copies of the said plans and books of reference, or of any alteration or correction thereof, or extract therefrom certified by any such clerk of the peace, which certificate such clerk of the peace shall give to all parties interested, when required, shall be received in all courts of justice or elsewhere as evidence of the contents thereof.

xi. In making the railway it shall not be lawful for the company to deviate from the levels of the railway, as referred to the common datum line described in the section approved of by Parliament, and as marked on the same, to any extent exceeding in any place five feet, or, in passing through a town, village, street, or land continuously built upon, two feet, without the previous consent in writing of the owners and occupiers of the land in which such deviation is intended to be made; or in case any street or public highway shall be affected by such deviation, then the same shall not be made without the like consent of the trustees or commissioners having the controul of such street or public highway, or, if there be no such trustees or commissioners, without the like consent of two or more Justices of the Peace in petty sessions assembled for that purpose, and acting for the district in which such street or public highway may be situated, or without the like consent of the commissioners for any public sewers, or the proprietors of any canal, navigation, gas works, or waterworks affected by such deviation: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the company to deviate from the said levels to a further extent without such consent as aforesaid, by lowering solid embankments or viaducts, provided that the requisite height of headway as prescribed by Act of Parliament be left for roads, streets, or canals passing under the same: provided also, that notice of every petty sessions to be holden for the purpose of obtaining such consent of two Justices as is hereinbefore required shall, fourteen days previous to the holding of such petty sessions, be given in some newspaper circulating in the county, and also be affixed upon the door of the parish church in which such deviation or alteration is intended to be made, or, if there be no church, some other place to which notices are usually affixed.

XII. Before it shall be lawful for the company to make any greater deviation from the level than five feet, or, in any town, village, street, or land continuously built upon, two feet, after having obtained such consent as aforesaid, it shall be incumbent on the company to give notice of such intended deviation by public advertisement, inserted once at least in two newspapers, or twice at least in one newspaper, circulating in the district or neighbourhood where such deviation is intended to be made, three weeks at least before commencing to make such deviation; and it shall be lawful for the owner of any lands prejudicially affected thereby, at any time before the commencement of the making of such deviation, to apply to the Board of Trade, after giving ten days' notice to the company, to decide whether, having regard to the interests of such applicants, such proposed deviation is proper to be made; and it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, if they think fit, to decide such question accordingly, and by their certificate in writing either to disallow the making of such deviation or to authorize the making thereof, either simply or with any such modification as shall seem proper to the Board of Trade; and after any such certificate shall have been given by the Board of Trade it shall not be lawful for the company to make such deviation, except in conformity with such certificate.

XIII. Where in any place it is intended to carry the railway on an arch or arches or other viaduct, as marked on the said plan or section, the same shall be made accordingly; and where a tunnel is marked on the said plan or section as intended to be made at any place, the same shall be made accordingly, unless the owners, lessees, and occupiers of the land in which such tunnel is intended to be made shall consent that the same shall not be so made.

XIV. It shall not be lawful for the company to deviate from or alter the gradients, curves, tunnels, or other engineering works described in the said plan or section, except within the following limits, and under the following conditions; (that is to say,)

Subject to the above provisions in regard to altering levels, it shall be lawful for the company to diminish the inclination or gradients of the railway to any extent, and to increase the said inclination or gradients as follows; (that is to say,) in gradients of an inclination not exceeding one in a hundred, to any extent not exceeding ten feet per mile, or to any further extent which shall be certified by the Board of Trade to be consistent with the public safety, and not prejudicial to the public interest; and in gradients of or exceeding the inclination of one in a hundred, to any extent not exceeding three feet per mile, or to any further extent which shall be so certified by the Board of Trade as aforesaid:

It shall be lawful for the company to diminish the radius of any curve described in the said plan to any extent which shall leave a radius of not less than half a mile, or to any further extent authorized by such certificate as aforesaid from the Board of Trade:

It shall be lawful for the company to make a tunnel, not marked on the said plan or section, instead of a cutting, or a viaduct instead of a solid embankment, if authorized by such certificate as aforesaid from the Board of Trade.

XV. It shall be lawful for the company to deviate from the line delineated on the plans so deposited, provided that no such deviation shall extend to a greater distance than the limits of deviation delineated upon the said plans, nor to a greater extent in passing through a town, village, or lands continuously built upon than ten yards, or elsewhere to a greater extent than one hundred yards from the said line, and that the railway by means of such deviation be not made to extend into the lands of any person, whether owner, lessee, or occupier, whose name is not mentioned in the books of reference, without the previous consent in writing of such person, unless the name of such person shall have been omitted by mistake, and the fact that such omission proceeded from mistake shall have been certified in manner herein or in the special Act provided for in cases of unintentional errors in the said books of reference.

XVI. Subject to the provisions and restrictions in this and the special Act, and any Act incorporated therewith, it shall be lawful for the company, for the purpose of constructing the railway, or the accommodation works connected therewith, herein-after mentioned, to execute any of the following works; (that is to say,)

They may make or construct in, upon, across, under, or over any lands, or any streets, hills, valleys, roads, railroads, or tramroads, rivers, canals, brooks, streams, or other waters, within the lands described in the said plans, or mentioned in the said books of reference or any correction thereof, such temporary or permanent inclined planes, tunnels, embankments, aqueducts, bridges, roads, ways, passages, conduits, drains, piers, arches, cuttings, and fences as they think proper;

They may alter the course of any rivers not navigable, brooks, streams, or watercourses, and of any branches of navigable rivers, such branches not being themselves navigable, within such lands, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining tunnels, bridges, passages, or other works over or under the same, and divert or alter, as well temporarily as permanently, the course of any such rivers or streams of water, roads, streets, or ways, or raise or sink the level of any such rivers or streams, roads, streets, or ways, in order the more conveniently to carry the same over or under or by the side of the railway, as they may think proper;

They may make drains or conduits into, through, or under any lands adjoining the railway, for the purpose of conveying water from or to the railway;

They may erect and construct such houses, warehouses, offices, and other buildings, yards, stations, wharfs, engines, machinery, apparatus, and other works and conveniences as they think proper;

They may from time to time alter, repair, or discontinue the before-mentioned works or any of them, and substitute others in their stead; and

They may do all other acts necessary for making, maintaining, altering, or repairing, and using the railway:

Provided always, that in the exercise of the powers by this or the special Act granted the company shall do as little damage as can be, and shall make full satisfaction in manner herein and in the special Act, and any Act incorporated therewith, provided, to all parties interested, for all damage by them sustained by reason of the exercise of such powers.

XVII. It shall not be lawful for the company to construct on the shore of the sea, or of any creek, bay, arm of the sea or navigable river communicating therewith, where and so far up the same as the tide flows and reflows, any work, or to construct any railway or bridge across any creek, bay, arm of the sea, or navigable river, where and so far up the same as the tide flows and reflows, without the previous consent of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, to be signified in writing under the hands of two of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works, and Buildings, and of the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral aforesaid for the time being, to be signified in writing under the hand of the secretary of the Admiralty, and then only according to such plan and under such restrictions and regulations as the said Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works, and Buildings, and the said Lord High Admiral, or the said Commissioners, may approve of, such approval being signified as last aforesaid; and where any such work, railway, or bridge shall have been constructed it shall not be lawful for the company at any time to alter or extend the same without obtaining, previously to making any such alteration or extension, the like consents or approvals; and if any such work, railway, or bridge shall be commenced or completed contrary to the provisions of this Act, it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works, and Buildings, or the said Lord High Admiral, or the said Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral, to abate and remove the same, and to restore the site thereof to its former condition, at the cost and charge of the company; and the amount thereof may be recovered in the same manner as a penalty is recoverable against the company.

XVIII. It shall be lawful for the company, for the purpose of constructing the railway, to raise, sink, or otherwise alter the position of any of the watercourses, water pipes, or gas pipes belonging to any of the houses adjoining or near to the railway, and also the mains and other pipes laid down by any company or society who may furnish the inhabitants of such houses or places with water or gas, and also to remove all other obstructions to such construction, so as the same respectively be done with as little detriment and inconvenience to such company, society, or inhabitants as the circumstances will admit, and be done under the superintendence of the company to which such water pipes or gas pipes belong, and of the several commissioners or trustees, or persons having controul of the pavements, sewers, roads, streets, highways, lanes, and other public passages and places within the parish or district where such mains, pipes, or obstructions shall be situate, or of their surveyor, if they or he think fit to attend, after receiving not less than forty-eight hours' notice for that purpose.

XIX. Provided always, That it shall not be lawful for the company to remove or displace any of the mains or pipes (other than private service pipes), syphons, plugs or other works belonging to any such company or society, or to do any thing to impede the passage of water or gas into or through such mains or pipes, until good and sufficient mains or pipes, syphons, plugs, and all other works necessary or proper for continuing the supply of water or gas as sufficiently as the same was supplied by the mains or pipes proposed to be removed or displaced, shall, at the expense of the company, have been first made and laid down in lieu thereof, and be ready for use, in a position as little varying from that of the pipes or mains proposed to be removed or displaced as may be consistent with the construction of the railway, and to the satisfaction of the surveyor or engineer of such water or gas company or society, or, in case of disagreement between such surveyor or engineer and the company, as a Justice shall direct.

XX. It shall not be lawful for the company to lay down any such pipes contrary to the regulations of any Act of Parliament relating to such water or gas company or society, or to cause any road to be lowered for the purposes of the railway, without leaving a covering of not less than eighteen inches from the surface of the road over such mains or pipes.

XXI. The company shall make good all damage done to the property of the water or gas company or society, by the disturbance thereof, and shall make full compensation to all parties for any loss or damage which they may sustain by reason of any interference with the mains, pipes, or works of such water or gas company or society, or with the private service pipes of any person supplied by them with water.

XXII. If it shall be necessary to construct the railway or any of the works over any mains or pipes of any such water or gas company or society, the company shall, at their own expense, construct and maintain a good and sufficient culvert over such main or pipe, so as to leave the same accessible for the purpose of repairs.

XXIII. If by any such operations as aforesaid the company shall interrupt the supply of any water or gas they shall forfeit 20*l.* for every day that such supply shall be so interrupted, and such penalty shall be appropriated to the benefit of the poor of the parish in which such obstruction shall occur, in such manner as the overseers of the poor of the parish shall direct.

XXIV. If any person wilfully obstruct any person acting under the authority of the company in the lawful exercise of their power, in setting out the line of the railway, or pull up or remove any poles or stakes driven into the ground for the purpose of so setting out the line of the railway, or deface or destroy any marks made for the same purpose, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l.* for every such offence.

XXV. And after reciting that there are large tracts of land in Ireland subject to flood and injury by water, and the rivers, streams, and watercourses are in many places obstructed by shoals, insufficient bridges, culverts, weirs, and other works, whereby the waters thereof are elevated above their natural level: and the passing of an Act 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 57, intituled 'An Act to empower Landed Proprietors in Ireland to sink, embank, and remove Obstructions in Rivers:' and another Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 89, intituled 'An Act to promote the Drainage of Lands, and Improvement of Navigation and Water Power in connexion with such Drainage, in Ireland;' and that by the said last-mentioned Act public commissioners were appointed to carry the said last-recited Act into execution: and that it is essential, for carrying into effect the purposes of the said Acts, and for the improvement of agriculture, that ample provision be made in all railway works in Ireland for the free and uninterrupted passage of the waters at such level as will be sufficient not only for the present but all future discharge of the waters from lands crossed by or being on either side of such works, and that the bridges of railways crossing all watercourses, rivers, lakes, or estuaries which are or hereafter may be made navigable shall be so constructed as to admit of the commodious navigation of the same: Therefore, with respect to the provision to be made for the drainage of land in Ireland which may be crossed by the railway, and for the protection of the navigation connected therewith,—it is enacted as follows: If the special Act shall authorize the construction of a railway in Ireland, the company shall and they are hereby required, from time to time before proceeding to construct any portion of the railway, to submit to the commissioners acting in execution of the said Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 89, or any Act amending the same, such plans, sections, and surveys as shall be necessary to enable the said commissioners to decide upon the number and adequacy of the waterways of all bridges, culverts, tunnels, watercourses, and other works across the line of such portion as aforesaid of the railway, for the free and uninterrupted discharge of the waters from all lands crossed by or lying on either side of or near the railway, at such level as shall in the opinion of the said commissioners be sufficient for the present and prospective drainage and improvement of such lands, and (in cases of rivers, lakes, estuaries, or watercourses, which are now or may be capable of being made navigable) upon the height and adequacy of all bridges and works crossing the same, for the commodious navigation thereof.

XXVI. The said commissioners shall and they are hereby required, without any unnecessary delay, to investigate, by such means as to them shall seem fit, the adequacy of all such works for such purposes as aforesaid, and to decide and certify, by a writing under their hands, or the hands of any two of them, the number, situation, and least possible dimensions as to breadth, depth, and height of the several openings of such bridges, culverts, tunnels, or other works connected with such portion of the railway as aforesaid, which shall be necessary for the passage of water, or for navigation under or across such railway; and it shall not be lawful for the company to proceed with the execution of any of the works connected with any portion of the railway without having first obtained such a certificate as aforesaid respecting such portion of the railway, under the hands of the said commissioners or any two of them, as aforesaid; nor shall the company be at liberty to deviate from such certificate in respect to such works, nor to execute the same otherwise than in conformity therewith, without the previous approbation in writing of the said commissioners.

XXVII. It shall be lawful for the said commissioners to apply by petition in a summary way to the Court of Chancery, complaining of any omission on the part of the company to submit such plans, sections, and surveys to the said commissioners as aforesaid, or of the omission to construct any such bridge, culvert, tunnel, or other works for the passage of water, in such manner as shall be so certified by the said commissioners, and thereupon it shall be lawful for the said Court to direct such works to be made or constructed by the company in such manner as shall be conformable to the certificate of the said commissioners, and to the said Court shall seem necessary or proper, and to make from time to time such further or other order for restraining the company or any other persons from proceeding with any of the works connected with such portion of railway, except in conformity with the certificate of the said commissioners, and to issue any writ of injunction for the purpose aforesaid; and such Court shall have power to award costs to be paid by such company or persons.

XXVIII. Nothing in this or the special Act shall extend or be construed to prejudice or affect the powers or authorities of the commissioners acting in execution of the said Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 89, but all such powers shall be in full force as to the formation of any cut, river, or watercourse across the railway, but such powers shall not be exercised so as to prevent or obstruct the working or using of the railway.

And after reciting that it is expedient to encourage the establishment of manufactories to be worked by water power in Ireland;—

It is Enacted,—

XXIX. That whenever it may be requisite for the formation of a watercourse for manufacturing purposes to construct an arch, culvert, tunnel, or watercourse beneath or an aqueduct above any railway in Ireland, and that differences shall have arisen between the directors of such railway and the person interested in obtaining the water power, either as to the manner in which such works shall be executed, or the amount of compensation which should be paid, it shall be lawful to refer the questions in issue to the commissioners acting under the said recited Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 89, and their decision thereon shall be final and conclusive; and if the said commissioners shall be of opinion that the proposed works can be executed without injury to the railway, and if they shall think proper so to do, they may undertake the execution of so much of the said works as shall be in connexion with such railway, at the expense of the parties for whose benefit the watercourse shall be made, with the same powers and authorities as are given by the said Act for the execution of any works for drainage.

XXX. And with respect to the temporary occupation of lands near the railway during the construction thereof,—it is enacted as follows: Subject to the provisions herein and in the special Act contained, it shall be lawful for the company, at any time before the expiration of the period by the special Act limited for the completion of the railway, to enter upon and use any existing private road, being a road gravelled or formed with stones or other hard materials, and not being an avenue or a planted or ornamental road, or an approach to any mansion house, within the prescribed limits, if any, or, if no limits be prescribed, not being more than five hundred yards distant from the centre of the railway as delineated on the plans; but before the company shall enter upon or use any such existing road they shall give three weeks' notice of their intention to the owners and occupiers of such road, and of the lands over which the same shall pass, and shall in such notice state the time during which, and the purposes for which, they intend to occupy such road, and shall pay to the owners and occupiers of such road, and of the lands through which the same shall pass, such compensation for the use and occupation of such road, either in a gross sum of money or by half-yearly instalments, as shall be agreed upon between such owners and occupiers respectively and the company, or in case they differ about the compensation the same shall be settled by two Justices, in the same manner as any compensation not exceeding 50*l.* is directed to be settled by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.

XXXI. It shall be lawful for the owners and occupiers of any such road, and of the lands over which the same passes, within ten days after the service of the aforesaid notice, by notice in writing to the company to object to the company making use of such road, on the ground that other roads, such as the company are hereinbefore authorized to use for the purposes aforesaid, or that some public road, would be more fitting to be used for the same; and upon the objection being so made such proceedings may be had as are hereinafter mentioned with respect to lands temporarily occupied by the company, in respect of which three weeks' notice is hereinafter required to be given, and in the same manner as if the provisions relative to such proceedings the word road or roads, or the words road and the land over which the same passes, as the case may require, had been substituted in such provisions for the word lands.

XXXII. Subject to the provisions herein and in the special Act contained, it shall be lawful for the company, at any time before the expiration of the period by the special Act limited for the completion of the railway, without making any previous payment, tender, or deposit, to enter upon any lands within the prescribed limits, or, if no limits be prescribed, not being more than two hundred yards distant from the centre of the railway as delineated on the plans, and not being a garden, orchard, or plantation attached or belonging to a house, nor a park, planted walk, avenue, or ground ornamentally planted, and not being nearer to the mansion house of the owner of any such lands than the prescribed distance, or if no distance be prescribed, then not nearer than five hundred yards therefrom, and to occupy the said lands so long as may be necessary for the construction or repair of that portion of the railway, or of the accommodation works connected therewith, hereinafter mentioned, and to use the same for any of the following purposes; (that is to say,)

For the purpose of taking earth or soil by side cuttings therefrom;

For the purpose of depositing spoil thereon;

For the purpose of obtaining materials therefrom for the construction or repair of the railway or such accommodation works as aforesaid; or

For the purpose of forming roads thereon to or from or by the side of the railway:

And in exercise of the powers aforesaid it shall be lawful for the company to deposit and also to manufacture and work upon such lands materials of every kind used in constructing the railway, and also to dig and take from out of any such lands any clay, stone, gravel, sand, or other things that may be found therein useful or proper for constructing the railway or any such roads as aforesaid, and for the purposes aforesaid to erect thereon workshops, sheds, and other buildings of a temporary nature: Provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall exempt the company from an action for nuisance or other injury, if any done, in the exercise of the powers hereinbefore given, to the lands or habitations of any party other than the party whose lands shall be so taken or used for any of the purposes aforesaid: Provided also, that no stone or slate quarry, brick field, or other like place, which at the time of the passing of the special Act shall be commonly worked or used for getting materials therefrom for the purpose of selling or disposing of the same, shall be taken or used by the company, either wholly or in part, for any of the purposes lastly hereinbefore mentioned.

XXXIII. In case any such lands shall be required for spoil banks or for side cuttings, or for obtaining materials for the construction or repair of the railway, the company shall before entering thereon (except in the case of accident to the railway requiring immediate reparation) give three weeks' notice in writing to the owners and occupiers of such lands of their intention to enter upon the same for such purposes; and in case the said lands are required for any of the other purposes hereinbefore mentioned the company shall (except in the cases aforesaid) give ten days' like notice thereof, and the company shall in such notices respectively state the substance of the provisions hereinafter contained respecting the right of such owner or occupier to require the company to purchase any such lands, or to receive compensation for the temporary occupation thereof, as the case may be.

XXXIV. The said notice shall either be served personally on such owners and occupiers, or left at their last usual place of abode, if any such can, after diligent inquiry, be found, and in case any such owner shall be absent from the United Kingdom, or cannot be found after diligent inquiry, shall also be left with the occupier of such lands, or, if there be no such occupier, shall be affixed upon some conspicuous part of such lands.

XXXV. In any case in which a notice of three weeks is hereinbefore required to be given it shall be lawful for the owner or occupier of the lands therein referred to, within ten days after the service of such notice, by notice in writing to the company to object to the company making use of such lands, either on the ground that the lands proposed to be taken for the purposes aforesaid, or some part thereof, or of the materials contained therein, are essential to be retained by such owner, in order to the beneficial enjoyment of other neighbouring lands belonging to him, or on the ground that other lands lying contiguous or near to those proposed to be taken would be more fitting to be used for such purposes by the company; and upon objection being so made such proceedings may be had as hereinafter mentioned.

XXXVI. If the objection so made be on the ground that the lands proposed to be taken, or some part thereof, or of the materials contained therein, are essential to be retained by the owner in order to the beneficial enjoyment of other neighbouring lands belonging to him, it shall be lawful for any Justice, on the application of such owner, to summon the company to appear before two Justices at a time and place to be named in the summons, such time not being later than the expiration of the said twenty-one days' notice; and on the appearance of the company, or in their absence, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such Justices to inquire into the truth of such ground of objection; and if it appear to such Justices that for some special reason, to be stated in the order after mentioned, the lands so proposed to be taken, or any part thereof, or of the materials contained therein, are essential to be retained by the owner of such lands in order to the beneficial enjoyment of other neighbouring lands belonging to him, and ought not therefore to be taken or used by the company, it shall be lawful for such Justices, by writing under their hands, to order that the lands so proposed to be taken, or some part thereof, or of the materials contained therein, to be specified in such order shall not be taken or used by the company, and after service of such order on the company it shall not be lawful for them to take or use, without the previous consent in writing of the owner thereof, any of the lands or materials which by such order they are ordered not to take or use.

XXXVII. If the objection so made as aforesaid be on the ground that other lands lying contiguous to those proposed to be taken, and being sufficient in quantity, and such as the company are hereinbefore authorized to use for the purposes aforesaid, would be more fitting to be used by the company, and if in such case the company shall refuse to occupy such other lands in lieu of those mentioned in the notice, it shall be lawful for any Justice, on the application of such owner or occupier, to summon the company and the owners and occupiers of such other lands to appear before two Justices at a time and place to be named in such summons, such time not being more than fourteen days after such application nor less than seven days from the service of such summons; and on the appearance of the parties, or, in the absence of any of them, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such Justices to determine summarily which of the said lands shall be used by the company for the purposes aforesaid, and to authorize the company to occupy and use the same accordingly.

XXXVIII. If in the case last-mentioned it shall appear to such Justices, upon the inquiry before them, that the lands of any other party not summoned before them, being sufficient in quantity, and such as the company are hereinbefore authorized to take or use for the purposes aforesaid, would be more fitting to be used by the company than the lands of the person who shall have been so summoned as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said Justices to adjourn such inquiry, and to summon such other person to appear before them at any time, not being more than fourteen days from such inquiry, nor less than seven days from the service of such summons; and on the appearance of the parties, or, in the absence of any of them, on proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such Justices to determine finally which lands shall be used for the purposes aforesaid, and to authorize the company to occupy and use the same accordingly.

XXXIX. Before entering, under the provisions hereinbefore contained, upon any such lands as shall be required for spoil banks or for side cuttings, or for obtaining materials or forming roads as aforesaid, the company shall, if required by the owner or occupier thereof, seven days at least before the expiration of the notice to take such lands as hereinbefore mentioned, find two sufficient persons, to be approved of by a Justice, in case the parties differ, who shall enter into a bond to such owner or occupier in a penalty of such amount as shall be approved of by such Justice, in case the parties differ, conditioned for the payment of such compensation as may become payable in respect of the same in manner herein mentioned.

XL. Before the company shall use any such lands for any of the purposes aforesaid they shall, if required so to do by the owner or occupier thereof, separate the same by a sufficient fence from the lands adjoining thereto, with such gates as may be required by the said owner or occupier for the convenient occupation of such lands, and shall also, to all private roads used by them as aforesaid, put up fences and gates in like manner, in all cases where the same may be necessary to prevent the straying of cattle from or upon the lands traversed by such roads, and in case of any difference between the owners or occupiers of such roads and lands and the company as to the necessity for such fences and gates, such fences and gates as any two Magistrates shall deem necessary for the purposes aforesaid, on application being made to them in like manner as hereinbefore is provided in respect to the use of such roads.

XLI. That if any land shall be taken or used by the company, under the provisions of this or the special Act, for the purpose of getting materials therefrom for the construction or repair of the railway, or the accommodation works connected therewith, they shall work the same in such manner as the surveyor or agent of the owner of such land shall direct, or, in case of disagreement between such surveyor or agent and the company, in such manner as any Justice shall direct, on the application of either party, after notice of the hearing the application shall have been given to the other party.

XLII. In all cases in which the company shall in exercise of the powers aforesaid enter upon any lands for the purpose of making spoil banks or side cuttings thereon, or for obtaining therefrom materials for the construction or repair of the railway, it shall be lawful for the owners or occupiers of such lands, or parties having such estates or interests therein as, under the provisions in the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act mentioned, would enable them to sell or convey lands to the company, at any time during the possession of any such lands by the company, and before such owners or occupiers shall have accepted compensation from the company in respect of such temporary occupation, to serve a notice in writing on the company requiring them to purchase the said lands, or the estates and interests therein capable of being sold and conveyed by them respectively; and in such notice such owners or occupiers shall set forth the particulars of such their estate or interest in such lands, and the amount of their claim in respect thereof; and the company shall thereupon be bound to purchase the said lands, or the estate and interest therein capable of being sold and conveyed by the parties serving such notice.

XLIII. In any of the cases aforesaid, where the company shall not be required to purchase such lands, and in all other cases where they shall take temporary possession of lands by virtue of the powers herein or in the special Act granted, it shall be incumbent on the company, within one month after their entry upon such lands, upon being required so to do, to pay to the occupier of the said lands the value of any crop or dressing that may be thereon, as well as full compensation for any other damage of a temporary nature which he may sustain by reason of their so taking possession of his lands, and shall also from time to time during their occupation of the said lands pay half-yearly to such occupier or to the owner of the lands, as the case may require, a rent to be fixed by two Justices, in case the parties differ, and shall also within six months after they shall have ceased to occupy the said lands, and not later than six months after the expiration of the time by the special Act limited for the completion of the railway, pay to such owner and occupier, or deposit in the Bank for the benefit of all parties interested, as the case may require, compensation for all permanent or other loss, damage or injury that may have been sustained by them by reason of the exercise, as regards the said lands, of the powers herein or in the special Act granted, including the full value of all clay, stone, gravel, sand, and other things taken from such lands.

XLIV. The amount and application of the purchase-money and other compensation payable by the company in any of the cases aforesaid shall be determined in the manner provided by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act for determining the amount and application of the compensation to be paid for lands taken under the provisions thereof.

XLV. That it shall be lawful for the company, in addition to the lands authorized to be compulsorily taken by them under the powers of this or the special Act, to contract with any party willing to sell the same for the purchase of any land adjoining or near to the railway, not exceeding in the whole the prescribed number of acres for extraordinary purposes; (that is to say,)

For the purpose of making and providing additional stations, yards, wharfs, and places for the accommodation of passengers and for receiving, depositing, and loading or unloading goods or cattle to be conveyed upon the railway, and for the erection of weighing machines, toll houses, offices, warehouses, and other buildings and conveniences:

For the purpose of making convenient roads or ways to the railway, or any other purpose which may be requisite or convenient for the formation or use of the railway.

XLVI. And with respect to the crossing of roads, or other interference therewith,—it is enacted as follows: If the line of the railway cross any turnpike road or public highway, then (except where otherwise provided by the special Act) either such road shall be carried over the railway, or the railway shall be carried over such road, by means of a bridge, of the height and width and with the ascent or descent by this or the special Act in that behalf provided; and such bridge, with the immediate approaches, and all other necessary works connected therewith, shall be executed and at all times thereafter maintained at the expense of the company: Provided always, that, with the consent of two or more Justices in petty sessions, as after mentioned, it shall be lawful for the company to carry the railway across any highway, other than a public carriage road, on the level.

XLVII. If the railway cross any turnpike road or public carriage road on a level, the company shall erect and at all times maintain good and sufficient gates across such road, on each side of the railway where the same shall communicate therewith, and shall employ proper persons to open and shut such gates; and such gates shall be kept constantly closed across such road on both sides of the railway, except during the time when horses, cattle, carts, or carriages passing along the same shall have to cross such railway; and such gates shall be of such dimensions and so constructed as when closed to fence in the railway, and prevent cattle or horses passing along the road from entering upon the railway; and the person intrusted with the care of such gates shall cause the same to be closed as soon as such horses, cattle, carts, or carriages shall have passed through the same, under a penalty of 40s. for every default therein: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, in any case in which they are satisfied that it will be more conducive to the public safety that the gates on any level crossing over any such road should be kept closed across the railway, to order that such gates shall be kept so closed, instead of across the road, and in such case such gates shall be kept constantly closed across the railway, except when engines or carriages passing along the railway shall have occasion to cross such road, in the same manner and under the like penalty as above directed with respect to the gates being kept closed across the road.

XLVIII. Where the railway crosses any turnpike road on a level adjoining to a station, all trains on the railway shall be made to slacken their speed before arriving at such turnpike road, and shall not cross the same at any greater rate of speed than four miles an hour; and the company shall be subject to all such rules and regulations with regard to such crossings as may from time to time be made by the Board of Trade.

XLIX. Every bridge to be erected for the purpose of carrying the railway over any road shall (except where otherwise provided by the special Act) be built in conformity with the following regulations; (that is to say,)

The width of the arch shall be such as to leave thereunder a clear space of not less thirty-five feet if the arch be over a turnpike road, and of twenty-five feet if over a public carriage road, and of twelve feet if over a private road:

The clear height of the arch from the surface of the road shall not be less than sixteen feet for a space of twelve feet if the arch be over a turnpike road, and fifteen feet for a space of ten feet if over a public carriage road; and in each of such cases the clear height at the springing of the arch shall not be less than twelve feet:

The clear height of the arch for a space of nine feet shall not be less than fourteen feet over a private carriage road:

The descent made in the road in order to carry the same under the bridge shall not be more than one foot in thirty feet if the bridge be over a turnpike road, one foot in twenty feet if over a public carriage road, and one foot in sixteen feet if over a private carriage road, not being a tramroad or railroad, or if the same be a tramroad or railroad the descent shall not be greater than the prescribed rate of inclination, and if no rate be prescribed the same shall not be greater than as it existed at the passing of the special Act.

L. Every bridge erected for carrying any road over the railway shall (except as otherwise provided by the special Act) be built in conformity with the following regulations; (that is to say,)

There shall be a good and sufficient fence on each side of the bridge of not less height than four feet, and on each side of the immediate approaches of such bridge of not less than three feet:

The road over the bridge shall have a clear space between the fences thereof of thirty-five feet if the road be a turnpike road, and twenty-five feet if a public carriage road, and twelve feet if a private road:

The ascent shall not be more than one foot in thirty feet if the road be a turnpike road, one foot in twenty feet if a public carriage road, and one foot in sixteen feet if a private carriage road, not being a tramroad or railroad, or if the same be a tramroad or railroad the ascent shall not be greater than the prescribed rate of inclination, and if no rate be prescribed the same shall not be greater than as it existed at the passing of the special Act.

LI. Provided always, That in all cases where the average available width for the passage of carriages of any existing roads within fifty yards of the points of crossing the same is less than the width hereinbefore prescribed for bridges over or under the railway, the width of such bridges need not be greater than such average available width of such roads, but so nevertheless that such bridges be not of less width, in the case of a turnpike road or public carriage road, than twenty feet: Provided also, that if at any time after the construction of the railway the average available width of any such road shall be increased beyond the width of such bridge on either side thereof, the company shall be bound, at their own expense, to increase the width of the said bridge to such extent as they may be required by the trustees or surveyors of such road, not exceeding the width of such road as so widened, or the maximum width herein or in the special Act prescribed for a bridge in the like case over or under the railway.

LII. Provided also, That if the mesne inclination of any road within two hundred and fifty yards of the point of crossing the same, or the inclination of such portion of any road as may require to be altered, or for which another road shall be substituted, shall be steeper than the inclination hereinbefore required to be preserved by the company, then the company may carry any such road over or under the railway, or may construct such altered or substituted road at an inclination not steeper than the said mesne inclination of the road so to be crossed, or of the road so requiring to be altered, or for which another road shall be substituted.

LIII. If, in the exercise of the powers by this or the special Act granted, it be found necessary to cross, cut through, raise, sink, or use any part of any road, whether carriage road, horse road, tramroad, or railway, either public or private, so as to render it impassable for or dangerous or extraordinarily inconvenient to passengers or carriages, or to the persons entitled to the use thereof, the company shall, before the commencement of any such operations, cause a sufficient road to be made instead of the road to be interfered with, and shall at their own expense maintain such substituted road in a state as convenient for passengers and carriages as the road so interfered with, or as nearly so as may be.

LIV. If the company do not cause another sufficient road to be so made before they interfere with any such existing road as aforesaid, they shall forfeit 20*l.* for every day during which such substituted road shall not be made after the existing road shall have been interrupted; and such penalty shall be paid to the trustees, commissioners, surveyor, or other person having the management of such road, if a public road, and shall be applied for the purposes thereof, or in case of a private road the same shall be paid to the owner thereof, and every such penalty shall be recoverable with costs by action in any of the superior courts.

Lv. If any party entitled to a right of way over any road so interfered with by the company shall suffer any special damage by reason that the company shall fail to cause another sufficient road to be made before they interfere with the existing road, it shall be lawful for such party to recover the amount of such special damage from the company, with costs, by action on the case in any of the superior courts, and that whether any party shall have sued for such penalty as aforesaid or not, and without prejudice to the right of any party to sue for the same.

Lvi. If the road so interfered with can be restored compatibly with the formation and use of the railway, the same shall be restored to as good a condition as the same was in at the time when the same was first interfered with by the company, or as near thereto as may be; and if such road cannot be restored compatibly with the formation and use of the railway, the company shall cause the new or substituted road, or some other sufficient substituted road, to be put into a permanently substantial condition, equally convenient as the former road, or as near thereto as circumstances will allow; and the former road shall be restored, or the substituted road put into such condition as aforesaid, as the case may be, within the following periods after the first operation on the former road shall have been commenced, unless the trustees or parties having the management of the road to be restored by writing under their hands consent to an extension of the period, and in such case within such extended period; (that is to say,) if the road be a turnpike road, within six months, and if the road be not a turnpike road, within twelve months.

Lvii. If any such road be not so restored, or the substituted road so completed as aforesaid, within the periods herein or in the special Act fixed for that purpose, the company shall forfeit to the trustees, commissioners, surveyor, or other person having the management of the road interfered with by the company, if a public road, or if a private road to the owner thereof, 5*l.* for every day after the expiration of such periods respectively during which such road shall not be so restored or the substituted road completed; and it shall be lawful for the Justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be laid out in executing the work in respect whereof such penalty was incurred.

Lviii. If in the course of making the railway the company shall use or interfere with any road they shall from time to time make good all damage done by them to such road; and if any question shall arise as to the damage done to any such road by the company, or as to the repair thereof by them, such question shall be referred to the determination of two Justices; and such Justices may direct such repairs to be made in the state of such road, in respect of the damage done by the company, and within such period as they think reasonable, and may impose on the company, for not carrying into effect such repairs, any penalty not exceeding 5*l.* per day as to such Justices shall seem just; and such penalty shall be paid to the surveyor or other person having the management of the road interfered with by the company, if a public road, and be applied for the purposes of such road, or if a private road the same shall be paid to the owner thereof: Provided always, that in determining any such question with regard to a turnpike road the said Justices shall have regard to and shall make full allowance for any tolls that may have been paid by the company on such road in the course of the using thereof.

Lix. When the company shall intend to apply for the consent of two Justices, as hereinbefore provided, so as to authorize them to carry the railway across any highway other than a public carriage road on the level, they shall, fourteen days at least previous to the holding of the petty sessions at which such application is intended to be made, cause notice of such intended application to be given in some newspaper circulating in the county, and also to be affixed upon the door of the parish church of the parish in which such crossing is intended to be made, or if there be no such church some other place to which notices are usually affixed; and if it appear to any two or more Justices acting for the district in which such highway at the proposed crossing thereof is situate, and assembled in petty sessions, after such notice as aforesaid, that the railway can, consistently with a due regard to the public safety and convenience, be carried across such highway on the level, it shall be lawful for such Justices to consent that the same may be so carried accordingly.

Lx. If either party shall feel aggrieved by the determination of such Justices upon any such application as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such party, in like manner and subject to the like conditions as are hereinafter provided in the case of appeals in respect of penalties and forfeitures, to appeal to the Quarter Sessions of the county or place in which the cause of appeal shall have arisen; and it shall be lawful for the Justices in such Quarter Sessions, upon the hearing of such appeal either to confirm or quash the determination, or to make such other order in regard to the method of carrying the railway across such highway as aforesaid, as to them shall seem fit, and to make such order concerning the costs both of the original application and of the appeal as to them shall seem reasonable.

Lxi. If the railway shall cross any highway other than a public carriageway on the level, the company shall at their own expense make and at all times maintain convenient ascents and descents and other convenient approaches, with handrails or other fences, and shall, if such highway be a bridleway, erect and at all times maintain good and sufficient gates, and if the same shall be a footway, good and sufficient gates or stiles, on each side of the railway where the highway shall communicate therewith.

Lxii. If, where the railway shall cross any highway on the level, the company fail to make convenient ascents and descents or other convenient approaches, and such handrails, fences, gates, and stiles as they are hereinbefore required to make, it shall be lawful for two Justices, on the application of the surveyor of roads, or of any two householders within the parish or district where such crossing shall be situate, after not less than ten days' notice to the company, to order the company to make such ascent and descent or other approach, or such handrails, fences, gates, or stiles as aforesaid, within a period to be limited by that purpose by such Justices: and if the company fail to comply with such order they shall forfeit 5*l.* for every day that they fail so to do; and it shall be lawful for the Justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be applied in such manner and by such person as they think fit, in executing the work in respect whereof such penalty was incurred.

LXIII. If the commissioners or trustees of any turnpike road, or the surveyor of any highway, apprehended danger to the passengers on such road in consequence of horses being frightened by the sight of the engines or carriages travelling upon the railway, it shall be lawful for such commissioners, or trustees, or surveyor, after giving fourteen days' notice to the company, to apply to the Board of Trade with respect thereto; and if it shall appear to the said Board that such danger might be obviated or lessened by the construction of any works in the nature of a screen near to or adjoining the side of such road, it shall be lawful for them, if they shall think fit, to certify the works necessary or proper to be executed by the company for the purpose of obviating or lessening such danger, and by such certificate to require the company to execute such works within a certain time after the service of such certificate, to be appointed by the said Board.

LXIV. Where by any such certificate as aforesaid the company shall have been required to execute any such work in the nature of a screen, they shall execute and complete the same within the period appointed for that purpose in such certificate; and if they fail so to do they shall forfeit to the said commissioners, or trustees, or surveyor, 5*l.* for every day during which such works shall remain uncompleted beyond the period so appointed for their completion; and it shall be lawful for the justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be laid out in executing the work in respect whereof such penalty was incurred.

LXV. Where, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, the company are required to maintain or keep in repair any bridge, fence, approach, gate, or other work executed by them, it shall be lawful for two justices, on the application of the surveyor of roads, or of any two householders of the parish or district where such work may be situate, complaining that any such work is out of repair, after not less than ten days' notice to the company, to order the company to put such work into complete repair within a period to be limited for that purpose by such Justices; and if the company fail to comply with such order they shall forfeit 5*l.* for every day that they fail so to do; and it shall be lawful for the Justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be applied, in such manner and by such persons as they think fit, in putting such work into repair.

And after reciting that expense might frequently be avoided, and public convenience promoted, by a reference to the Board of Trade upon the construction of public works of an engineering nature connected with the railway, where a strict compliance with the provisions of this or the special Act might be impossible, or attended with inconvenience to the company and without adequate advantage to the public;—

It is Enacted,

LXVI. That in case any difference in regard to the construction, alteration, or restoration of any road or bridge, or other public work of an engineering nature, required by the provisions of this or the special Act, shall arise between the company and any trustees, commissioners, surveyors, or other persons having the controul of or being authorized by law to enforce the construction of such road, bridge, or work, it shall be lawful for either party, after giving fourteen days' notice in writing of their intention so to do to the other party, to apply to the Board of Trade to decide upon the proper manner of constructing, altering, or restoring such road, bridge, or other work; and it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, if they shall think fit, to decide the same accordingly, and to authorize, by certificate in writing, any arrangement or mode of construction in regard to any such road, bridge, or other work which shall appear to them either to be in substantial compliance with the provisions of this and the special Act, or to be calculated to afford equal or greater accommodation to the public using such road, bridge, or other work; and after any such certificate shall have been given by the Board of Trade, the road, bridge, or other work therein mentioned shall be constructed by the company in conformity with the terms of such certificate, and being so constructed shall be deemed to be constructed in conformity with the provisions of this and the special Act: Provided always, that no such certificate shall be granted by the Board of Trade unless they shall be satisfied that existing private rights or interests will not be injuriously affected thereby.

LXVII. That all regulations, certificates, notices, and other documents in writing purporting to be made or issued by or by the authority of the Board of Trade, and signed by some officer appointed for that purpose by the Board of Trade, shall, for the purposes of this and the special Act, and any Act incorporated therewith, be deemed to have been so made and issued, and that without proof of the authority of the person signing the same, or of the signature thereto, which matters shall be presumed until the contrary be proved; and service of any such document, by leaving the same at one of the principal offices of the railway company, or by sending the same by post addressed to the secretary at such office, shall be deemed good service upon the company; and all notices and other documents required by this or the special Act to be given to or laid before the Board of Trade shall be delivered at, or sent by post addressed to, the office of the Board of Trade in London.

LXVIII. And with respect to works for the accommodation of lands adjoining the railway,—it is enacted as follows: The company shall make and at all times thereafter maintain the following works for the accommodation of the owners and occupiers of lands adjoining the railway; (that is to say,)

Such and so many convenient gates, bridges, arches, culverts, and passages over, under, or by the sides of or leading to or from the railway as shall be necessary for the purpose of making good any interruptions caused by the railway to the use of the lands through which the railway shall be made; and such works shall be made forthwith after the part of the railway passing over such lands shall have been laid out or formed, or during the formation thereof:

Also sufficient posts, rails, hedges, mounds, or other fences for separating the land taken for the use of the railway from the adjoining lands not taken, and protecting such lands from trespass, or the cattle of the owners or occupiers thereof from straying thereout, by reason of the railway, together with all necessary gates made to open towards such adjoining lands, and not towards the railway, and all necessary stiles; and such posts, rails, and other fences shall be made forthwith after the taking of any such lands, if the owners thereof shall so require, and the said other works as soon as conveniently may be:

Also all necessary arches, tunnels, culverts, drains, or other passages, either over or under or by the sides of the railway, of such dimensions as will be sufficient at all times to convey the water as clearly from the lands lying near or affected by the railway as before the making of the railway, or as nearly so as may be; and such works shall be made from time to time as the railway works proceed:

STAT.—VOL. XXIII.

R

Also proper watering places for cattle where by reason of the railway the cattle of any person occupying any lands lying near thereto shall be deprived of access to their former watering places; and such watering places shall be so made as to be at all times as sufficiently supplied with water as theretofore, and as if the railway had not been made, or as nearly so as may be; and the company shall make all necessary watercourses and drains for the purpose of conveying water to the said watering places:

Provided always, that the company shall not be required to make such accommodation works in such a manner as would prevent or obstruct the working or using of the railway, nor to make any accommodation works with respect to which the owners and occupiers of the lands shall have agreed to receive and shall have been paid compensation instead of the making them.

LXIX. If any difference arise respecting the kind or number of any such accommodation works, or the dimensions or sufficiency thereof, or respecting the maintaining thereof, the same shall be determined by two Justices; and such Justices shall also appoint the time within which such works shall be commenced and executed by the company.

LXX. If for fourteen days next after the time appointed by such Justices for the commencement of any such works the company shall fail to commence such works, or having commenced shall fail to proceed diligently to execute the same in a sufficient manner, it shall be lawful for the party aggrieved by such failure himself to execute such works or repairs; and the reasonable expenses thereof shall be repaid by the company to the party by whom the same shall so have been executed; and if there be any dispute about such expenses the same shall be settled by two Justices: Provided always, that no such owner or occupier or other person shall obstruct or injure the railway, or any of the works connected therewith, for a longer time nor use them in any other manner than is unavoidably necessary for the execution or repair of such accommodation works.

LXXI. If any of the owners or occupiers of lands affected by such railway shall consider the accommodation works made by the company, or directed by such Justices to be made by the company, insufficient for the commodious use of their respective lands, it shall be lawful for any such owner or occupier, at any time, at his own expense, to make such further works for that purpose as he shall think necessary, and as shall be agreed to by the company, or, in case of difference, as shall be authorized by two Justices.

LXXII. If the company so desire, all such last-mentioned accommodation works shall be constructed under the superintendence of their engineer, and according to plans and specifications to be submitted to and approved by such engineer; nevertheless the company shall not be entitled to require, either that plans should be adopted which would involve a greater expense than that incurred in the execution of similar works by the company, or that the plans selected should be executed in a more expensive manner than that adopted in similar cases by the company.

LXXIII. The company shall not be compelled to make any further or additional accommodation works for the use of owners and occupiers of land adjoining the railway after the expiration of the prescribed period, or, if no period be prescribed, after five years from the completion of the works, and the opening of the railway for public use.

LXXIV. Until the company shall have made the bridges or other proper communications which they shall under the provisions herein, or in the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, contained, have been required to make between lands intersected by the railway, and no longer, the owners and occupiers of such lands, and any other persons whose right of way shall be affected by the want of such communication, and their respective servants, may at all times freely pass and re-pass, with carriages, horses and other animals, directly (but not otherwise) across the part of the railway made in or through their respective lands, solely for the purpose of occupying the same lands, or for the exercise of such right of way, and so as not to obstruct the passage along the railway, or to damage the same; nevertheless, if the owner or occupier of any such lands have in his arrangements with the company received or agreed to receive compensation for or on account of any such communications, instead of the same being formed, such owner or occupier, or those claiming under him, shall not be entitled so to cross the railway.

LXXV. If any person omit to shut and fasten any gate set up at either side of the railway, for the accommodation of the owners or occupiers of the adjoining lands, as soon as he, and the carriage, cattle or other animals, under his care, have passed through the same, he shall forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding 40s.

LXXVI. That this or the special Act shall not prevent the owners or occupiers of lands adjoining to the railway, or any other persons, from laying down, either upon their own lands or upon the lands of other persons, with the consent of such persons, any collateral branches of railway to communicate with the railway, for the purpose of bringing carriages to or from or upon the railway, but under and subject to the provisions and restrictions of an Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 55, intituled 'An Act for the better Regulation of Railways, and for the Conveyance of Troops;' and the company shall, if required, at the expense of such owners and occupiers and other persons, and subject also to the provisions of the said last-mentioned Act, make openings in the rails, and such additional lines of rail as may be necessary for effecting such communication, in places where the communication can be made with safety to the public, and without injury to the railway, and without inconvenience to the traffic thereon; and the company shall not take any rate or toll or other monies for the passing of any passengers, goods, or other things along any branch so to be made by any such owner or occupier or other person; but this enactment shall be subject to the following restrictions and conditions; (that is to say,)

No such branch railway shall run parallel to the railway:

The company shall not be bound to make any such openings in any place which they shall have set apart for any specific purpose with which such communication would interfere, nor upon any inclined plane or bridge, nor in any tunnel:

The persons making or using such branch railways shall be subject to all bye laws and regulations of the company from time to time made with respect to passing upon or crossing the railway, and otherwise; and the persons making or using such branch railways shall be bound to construct, and from time to time, as need may require, to renew, the offset plates and switches according to the most approved plan adopted by the company, and under the direction of their engineer.

LXXVII. And with respect to mines lying under or near the railway,—it is enacted as follows: The company shall not be entitled to any mines of coal, ironstone, slate, or other minerals, under any land purchased by them, except only such parts thereof as shall be necessary to be dug or carried away or used in the construction of the works, unless the same shall have been expressly purchased; and all such mines, excepting as aforesaid, shall be deemed to be excepted out of the conveyance of such lands, unless they shall have been expressly named therein and conveyed thereby.

LXXVIII. If the owner, lessee, or occupier of any mines or minerals lying under the railway, or any of the works connected therewith, or within the prescribed distance, or, where no distance shall be prescribed, forty yards, therefrom, be desirous of working the same, such owner, lessee, or occupier shall give to the company notice in writing of his intention so to do thirty days before the commencement of working; and upon the receipt of such notice it shall be lawful for the company to cause such mines to be inspected by any person appointed by them for the purpose; and if it appear to the company that the working of such mines or minerals is likely to damage the works of the railway, and if the company be willing to make compensation for such mines or any part thereof to such owner, lessee, or occupier thereof, then he shall not work or get the same; and if the company, and such owner, lessee, or occupier, do not agree as to the amount of such compensation, the same shall be settled as in other cases of disputed compensation.

LXXIX. If before the expiration of such thirty days the company do not state their willingness to treat with such owner, lessee, or occupier for the payment of such compensation, it shall be lawful for him to work the said mines or any part thereof for which the company shall not have agreed to pay compensation, so that the same be done in a manner proper and necessary for the beneficial working thereof, and according to the usual manner of working such mines in the district where the same shall be situate; and if any damage or obstruction be occasioned to the railway or works by improper working of such mines, the same shall be forthwith repaired or removed, as the case may require, and such damage made good, by the owner, lessee, or occupier of such mines or minerals, and at his own expense; and if such repair or removal be not forthwith done, or, if the company shall so think fit, without waiting for the same to be done by such owner, lessee, or occupier, it shall be lawful for the company to execute the same, and recover from such owner, lessee, or occupier the expense occasioned thereby, by action in any of the superior courts.

LXXX. If the working of any such mines under the railway or works, or within the above-mentioned distance therefrom, be prevented as aforesaid by reason of apprehended injury to the railway, it shall be lawful for the respective owners, lessees, and occupiers of such mines, and whose mines shall extend so as to lie on both sides of the railway, to cut and make such and so many airways, headways, gateways, or water levels through the mines, measures, or strata, the working whereof shall be so prevented, as may be requisite to enable them to ventilate, drain, and work their said mines, but no such airway, headway, gateway, or water level shall be of greater dimensions or section than the prescribed dimensions and sections, and where no dimensions shall be described not greater than eight feet wide and eight feet high, nor shall the same be cut or made upon any part of the railway or works, or so as to injure the same, or to impede the passage thereon.

LXXXI. The company shall from time to time pay to the owner, lessee, or occupier of any such mines extending so as to lie on both sides of the railway all such additional expenses and losses as shall be incurred by such owner, lessee, or occupier by reason of the severance of the lands lying over such mines by the railway, or of the continuous working of such mines being interrupted as aforesaid, or by reason of the same being worked in such manner and under such restrictions as not to prejudice or injure the railway, and for any minerals not purchased by the company which cannot be obtained by reason of making and maintaining the railway; and if any dispute or question shall arise between the company and such owner, lessee, or occupier as aforesaid, touching the amount of such losses or expenses, the same shall be settled by arbitration.

LXXXII. If any loss or damage be sustained by the owner or occupier of the lands lying over any such mines the working whereof shall have been so prevented as aforesaid (and not being the owner, lessee, or occupier of such mines), by reason of the making of any such airway or other work as aforesaid, which or any like work would not have been necessary to be made but for the working of such mines having been so prevented as aforesaid, the company shall make full compensation to such owner or occupier of surface lands for the loss or damage so sustained by him.

LXXXIII. For better ascertaining whether any such mines are being worked or have been worked so as to damage the railway or works, it shall be lawful for the company, after giving twenty-four hours' notice in writing, to enter upon any lands through or near which the railway passes wherein any such mines are being worked or are supposed so to be, and to enter into and return from any such mines or the works connected therewith; and for that purpose it shall be lawful for them to make use of any apparatus or machinery belonging to the owner, lessee, or occupier of such mines, and to use all necessary means for discovering the distance from the railway to the parts of such mines which are being worked or about so to be.

LXXXIV. If any such owner, lessee, or occupier of any such mine shall refuse to allow any person appointed by the company for that purpose to enter into and inspect any such mines or works in manner aforesaid, every person so offending shall for every such refusal forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding 20*l*.

LXXXV. If it appear that any such mines have been worked contrary to the provisions of this or the special Act, the company may, if they think fit, give notice to the owner, lessee, or occupier thereof to construct such works and to adopt such means as may be necessary or proper for making safe the railway, and preventing injury thereto; and if after such notice any such owner, lessee, or occupier do not forthwith proceed to construct the works necessary for making safe the railway, the company may themselves construct such works, and recover the expense thereof from such owner, lessee, or occupier by action in any of the superior courts.

LXXXVI. And with respect to the carrying of passengers and goods upon the railway, and the tolls to be taken thereon,—it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the company to use and employ locomotive engines or other moving power, and carriages and waggons to be drawn or propelled thereby, and to carry and convey upon the railway all such passengers and goods as shall be offered to them for that purpose, and to make such reasonable charges in respect thereof as they may from time to time determine upon, not exceeding the tolls by the special Act authorized to be taken by them.

LXXXVII. It shall be lawful for the company from time to time to enter into any contract with any other company, being the owners or lessees or in possession of any other railway, for the passage over or along the railway by the special Act authorized to be made of any engines, coaches, waggons, or other carriages of any other company, or which shall pass over any other line of railway, or for the passage over any other line of railway of any engines; coaches, waggons, or other carriages of the company, or which shall pass over their line of railway, upon the payment of such tolls and under such conditions and restrictions as may be mutually agreed upon; and for the purpose aforesaid it shall be lawful for the respective parties to enter into any contract for the division or apportionment of the tolls to be taken upon their respective railways.

LXXXVIII. Provided always, That no such contract as aforesaid shall in any manner alter, affect, increase, or diminish any of the tolls which the respective companies, parties to such contracts, shall for the time being be respectively authorized and entitled to demand or receive from any person or any other company, but that all other persons and companies shall notwithstanding any such contract, be entitled to the use and benefit of any of the said railways, upon the same terms and conditions, and on payment of the same tolls, as they would have been in case no such contract had been entered into.

LXXXIX. Nothing in this or the special Act contained shall extend to charge or make liable the company further or in any other case than where, according to the laws of the realm, stage coach proprietors and common carriers would be liable, nor shall extend in any degree to deprive the company of any protection or privilege which common carriers or stage coach proprietors may be entitled to; but, on the contrary, the company shall at all times be entitled to the benefit of every such protection and privilege.

XC. And after reciting that it is expedient that the company should be enabled to vary the tolls upon the railway so as to accommodate them to the circumstances of the traffic, but that such power of varying should not be used for the purpose of prejudicing or favouring particular parties, or for the purpose of collusively and unfairly creating a monopoly, either in the hands of the company or of particular parties; it shall be lawful, therefore, for the company, subject to the provisions and limitations herein and in the special Act contained, from time to time to alter or vary the tolls by the special Act authorized to be taken, either upon the whole or upon any particular portions of the railway, as they shall think fit; provided that all such tolls be at all times charged equally to all persons, and after the same rate, whether per ton per mile or otherwise, in respect of all passengers, and of all goods or carriages of the same description, and conveyed or propelled by a like carriage or engine, passing only over the same portion of the line of railway under the same circumstances; and no reduction or advance in any such tolls shall be made either directly or indirectly in-favour of or against any particular company or person travelling upon or using the railway.

XC.I. And after reciting that authority has been given by various Acts of Parliament to railway companies to demand tolls for the conveyance of passengers and goods and for other services over the fraction of a mile equal to the toll which they are authorized to demand for one mile; therefore, in cases in which any railway shall be amalgamated with any other adjoining railway or railways, such tolls shall be calculated and imposed at such rates as if such amalgamated railways had originally formed one line of railway.

XCII. It shall not be lawful for the company at any time to demand or take a greater amount of toll, or make any greater charge for the carriage of passengers or goods, than they are by this and the special Act authorized to demand; and upon payment of the tolls from time to time demandable all companies and persons shall be entitled to use the railway, with engines and carriages properly constructed as by this and the special Act directed, subject nevertheless to the provisions and restrictions of the said Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 55, intituled 'An Act for the better Regulation of Railways, and for the Conveyance of Troops,' and to the regulations to be from time to time made by the company by virtue of the powers in that behalf hereby and by the special Act conferred upon them.

XCIII. A list of all the tolls authorized by the special Act to be taken, and which shall be exacted by the company, shall be published by the same being painted upon one toll board or more in distinct black letters on a white ground, or white letters on a black ground, or by the same being printed in legible characters on paper affixed to such board, and by such board being exhibited in some conspicuous place on the stations or places where such tolls shall be made payable.

XCIV. The company shall cause the length of the railway to be measured, and milestones, posts, or other conspicuous objects to be set up and maintained along the whole line thereof, at the distance of one quarter of a mile from each other, with numbers or marks inscribed thereon denoting such distances.

XCV. No tolls shall be demanded or taken by the company for the use of the railway during any time at which the boards hereinbefore directed to be exhibited shall not be so exhibited, or at which the milestones hereinbefore directed to be set up and maintained shall not be so set up and maintained; and if any person wilfully pull down, deface, or destroy any such board or milestone, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l*. for every such offence.

XCVI. The tolls shall be paid to such persons, and at such places upon or near to the railway, and in such manner and under such regulations, as the company shall, by notice to be annexed to the list of tolls, appoint.

XCVII. If, on demand, any person fail to pay the tolls due in respect of any carriage or goods, it shall be lawful for the company to detain and sell such carriage, or all or any part of such goods, or, if the same shall have been removed from the premises of the company, to detain and sell any other carriages or goods within such premises belonging to the party liable to pay such tolls, and out of the monies arising from such sale to retain the tolls payable as aforesaid, and all charges and expenses of such detention and sale, rendering the overplus, if any, of the monies arising by such sale, and such of the carriages or goods as shall remain unsold, to the person entitled thereto, or it shall be lawful for the company to recover any such tolls by action at law.

xcviii. Every person being the owner or having the care of any carriage or goods passing or being upon the railway shall, on demand, give to the collector of tolls, at the places where he attends for the purpose of receiving goods or of collecting tolls for the part of the railway on which such carriage or goods may have travelled or be about to travel, an exact account in writing signed by him of the number or quantity of goods conveyed by any such carriage, and of the point on the railway from which such carriage or goods have set out or are about to set out, and at what point the same are intended to be unloaded or taken off the railway; and if the goods conveyed by any such carriage, or brought for conveyance as aforesaid, be liable to the payment of different tolls, then such owner or other person shall specify the respective numbers or quantities thereof liable to each or any of such tolls.

xcix. If any such owner or other such person fail to give such account, or to produce his way-bill or bill of lading, to such collector or other officer or servant of the company demanding the same, or if he give a false account, or if he unload or take off any part of his lading or goods at any other place than shall be mentioned in such account, with intent to avoid the payment of any tolls payable in respect thereof, he shall for every such offence forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding 10*l*. for every ton of goods, or for any parcel not exceeding one hundred weight, and so in proportion for any less quantity of goods than one ton, or for any parcel exceeding one hundred weight, (as the case may be,) which shall be upon any such carriage; and such penalty shall be in addition to the toll to which such goods may be liable.

c. If any dispute arise concerning the amount of the tolls due to the company, or concerning the charges occasioned by any detention or sale thereof under the provisions herein or in the special Act contained, the same shall be settled by a Justice; and it shall be lawful for the company in the meanwhile to detain the goods, or (if the case so require) the proceeds of the sale thereof.

ci. If any difference arise between any toll collector or other officer or servant of the company and any owner of or person having the charge of any carriage passing or being upon the railway, or of any goods conveyed or to be conveyed by such carriage, respecting the weight, quantity, quality, or nature of such goods, such collector or other officer may lawfully detain such carriage or goods, and examine, weigh, gauge, or otherwise measure the same; and if upon such measuring or examination such goods appear to be of greater weight or quantity or of other nature than shall have been stated in the account given thereof, then the person who shall have given such account shall pay, and the owner of such carriage, or the respective owners of such goods, shall also, at the option of the company, be liable to pay, the costs of such measuring and examining; but if such goods appear to be of the same or less weight or quantity than and of the same nature as shall have been stated in such account, then the company shall pay such costs, and they shall also pay to such owner or person having charge of such carriage, and to the respective owners of such goods, such damage (if any) as shall appear to any Justice, on a summary application to him for that purpose, to have arisen from such detention.

cii. If at any time it be made to appear to any Justice, upon the complaint of the company, that any such detention, measuring, or examining of any carriage or goods, as hereinbefore mentioned, was without reasonable ground, or that it was vexatious on the part of such collector or other officer, then the collector or other officer shall himself pay the costs of such detention and measuring, and the damage occasioned thereby; and in default of immediate payment of any such costs or damage the same may be recovered by distress of the goods of such collector, and such Justice shall issue his warrant accordingly.

ciii. If any person travel or attempt to travel in any carriage of the company, or of any other company or party using the railway, without having previously paid his fare, and with intent to avoid payment thereof, or if any person, having paid his fare for a certain distance, knowingly and wilfully proceed in any such carriage beyond such distance, without previously paying the additional fare for the additional distance, and with intent to avoid payment thereof, or if any person knowingly and wilfully refuse or neglect, on arriving at the point to which he has paid his fare, to quit such carriage, every such person shall for every such offence forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding 40*s*.

civ. If any person be discovered, either in or after committing or attempting to commit any such offence as in the preceding enactment mentioned, all officers and servants and other persons on behalf of the company, or such other company or party as aforesaid, and all constables, gaolers, and peace-officers, may lawfully apprehend and detain such person until he or she conveniently be taken before some Justice, or until he be otherwise discharged by due course of law.

cv. No person shall be entitled to carry, or to require the company to carry, upon the railway, any aquafortis, oil of vitriol, gunpowder, lucifer matches, or any other goods which in the judgment of the company may be of a dangerous nature; and if any person send by the railway any such goods without distinctly marking their nature on the outside of the package containing the same, or otherwise giving notice in writing to the book-keeper or other servant of the company with whom the same are left, at the time of so sending, he shall forfeit to the company 20*l*. for every such offence; and it shall be lawful for the company to refuse to take any parcel that they may suspect to contain goods of a dangerous nature, or require the same to be opened to ascertain the fact.

cvi. If any collector of tolls or other officer employed by the company be discharged or suspended from his office, or die, abscond, or absent himself, and if such collector or other officer, or the wife, widow, or any of the family or representatives of any such collector or other officer, refuse or neglect, after seven days' notice in writing for that purpose, to deliver up to the company, or to any person appointed by them for that purpose, any station, dwelling-house, office, or other building, with its appurtenances, or any books, papers, or other matters belonging to the company in the possession or custody of any such collector or officer at the occurrence of any such event as aforesaid, then upon application being made by the company to any Justice, it shall be lawful for such Justice to order any constable, with proper assistance, to enter upon such station or other building, and to remove any person found therein, and to take possession thereof, and of any such books, papers, or other matters, and to deliver the same, to the company, or any person appointed by them for that purpose.

CVII. And be it enacted, That the company shall every year cause an annual account in abstract to be prepared, shewing the total receipts and expenditure of all funds levied by virtue of this or the special Act for the year ending on the 31st of December or some other convenient day in each year, under the several distinct heads of receipt and expenditure, with a statement of the balance of such account, duly audited and certified by the directors, or some of them, and by the auditors, and shall, if required, transmit a copy of the said account, free of charge, to the overseers of the poor of the several parishes through which the railway shall pass, and also to the clerks of the peace of the counties through which the railway shall pass, on or before the 31st of January then next; which last-mentioned account shall be open to the inspection of the public at all reasonable hours, on payment of the sum of 1s. for every such inspection: Provided always, that if the said company shall omit to prepare or transmit such account as aforesaid, if required so to do by any such clerk of the peace or overseers of the poor, they shall forfeit for every such omission the sum of 20*l*.

CVIII. And with respect to the regulating of the use of the railway,—it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the company, from time to time, subject to the provisions and restrictions in this and the special Act contained, to make regulations for the following purposes; (that is to say,)

For regulating the mode by which and the speed at which carriages using the railway are to be moved or propelled;

For regulating the times of the arrival and departure of any such carriages;

For regulating the loading or unloading of such carriages, and the weights which they are respectively to carry;

For regulating the receipt and delivery of goods and other things which are to be conveyed upon such carriages;

For preventing the smoking of tobacco, and the commission of any other nuisance, in or upon such carriages, or in any of the stations or premises occupied by the company;

And, generally, for regulating the travelling upon, or using and working of the railway;

But no such regulation shall authorize the closing of the railway, or prevent the passage of engines or carriages on the railway, at reasonable times, except at any time when in consequence of any of the works being out of repair, or from any other sufficient cause, it shall be necessary to close the railway or any part thereof.

CIX. For better enforcing the observance of all or any of such regulations it shall be lawful for the company, subject to the provisions of an Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, intituled, 'An Act for regulating Railways,' to make bye-laws, and from time to time to repeal or alter such bye-laws, and make others, provided that such bye-laws be not repugnant to the laws of that part of the United Kingdom where the same are to have effect, or to the provisions of this or the special Act; and such bye-laws shall be reduced into writing, and shall have affixed thereto the common seal of the company; and any person offending against any such bye-law shall forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding 5*l*., to be imposed by the company in such bye-laws as a penalty for any such offence; and if the infraction or non-observance of any such bye-law or other such regulation as aforesaid be attended with danger or annoyance to the public, or hindrance to the company in the lawful use of the railway, it shall be lawful for the company summarily to interfere to obviate or remove such danger, annoyance, or hindrance, and that without prejudice to any penalty incurred by the infraction of any such bye-law.

CX. The substance of such last-mentioned bye-laws, when confirmed or allowed according to the provisions of any Act in force regulating the allowance or confirmation of the same, shall be painted on boards, or printed on paper and pasted on boards, and hung up and affixed and continued on the front or other conspicuous part of every wharf or station belonging to the company, according to the nature or subject-matter of such bye-laws respectively, and so as to give public notice thereof to the parties interested therein or affected thereby; and such boards shall from time to time be renewed as often as the bye-laws thereon or any part thereof shall be obliterated or destroyed; and no penalty imposed by any such bye-law shall be recoverable unless the same shall have been published and kept published in manner aforesaid.

CXI. Such bye-laws, when so confirmed, published, and affixed, shall be binding upon and be observed by all parties, and shall be sufficient to justify all persons acting under the same; and for proof of the publication of any such bye-laws it shall be sufficient to prove that a printed paper or painted board, containing a copy of such bye-laws, was affixed and continued in manner by this Act directed, and in case of its being afterwards displaced or damaged then that such paper or board was replaced as soon as conveniently might be.

CXII. And with respect to leasing the railway,—it is enacted as follows: Where the company shall be authorized by the special Act to lease the railway or any part thereof to any company or person, the lease to be executed in pursuance of such authority shall contain all usual and proper covenants on the part of the lessee for maintaining the railway, or the portion thereof comprised in such lease, in good and efficient repair and working condition during the continuance thereof, and for so leaving the same at the expiration of the term thereby granted, and such other provisions, conditions, covenants, and agreements as are usually inserted in leases of a like nature.

CXIII. Such lease shall entitle the company or person to whom the same shall be granted to the free use of the railway or portion of railway comprised therein, and during the continuance of any such lease all the powers and privileges granted to and which might otherwise be exercised and enjoyed by the company, or the directors thereof, or their officers, agents, or servants, by virtue of this or the special Act, with regard to the possession, enjoyment, and management of the railway, or of the part thereof comprised in such lease, and the tolls to be taken thereon, shall be exercised and enjoyed by the lessee, and the officers and servants of such lessee, under the same regulations and restrictions as are by this or the special Act imposed on the company, and their directors, officers, and servants; and such lessee shall, with respect to the railway comprised in such lease, be subject to all the obligations by this or the special Act imposed on the company.

CXIV. And with respect to the engines and carriages to be brought on the railway,—it is enacted as follows: Every locomotive steam-engine to be used on the railway shall, if it use coal or other similar fuel emitting smoke, be constructed on the principle of consuming and so as to consume its own smoke; and if any engine be not so constructed the company or party using such engine shall forfeit 5*l*. for every day during which such engine shall be used on the railway.

CXV. No locomotive or other engine, or other description of moving power, shall at any time be brought upon or used on the railway unless the same have first been approved of by the company; and within fourteen days after notice given to the company by any party desirous of bringing any such engine on the railway the company shall cause their engineer or other agent to examine such engine at any place within three miles distance from the railway to be appointed by the owner thereof, and to report thereon to the company; and within seven days after such report, if such engine be proper to be used on the railway, the company shall give a certificate to the party requiring the same of their approval of such engine; and if at any time the engineer or other agent of the company report that any engine used upon the railway is out of repair, or unfit to be used upon the railway, the company may require the same to be taken off, or may forbid its use upon the railway until the same shall have been repaired to the satisfaction of the company, and upon the engine being so repaired the company shall give a certificate to the party requiring the same of their approval of such engine; and if any difference of opinion arise between the company and the owner of any such engine as to the fitness or unfitness thereof for the purpose of being used on the railway, such difference shall be settled by arbitration.

CXVI. If any person, whether the owner or other person having the care thereof, bring or use upon the railway any locomotive or other engine, or any moving power, without having first obtained such certificate of approval as aforesaid, or if, after notice given by the company to remove any such engine from the railway, such person do not forthwith remove the same, or if, after notice given by the company not to use any such engine on the railway, such person do so use such engine, without having first repaired the same to the satisfaction of the company, and obtained such certificate of approval, every such person shall in any of the cases aforesaid forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding 20*l.*; and in any such case it shall be lawful for the company to remove such engine from the railway.

CXVII. No carriage shall pass along or be upon the railway (except in directly crossing the same, as herein or by the special Act authorized), unless such carriage be at all times, so long as it shall be used or shall remain on the railway, of the construction and in the condition which the regulations of the company for the time being shall require; and if any dispute arise between the company and the owner of any such carriage as to the construction or condition thereof, in reference to the then existing regulations of the company, such dispute shall be settled by arbitration.

CXVIII. The regulations from time to time to be made by the company respecting the carriages to be used on the railway shall be drawn up in writing, and be authenticated by the common seal of the company, and shall be applicable alike to the carriages of the company and to the carriages of other companies or persons using the railway; and a copy of such regulations shall, on demand, be furnished by the secretary of the company to any person applying for the same.

CXIX. If any carriage, not being of such construction or in such condition as the regulations of the company for the time being require, be made to pass or be upon any part of the railway (except as aforesaid), the owner thereof, or any person having for the time being the charge of such carriage, shall forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding 10*l.* for every such offence, and it shall be lawful for the company to remove any such carriage from the railway.

CXX. The respective owners of carriages using the railway shall cause to be entered with the secretary or other officer of the company appointed for that purpose the names and places of abode of the owners of such carriages respectively, and the numbers, weights, and gauges of their respective carriages; and such owners shall also, if so required by the company, cause the same particulars to be painted in legible characters on some conspicuous part of the outside of every such carriage, so as to be always open to view; and every such owner shall, whenever required by the company, permit his carriage to be weighed, measured, or gauged at the expense of the company.

CXXI. If the owner of any carriage fail to comply with the requisitions contained in the preceding enactment, it shall be lawful for the company to refuse to allow such carriage to be brought upon the railway, or to remove the same therefrom until such compliance.

CXXII. If the loading of any carriage using the railway be such as to be liable to collision with other carriages properly loaded, or to be otherwise dangerous, or if the person having the care of any carriage or goods upon the railway suffer the same or any part thereof to remain on the railway so as to obstruct the passage or working thereof, it shall be lawful for the company to cause such carriage or goods to be unloaded and removed in any manner proper for preventing such collision or obstruction, and to detain such carriage or goods, or any part thereof, until the expenses occasioned by such unloading, removal, or detention be paid.

CXXIII. The company shall not be liable for any damage or loss occasioned by any such unloading, removal, or detention as aforesaid, except for damage wilfully or negligently done to any carriage or goods so unloaded, removed, or detained; nor shall they be liable for the safe custody of any such carriage or goods so detained, unless the same be wrongfully detained by them, and then only for so long a time as the same shall have been so wrongfully detained.

CXXIV. The respective owners of engines and carriages passing or being upon the railway shall be answerable for any trespass or damage done by their engines or carriages, or by any of the servants or persons employed by them, to or upon the railway, or the machinery or works belonging thereto, or to or upon the property of any other person; and every such servant or other person may lawfully be convicted of such trespass or damage before any two Justices of the Peace, either by the confession of the party offending, or upon the oath of some credible witness; and upon such conviction every such owner shall pay to the company, or to the person injured, as the case may be, the damage to be ascertained by such Justices, so that the same do not exceed 50*l.*

CXXV. It shall be lawful for any owner of an engine or carriage who shall pay the amount of any damage caused by the misfeasance or negligence of any servant or other person employed by him to recover the amount so paid by him from such servant or other person by the same means as the company are enabled to recover the amount of such damage from the owner of any engine or carriage.

CXXVI. And with respect to the settlement of disputes by arbitration,—it is enacted as follows: When any dispute authorized or directed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, to be settled by arbitration, shall have arisen, then, unless both parties shall concur in the appointment of a single arbitrator, each party, on the request of the other party, shall nominate and appoint an arbitrator to whom such dispute shall be referred; and every appointment of an arbitrator shall be made on the part of the company, under the hand of the secretary or any two of the directors of the company, and on the part of any other party under the hand of such party, or if such party be a corporation aggregate, under the common seal of such corporation, and such appointment shall be delivered to the arbitrators, and shall be deemed a submission to arbitration on the part of the party by whom the same shall be made; and after any such appointment shall have been made neither party shall have power to revoke the same without the consent of the other, nor shall the death of either party operate as a revocation; and if for the space of fourteen days after any such dispute shall have arisen, and after a request in writing, in which shall be stated the matters so required to be referred to arbitration, shall have been served by the one party on the other party to appoint an arbitrator, such last-mentioned party fail to appoint such arbitrator, then upon such failure the party making the request, and having himself appointed an arbitrator, may appoint such arbitrator to act on behalf of both parties; and such arbitrator may proceed to hear and determine the matters which shall be in dispute; and in such case the award or determination of such single arbitrator shall be final.

CXXVII. If before the matters so referred shall be determined any arbitrator appointed by either party die, or become incapable to act, the party by whom such arbitrator was appointed may nominate and appoint in writing some other person to act in his place, and if for the space of seven days after notice in writing from the other party for that purpose he fail to do so the remaining or other arbitrator may proceed ex parte; and every arbitrator so to be substituted as aforesaid shall have the same powers and authorities as were vested in the former arbitrator at the time of such his death or incapacity as aforesaid.

CXXVIII. Where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, such arbitrators shall, before they enter upon the matters referred to them, nominate and appoint by writing under their hands an umpire to decide on any such matters on which they shall differ, or which shall be referred to him under this or the special Act; and if such umpire shall die, or become incapable to act, they shall forthwith after such death or incapacity appoint another umpire in his place; and the decision of every such umpire on the matters so referred to him shall be final.

CXXIX. If in either of the cases aforesaid the said arbitrators shall refuse, or shall for seven days after request of either party to such arbitration neglect to appoint an umpire, the Board of Trade shall, on the application of either party to such arbitration, appoint an umpire; and the decision of such umpire on the matters on which the arbitrators shall differ, or which shall be referred to him under this or the special Act, shall be final.

CXXX. If, where a single arbitrator shall have been appointed, such arbitrator shall die, or become incapable to act, before he shall have made his award, the matters referred to him shall be determined by arbitration, under the provisions of this or the special Act, in the same manner as if such arbitrator had not been appointed.

CXXXI. If, where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, either of the arbitrators refuse, or for seven days neglect to act, the other arbitrator may proceed ex parte, and the decision of such other arbitrator shall be as effectual as if he had been the single arbitrator appointed by both parties.

CXXXII. If, where more than one arbitrator shall have been appointed, and where neither of them shall refuse or neglect to act as aforesaid, such arbitrators shall fail to make their award within twenty-one days after the day on which the last of such arbitrators shall have been appointed, or within such extended time, if any, as shall have been appointed for that purpose by both such arbitrators under their hands, the matter referred to them shall be determined by the umpire to be appointed as aforesaid.

CXXXIII. The said arbitrators or their umpire may call for the production of any documents in the possession or power of either party which they or he may think necessary for determining the question in dispute, and may examine the parties or their witnesses on oath, and administer the oaths necessary for that purpose.

CXXXIV. Before any arbitrator or umpire shall enter into the consideration of any matters referred to him he shall, in the presence of a Justice, make and subscribe the following declaration; that is to say,
 'I A. B. do solemnly and sincerely declare, That I will faithfully and honestly, and to the best of my Skill and Ability, hear and determine the Matters referred to me, under the provisions of the Act [naming the special Act].
 A. B.
 'Made and subscribed in the presence of

And such declaration shall be annexed to the award when made; and if any arbitrator or umpire, having made such declaration, shall wilfully act contrary thereto, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

CXXXV. Except where by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, it shall be otherwise provided, the costs of and attending every such arbitration, to be determined by the arbitrators, shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators.

CXXXVI. The submission to any such arbitration may be made a rule of any of the superior courts, on the application of either of the parties.

CXXXVII. No award made with respect to any question referred to arbitration under the provisions of this or the special Act shall be set aside for irregularity or error in matter of form.

CXXXVIII. That any summons or notice, or any writ, or other proceeding at law or in equity, requiring to be served upon the company, may be served by the same being left at or transmitted through the post directed to the principal office of the company, or one of their principal offices where there shall be more than one, or being given personally to the secretary, or in case there be no secretary then by being given to any one director of the company.

CXXXIX. That if any party shall have committed any irregularity, trespass, or other wrongful proceeding in the execution of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or by virtue of any power or authority thereby given, and if before action brought in respect thereof such party make tender of sufficient amends to the party injured, such last-mentioned party shall not recover in any such action; and if no such tender shall have been made it shall be lawful for the defendant, by leave of the Court where such action shall be pending, at any time before issue joined to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit, and thereupon such proceedings shall be had as in other cases where defendants are allowed to pay money into court.

CXL. And with respect to the recovery of damages not specially provided for, and of penalties, and to the determination of any other matter referred to Justices,—it is enacted as follows: In all cases where any damages, costs, or expenses, are by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, directed to be paid, and the method of ascertaining the amount or enforcing the payment thereof is not provided for, such amount, in case of dispute, shall be ascertained and determined by two Justices; and if the amount so ascertained be not paid by the company or other party liable to pay the same within seven days after demand, the amount may be recovered by distress of the goods of the company or other party liable as aforesaid; and the Justices by whom the same shall have been ordered to be paid, or either of them, or any other Justice, on application, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly.

CXLI. If sufficient goods of the company cannot be found whereon to levy any such damages, costs, and expenses payable by the company, the same may, if the amount thereof do not exceed 20*l.*, be recovered by distress of the goods of the treasurer of the company; and the Justices aforesaid, or either of them, on application, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly; but no such distress shall issue against the goods of such treasurer unless seven days previous notice in writing, stating the amount so due, and demanding payment thereof, have been given to such treasurer, or left at his residence; and if such treasurer pay any money under such distress as aforesaid he may retain the amount so paid by him, and all costs and expenses occasioned thereby, out of any money belonging to the company, coming into his custody or controul, or he may sue the company for the same.

CXLII. Where in this or the special Act any question of compensation, expenses, charges, or damages, or other matter, is referred to the determination of any one Justice or more, it shall be lawful for any Justice, upon the application of either party, to summon the other party to appear before one Justice, or before two Justices, as the case may require, at a time and place to be named in such summons; and upon the appearance of such parties, or in the absence of any of them, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such one Justice, or such two Justices, as the case may be, to hear and determine such question, and for that purpose to examine such parties or any of them, and their witnesses, on oath; and the cost of every such inquiry shall be in the discretion of such Justices, and they shall determine the amount thereof.

CXLIII. The company shall publish the short particulars of the several offences for which any penalty is imposed by this or the special Act, or by any bye-law of the company affecting other persons than the shareholders, officers, or servants of the company, and of the amount of every such penalty, and shall cause such particulars to be painted on a board, or printed upon paper and pasted thereon, and shall cause such board to be hung up or affixed on some conspicuous part of the principal place of business of the company, and where any such penalties are of local application shall cause such boards to be affixed in some conspicuous place in the immediate neighbourhood to which such penalties are applicable or have reference; and such particulars shall be renewed as often as the same or any part thereof is obliterated or destroyed; and no such penalty shall be recoverable unless it shall have been published and kept published in the manner hereinbefore required.

CXLIV. If any person pull down or injure any board put up or affixed as required by this or the special Act for the purpose of publishing any bye-law or penalty, or shall obliterate any of the letters or figures thereon, he shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding 5*l.*, and shall defray the expenses attending the restoration of such board.

CXLV. Every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special Act, or by any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before two Justices; and on complaint being made to any Justice he shall issue a summons requiring the party complained against to appear before two Justices at a time and place to be named in such summons, and every such summons shall be served on the party offending either in person or by leaving the same with some inmate at his usual place of abode; and upon the appearance of the party complained against, or in his absence, after proof of the due service of such summons, it shall be lawful for any two Justices to proceed to the hearing of the complaint, and that although no information in writing or in print shall have been exhibited before them; and upon proof of the offence, either by the confession of the party complained against, or upon the oath of one credible witness or more, it shall be lawful for such Justices to convict the offender, and upon such conviction to adjudge the offender to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, as well as such costs attending the conviction as such Justices shall think fit.

CXLVI. If forthwith upon any such adjudication as aforesaid the amount of the penalty or forfeiture, and of such costs as aforesaid, be not paid, the amount of such penalty and costs shall be levied by distress, and such Justices, or either of them, shall issue their or his warrant of distress accordingly.

CXLVII. It shall be lawful for any such Justice to order any offender so convicted as aforesaid to be detained and kept in safe custody until return can be conveniently made to the warrant of distress to be issued for levying such penalty or forfeiture and costs, unless the offender give sufficient security, by way of recognizance or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the Justice, for his appearance before him on the day appointed for such return, such day not being more than eight days from the time of taking such security; but if before issuing such warrant of distress it shall appear to the Justice, by the admission of the offender or otherwise, that no sufficient distress can be had within the jurisdiction of such Justice whereon to levy such penalty or forfeiture and costs, he may, if he thinks fit, refrain from issuing such warrant of distress; and in such case, or if such warrant shall have been issued, and upon the return thereof such insufficiency as aforesaid shall be made to appear to the Justice, then such Justice shall by warrant cause such offender to be committed to gaol, there to remain without bail for any term not exceeding three months, unless such penalty or forfeiture and costs be sooner paid and satisfied.

CXLVIII. Where in this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any sum of money, whether in the nature of penalty or otherwise, is directed to be levied by distress, such sum of money shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party liable to pay the same; and the overplus arising from the sale of such goods and chattels, after satisfying such sum of money, and the expenses of the distress and sale, shall be returned, on demand, to the party whose goods shall have been distrained.

CXLIX. No distress levied by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be deemed unlawful nor shall any party making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, warrant of distress, or other proceeding relating thereto, nor shall such party be deemed a trespasser ab initio on account of any irregularity afterwards committed by him, but all persons aggrieved by such defect or irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action upon the case.

CL. The Justices by whom any such penalty or forfeiture shall be imposed may, where the application thereof is not otherwise provided for, award not more than one half thereof to the informer, and shall award the remainder to the overseers of the poor of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed, to be applied in aid of the poor's rate of such parish, or if the place wherein the offence shall have been committed shall be extra-parochial, then such Justices shall direct such remainder to be applied in aid of the poor's rate of such extra-parochial place, or, if there shall not be any poor's rate therein, in aid of the poor's rate of any adjoining parish or district.

CL. No person shall be liable to the payment of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, for any offence made cognizable before a Justice, unless the complaint respecting such offence shall have been made before such Justice within six months next after the commission of such offence.

CLII. If, through any act, neglect, or default on account whereof any person shall have incurred any penalty imposed by this or the special Act, any damage to the property of the company shall have been committed by such person, he shall be liable to make good such damage as well as to pay such penalty; and the amount of such damages shall, in case of dispute, be determined by the Justices by whom the party incurring such penalty shall have been convicted; and on non-payment of such damages, on demand, the same shall be levied by distress, and such Justices, or one of them, shall issue their or his warrant accordingly.

CLIII. It shall be lawful for any Justice to summon any person to appear before him as a witness in any matter in which such Justice shall have jurisdiction under the provisions of this or the special Act, at a time and place mentioned in such summons, and to administer to him an oath to testify the truth in such matter; and if any person so summoned shall, without reasonable excuse, refuse or neglect to appear at the time and place appointed for that purpose, having been paid or tendered a reasonable sum for his expenses, or if any person appearing shall refuse to be examined upon oath or to give evidence before such Justice, every such person shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l.* for every such offence.

CLIV. It shall be lawful for any officer or agent of the company, and all persons called by him to his assistance, to seize and detain any person who shall have committed any offence against the provisions of this or the special Act, and whose name and residence shall be unknown to such officer or agent, and convey him, with all convenient despatch, before some Justice, without any warrant or other authority than this or the special Act; and such Justice shall proceed with all convenient despatch to the hearing and determining of the complaint against such offender.

CLV. The Justices before whom any person shall be convicted of any offence against this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, may cause the conviction to be drawn up according to the form in the Schedule to this Act annexed.

CLVI. No proceeding in pursuance of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, nor shall the same be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of the superior courts.

CLVII. If any party shall feel aggrieved by any determination or adjudication of any Justice with respect to any penalty or forfeiture under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, such party may appeal to the General Quarter Sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal shall have arisen; but no such appeal shall be entertained unless it be made within four months next after the making of such determination or adjudication, nor unless ten days' notice in writing of such appeal, stating the nature and grounds thereof, be given to the party against whom the appeal shall be brought, nor unless the appellant forthwith after such notice enter into recognizances, with two sufficient sureties, before a Justice, conditioned duly to prosecute such appeal, and to abide the order of the Court thereon.

CLVIII. At the Quarter Sessions for which such notice shall be given the Court shall proceed to hear and determine the appeal in a summary way, or they may, if they think fit, adjourn it to the following sessions; and upon the hearing of such appeal the Court may, if they think fit, mitigate any penalty or forfeiture, or they may confirm or quash the adjudication, and order any money paid by the appellant, or levied by distress upon his goods, to be returned to him, and may also order such further satisfaction to be made to the party injured as they may judge reasonable; and they may make such order concerning the costs, both of the adjudication and of the appeal, as they may think reasonable.

CLIX. Provided and enacted, That notwithstanding anything herein or in the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, contained, every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or by any bye-law in pursuance thereof, in respect of any offence which shall take place within the metropolitan police district, shall be recovered, enforced, accounted for, and, except where the application thereof is otherwise specially provided for, shall be paid to the receiver of the metropolitan police district, and shall be applied in the same manner as penalties or forfeitures, other than fines upon drunken persons, or upon constables for misconduct, or for assaults upon police constables, are directed to be recovered, enforced, accounted for, paid, and applied by an Act 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, intitled 'An Act for regulating the Police Courts in the Metropolis;' and every order or conviction of any of the police magistrates, in respect of any such forfeiture or penalty shall be subject to the like appeal, and upon the same terms, as is provided in respect of any order or conviction of any of the said police magistrates by the said last-mentioned Act; and every magistrate by whom any order or conviction shall have been made shall have the same power of binding over the witnesses who shall have been examined, and such witnesses shall be entitled to the same allowance of expenses as he or they would have had or been entitled to in case the order, conviction, and appeal had been made in pursuance of the provisions of the said last-mentioned Act.

CLX. That every person who, upon any examination upon oath, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall wilfully and corruptly give false evidence, shall be liable to the penalties of wilful and corrupt perjury.

CLXI. Declared and enacted, That all sums of money which have been or shall be paid into the Bank of Ireland in the name and with the privity of the Accountant General of the Court of Chancery of Ireland, under the provisions of an Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 117, intituled 'An Act to provide for the Custody of certain Monies paid in pursuance of the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament by Subscribers to Works or Undertakings to be effected under the Authority of Parliament,' shall and may be paid out and applied under any order of the said Court of Chancery exempt from ushers poundage.

CLXII. And with respect to the provision to be made for affording access to the special Act by all parties interested,—it is enacted as follows: The company shall at all times after the expiration of six months after the passing of the special Act keep in their principal office of business a copy of the special Act, printed by the printers to Her Majesty, or some of them; shall also within the space of such six months deposit in the office of each of the clerks of the peace of the several counties into which the works shall extend a copy of such special Act, so printed as aforesaid; and the said clerks of the peace shall receive, and they and the company respectively shall retain, the said copies of the special Act, and shall permit all persons interested to inspect the same, and make extracts or copies therefrom, in the like manner, and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided in the case of certain plans and sections by an Act, 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 83, intituled 'An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties, and other Persons, to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament.'

CLXIII. If the company shall fail to keep or deposit, as hereinbefore mentioned, any of the said copies of the special Act, they shall forfeit 20*l.* for every such offence, and also 5*l.* for every day afterwards during which such copy shall be not so kept or deposited.

CLXIV. That this Act shall not extend to Scotland.

CLXV. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in the present session of Parliament.

20. Alteration of the Act.

By this Act,

After reciting that, by 35 Geo. 3. (I.), it was amongst other things enacted, that the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper of Ireland, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench in Ireland, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas in Ireland, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, for the time being, together with certain other persons therein named, and the persons thereafter to be elected in the manner by the said Act directed, should be trustees for the purpose of establishing, endowing, and maintaining one academy for the education only of persons professing the Roman Catholic religion, and that the said trustees should have full power and authority to receive subscriptions and donations to enable them to establish and endow an academy for the education of persons professing the Roman Catholic religion, and to purchase and acquire lands not exceeding the annual value of 1,000*l.*, and to erect and maintain all such buildings as might be by the said trustees deemed necessary for the lodging and accommodation of the president, masters, professors, fellows, and students who should from time to time be admitted into or reside in said academy; and it was further enacted, that it should and might be lawful for any popish ecclesiastic to officiate in a chapel or building to be appointed for that purpose by the said trustees or any seven or more of them, any law, statute, or provision to the contrary notwithstanding. And that, by 40 Geo. 3. (I.), after reciting that a college or seminary had been established at Maynooth for the education of persons professing the Popish or Roman Catholic religion, and that large sums of money had been granted to the trustees named in the Act hereinbefore recited, to enable them to improve and extend the said institution, and that it had become necessary to make further provision for the good government of the said college or seminary, it was amongst other things enacted, that the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer should cease to be trustees for carrying the said first-recited Act into execution, and that their successors in the said offices respectively should not thereafter be trustees by virtue of the said first-recited Act for carrying it into execution, and that the other persons named in the said first-recited Act in that behalf, or such other persons as had been elected or thereafter should be elected to fill any vacancy occasioned by the death, removal, or resignation of any such person respectively, should continue trustees for the execution of the said first-recited Act, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if the said Act now in recital had not been enacted: And that, by 48 Geo. 3. c. cxlv. it was amongst other things enacted, that it should be lawful for the trustees for the time being of the said college or academy, or any seven or more of them, to purchase or acquire lands not exceeding in value the annual sum of 1,000*l.*, exclusive of the value of lands and premises held under a lease from William Robert, late Duke of Leinster, and the buildings thereon or thereafter to be erected, and used for the purposes of the said college or academy; and it was provided and further enacted, that any lands, tenements, or hereditaments already purchased or acquired under or by virtue of the power for that purpose given to the said trustees or any seven or more of them in and by the said hereinbefore first-recited Act should be deemed part of the lands which they were so authorized to purchase or acquire as aforesaid, and that no more lands, tenements, or hereditaments should be purchased or acquired by the said trustees or any seven or more of them than what, together with any lands already purchased or acquired by them, would amount to the annual value of 1,000*l*. And that it is productive of inconvenience and insecurity that the said trustees can take no effectual grants of lands for the purposes of the said college or seminary to them and their successors; and it is therefore expedient that the said trustees should be incorporated:

It is Enacted,

I. That the trustees of the said college or seminary, and their successors for ever, shall be one body politic and corporate by the name of "The Trustees of the College of Maynooth," and by that name shall have perpetual succession and a common seal, and by that name shall and may sue and be sued, and shall have and possess the several powers and authorities vested in the said trustees under the said recited Acts.

II. That the said body politic and corporate, and their successors, by the said name, shall be for ever able and capable in law to take, purchase, receive, possess, hold, and enjoy to them and their successors any goods or chattels or personal property whatsoever, and also be able and capable in law (notwithstanding the Statutes in Mortmain) to take, purchase, hold, and enjoy to them and their successors any messuages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments whatsoever, the yearly value of which shall not exceed in the whole the sum of 3,000*l*., exclusive of the value of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments already purchased or acquired by the said trustees; and it shall be lawful for all and every person and persons, and bodies politic and corporate, otherwise competent, to grant, sell, alien, and convey in mortmain unto and to the use of the said body politic and corporate incorporated by this Act any messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments not exceeding in the whole such annual value as aforesaid.

III. That all lands, tenements, or hereditaments which have been at any time heretofore purchased or in any manner acquired by the trustees of the said college, or any seven or more of them, under or by virtue of the powers for that purpose given to them by any of the said hereinbefore recited Acts, shall be and the same are thereby vested in the said body politic and corporate incorporated by this Act, subject to the trusts upon which the said lands, tenements, and hereditaments are now respectively held.

And after reciting that it is expedient that provision should be made for the payment of the salaries of the president, vice-president, officers, and professors of the said college, and for the expense of commons, attendance, and other necessaries to be supplied to and for their use, and that the number of professors therein should be increased;—

It is Enacted,

IV. That from and after the passing of this Act there shall be paid and payable to the said body politic and corporate, for the purposes aforesaid, any sum or sums of money not exceeding in the whole the annual sum of 6,000*l*.

And after reciting that by the statutes of the said college there has been established therein an order of students called "Senior Students," amounting to twenty in number, to whose exclusive benefit has been applied the annual revenue arising from the bequest of Baron Dunboyne, in said statutes mentioned, together with a further yearly sum of 700*l*. out of the annual parliamentary grant made to the said college: and that it is expedient that the provision for the said senior students on the Dunboyne establishment should be augmented;—

It is Enacted,

V. That from and after the passing of this Act, so long as the annual revenue arising from the said bequest of Baron Dunboyne shall be applied to the exclusive benefit of the said twenty senior students, there shall be paid and payable to the said body politic and corporate, for the said twenty senior students, the annual sums for that purpose specified in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed.

And after reciting that there are three senior and four junior classes in the said college, and 250 free students on the establishment, maintained and educated out of the annual parliamentary grant made to the said college: and that it is expedient that provision should be made for an additional number of free students; (that is to say,) for 250 free students in the said three senior classes, and 250 free students in the said four junior classes;—

It is Enacted,

VI. That from and after the passing of this Act there shall be paid and payable to the said body politic and corporate, for each of the said 250 free students in the said three senior classes, the annual sums for that purpose specified in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed.

VII. That in order to provide for the expense of commons, attendance, and other necessaries to be supplied to and for the use of the said senior students on the Dunboyne Establishment, and to and for the use of the said 500 free students, there shall be paid and payable to the said body politic and corporate, for the purposes aforesaid, any sum or sums of money not exceeding in the whole the annual sum of 28*l*. for each such student.

And after reciting that the buildings for the public purposes of the said college, and for the lodging and accommodation of the professors and students, are inadequate and insufficient and out of repair, and it is expedient that provision should be made for the erection of additional buildings for the purposes aforesaid, and that the present buildings should be put into efficient repair, and that said buildings, together with the additions to be made thereto, should from time to time be kept in repair, and provided with sufficient and necessary furniture;—

It is Enacted,

VIII. That the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland for the time being shall be and they are hereby constituted Commissioners for the purpose of purchasing, renting, or providing, as hereinafter mentioned, any houses, buildings, lands, tenements, or hereditaments that may be necessary for the said college and the purposes aforesaid, and for erecting thereon suitable and necessary buildings and improvements, and for enlarging, improving, upholding, maintaining, repairing, fitting up, and furnishing from time to time the said college, and the buildings and premises occupied therewith.

ix. That in order to enable the said Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland to purchase and provide the buildings, lands, tenements, or hereditaments which may be required for the said college, and the additions to be made thereto, it shall and may be lawful for the said Commissioners, at the request of the said body politic and corporate, and by and with the consent and approbation in writing of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, to contract and agree with any person or persons, or body or bodies corporate or politic, for the purchase or renting of any buildings, lands, tenements, or hereditaments required for such college, and in order to make the necessary additions thereto, and also for the purchase of any subsisting leases, terms, estates, or interests therein or charges thereon; and the said buildings, lands, tenements, or hereditaments so contracted and agreed for shall be conveyed, assigned, or demised to the said trustees of the College of Maynooth incorporated by this Act.

x. That all and every the expense of purchasing or providing the houses, buildings, lands, tenements, or hereditaments necessary for the said college under the provisions of this Act, and of erecting the necessary buildings for the same, and of putting the said college into repair, and of fitting up and furnishing the same and the buildings so to be erected, not exceeding in the whole the sum of 30,000*l.*, shall be discharged and paid by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

xi. That the several sums payable by this Act and the Schedule thereto annexed shall be charged upon and payable by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

xii. That the accounts of the receipt and expenditure of all monies paid under the provisions of this Act shall once in each year be forwarded to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury by the said body politic and corporate incorporated by this Act, and shall be by the said Commissioners referred for audit to such person or persons as the said Commissioners shall from time to time in that behalf appoint; and that the said person or persons so appointed shall thereupon proceed to the examination, audit, and discharge of the said accounts, at such time and in such manner as the said Commissioners shall direct, and shall for that purpose have and exercise all the powers and authorities now possessed by the Commissioners for auditing public accounts by virtue of any Act or Acts now in force.

And after reciting that it was enacted by the said Act secondly above recited, that the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of Ireland for the time being, the Lord Chief Justice of His Majesty's Court of King's Bench in Ireland for the time being, the Lord Chief Justice of His Majesty's Court of Common Pleas in Ireland for the time being, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Lord Chief Baron of His Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland for the time being, and their successors in the said offices respectively, together with certain other persons in the said Act named, should be and they were thereby nominated and appointed visitors of the said college or seminary, with full visitatorial powers to superintend the same:—

It is Enacted,

xiii. That from and after the passing of this Act so much of the said recited Acts as enact that the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and their successors in the said offices respectively, shall have visitatorial power over the said academy or college, and over all persons on the foundation or educated therein, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

xiv. That the other visitors in being at the time of the passing of this Act, or such other persons as shall hereafter be elected to fill any vacancy on the death or resignation of such visitors, according to the provisions of the Act hereinbefore secondly recited, together with such other five persons as Her Majesty shall by warrant under the sign manual from time to time nominate and appoint, shall be hereafter the visitors of the said college and corporation.

And after reciting that by the said Act hereinbefore secondly recited it is amongst other things enacted, that the visitors of the said Act mentioned, or any three or more of them, should once in every three years from the passing of the said Act visit the said college or seminary, and call before them the president, vice-president, professors, tutors, and all other members thereof, and the officers and servants of the said college or seminary, and diligently inquire into the government and management of the said college or seminary, and, if necessary, examine on oath every member thereof in all matters touching the management, government, and discipline of the same, or any violation of the statutes or ordinances which had been or should be made for the admission of any member of the said college or seminary, or for the government or discipline of the same, and that the first visitation of the said college should be held as aforesaid within twelve months after the passing of the said Act: And that it is expedient that, instead of triennial visitations by the said last recited Act appointed, visitations should be held not less than once in each year therein;—

It is Enacted,

xv. That the visitors by this Act appointed, or any three or more of them, shall once in every year from the passing of this Act visit the said college or seminary, and inquire in manner aforesaid into the management, government, and discipline of the same, and shall have the several powers and authorities vested in the visitors under the said Act secondly hereinbefore recited; and that the first visitation of the said college shall be held within twelve months after the passing of this Act.

xvi. That, in addition to such periodical or ordinary visitation, the visitors by this Act appointed, or any three of them shall in like manner visit the said college whensoever and so often as they shall be thereunto required by the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland for the time being, by warrant or order signed by him or them.

XVII. Provided and enacted, That the authority of the said visitors shall not extend to or in any manner affect the exercise of the Roman Catholic religion or the religious doctrine or discipline thereof within the said college or seminary, otherwise than as hereinafter is provided; and that in visiting the said college or seminary the said visitors shall judge and determine according to such bye-laws, rules, and regulations as have been or shall be made for the government and discipline thereof, pursuant to the provisions of the said recited Acts or of this Act respectively.

And after reciting that by the said Act hereinbefore secondly recited it is amongst other things enacted, that in all matters which relate to the exercise, doctrine, and discipline of the Roman Catholic religion the visitatorial power over the said college shall be exercised exclusively by such of the said visitors as are or shall be of the Roman Catholic religion, in the presence of the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, and of the three Chief Judges, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if they or any of them shall think proper to attend;—

It is Enacted,

XVIII. That in all matters which relate to the exercise, doctrine, and discipline of the Roman Catholic religion the visitatorial power over the said college shall be exercised exclusively by such of the said visitors of the Roman Catholic religion as have been or shall be elected under the provisions of the said Act secondly above recited, in the presence of the said persons whom Her Majesty shall, by warrant under the sign manual, from time to time nominate and appoint as aforesaid to be visitors of the said college, if they or any of them shall think proper to attend.

XIX. That the secretary or some other officer of the said college shall make minutes of the proceedings of the said visitors at their several visitations, and shall keep a book in which he shall enter a fair copy of such minutes, and the names of the visitors present at each visitation; and the said visitors shall after every visitation held at the said college report to Her Majesty the several proceedings held thereat, signed by some two or more of them; and a copy of such report shall be communicated to both Houses of Parliament within six weeks after the same shall be made, if Parliament be then sitting, or if not then within six weeks next after the next meeting of Parliament.

XX. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed during this present session of Parliament.

AN ACT to prevent fishing for Trout or other Fresh-water Fish by Nets in the Rivers and Waters in Scotland.

(30th June 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Prohibiting fishing for trout, &c. by means of nets in any rivers, &c. in Scotland.
2. Penalty for trespassing on any ground or river to fish with net.
3. Possession of nets evidence of intent.
4. Persons trespassing may be seized.
5. Justices and proprietors not to be disqualified.
6. For the recovery of penalties.
7. Appeal.
8. Application of penalties.
9. Limitation of actions.
10. Interpretation of Act.
11. Saving the laws regarding the salmon fisheries.
12. Alteration of Act.

By this Act,

After reciting that it is expedient that provision should be made for preventing the destruction of trout and other fresh-water fish by nets in the rivers, waters, and lochs of Scotland;—

It is Enacted,

1. That it shall not be lawful for any person whatsoever, not being the proprietor of the land through or by which any river or water flows, or on which any loch is wholly or partially situated, or not having a right there to fish for trout or fresh-water fish, or not having a written permission from some such proprietor or person entitled to fish as aforesaid, at any time after the passing of this Act, to fish for trout or other fresh-water fish in any such river, water, or loch in Scotland, with any net of any kind or description; and if any person, not being a proprietor or having right or permission as aforesaid, shall wilfully take, fish for, or attempt to take, or aid and assist in taking or fishing for or attempting to take or fish for, in or from any such river, water, or loch, any trout or other fresh-water fish, by or with any net of any kind or description, such person shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 5*l*. for every such offence, besides forfeiting the trout or fish taken, and also every boat or net in or by which the same may have been taken or attempted to be taken, and shall also pay the full expenses of the conviction.

STAT.—VOL. XXIII.

II. That if any person shall trespass upon any ground, enclosed or unenclosed, or in or upon any river, water, or loch, with intent to take with any net any trout or other fresh-water fish, such person shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 5*l*. for every such offence.

III. That if any such trespasser shall have in his possession any net of any description whereby trout or other fresh-water fish may be taken or killed, the possession thereof shall be held to be sufficient evidence of the intent of such trespasser to commit such offence.

IV. That it shall be lawful for any person, without any warrant or other authority than this Act, brevi manu, to seize and detain any person who shall be found committing any offence against this Act, and to carry such person before the sheriff or any Justice of the Peace in the county within which the offence shall take place, or to deliver such person to a constable, who is hereby required to carry such person before such sheriff or Justice, and the sheriff or Justice of the Peace before whom such offender shall be brought shall forthwith examine and discharge or commit such offender until caution de judicio sibi be found, as the case may require; and it shall in like manner be lawful to seize and detain any boat or net of any description used or intended to be used in the commission of any such offence, and also any fish taken by any such offender, and to give information thereof to the sheriff.

V. That all Justices of the Peace shall and may act in the execution of this Act notwithstanding that such Justices shall be the proprietors of land through or by which any river or water may flow, or upon which any loch may be wholly or partially situated, or shall otherwise have a right of trout or fresh-water fishing in any such river, water, or loch, except in cases in which any such Justice is a party to the prosecution of the case, or is directly interested in the result thereof; and no such proprietor or party having right as aforesaid shall be incompetent as a witness to prove any offence committed against this Act by reason of his being such proprietor or having such right.

And for the recovery of the penalties and forfeitures imposed by this Act,—

It is Enacted,

VI. That any such penalties or forfeitures may be recovered by summary proceeding upon complaint in writing made by any party prosecuting for the same to the sheriff of the county in which such offence shall be committed, or to the sheriff of any county in which the offender may be found, and on such complaint such sheriff shall issue a warrant for bringing the party complained against immediately before him, or shall issue an order requiring such party to appear at a time and place to be named in such order; and every such order shall be served on the party complained against either in person or by leaving with some inmate at his usual place of abode a copy of such order and of the complaint whereon the same has proceeded; and either upon the appearance or on the default to appear of the party complained against it shall be lawful for the sheriff to proceed to the hearing of the complaint, and upon proof of the offence, either by the confession of the party complained against, or upon the oath of one credible witness or more, and without any written pleadings or record of evidence, to convict the offender, and upon such conviction to decern, adjudge, and sentence him to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, and the expenses attending the conviction, and to grant warrant for imprisoning him until such penalty or forfeiture and expenses shall be paid: Provided always, that such warrant shall specify the amount of such penalty or forfeiture and expenses, and shall also specify a period at the expiration of which the party shall be discharged, notwithstanding such penalty or forfeiture and expenses shall not have been paid, and which period shall in no case exceed two calendar months; and it shall be lawful for the sheriff to make such orders concerning the immediate disposal of any boat, net, or fish seized or forfeited under the provisions of this Act as may be necessary.

VII. That it shall be lawful for any person who shall think himself aggrieved by any judgment of the sheriff pronounced in any case arising under this Act to appeal from the same to the next Circuit Court of Justiciary, or, where there are no Circuit Courts, to the High Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh, in the manner, and by and under the rules, limitations, conditions and restrictions contained in 20 Geo. 2. c. 43, for taking away and abolishing heritable jurisdiction in Scotland, with this variation, that such person shall, in place of finding caution in the terms prescribed by the said Act, be bound to find caution to pay the penalty or forfeiture and expenses awarded against him by the sentence appealed from, in the event of the appeal being dismissed or not insisted in, together with any additional expenses that may be awarded by the Court on deciding or dismissing the appeal; and it shall not be competent to appeal from or bring the judgment of any sheriff acting in the execution of this Act under review, by advocacy or suspension or by reduction, or in any other way than as herein provided.

VIII. That all penalties and forfeitures imposed under the authority of this Act shall, when levied, be paid, the one half thereof to the prosecutor, and the other half to the poor of the parish within which the offence shall have been committed.

IX. That no prosecution or other proceeding whatever shall be brought or commenced against any person for any offence against this Act, unless the same shall be commenced within six calendar months after such offence shall have been committed.

X. That the words "river," "water," or "loch," occurring in this Act shall mean and include any stream, burn, mill-pool, mill-lead, mill-dam, sluice, pond, cut, canal, and aqueduct, and every other collection or run of water in which trouts and other fresh-water fish breed, haunt, or are found or preserved; that the word "sheriff" shall mean the sheriff of the county in which the offence happens or case arises, and shall include the sheriff substitutes of such sheriffs; that the singular shall include the plural number, and words importing the plural number shall include the singular; and words importing the masculine gender shall include females.

XI. That nothing herein contained shall affect any Act of Parliament, general or local, passed for the preservation of the salmon fisheries in Scotland, or in relation to the fishing of salmon or fish of the salmon kind in Scotland.

XII. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act of Parliament to be passed in the present session of Parliament.

CAP. XXVII.

AN ACT to amend the Act to establish Military Savings Banks.

(30th June 1846.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Secretary at War to direct certain monies to be paid to the account of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, and carried to the account of the Military Savings Banks.
2. Investment of such monies.
3. Secretary at War may direct monies invested in annuities to be transferred to account of Paymaster General.
4. Commissioners for Reduction of National Debt empowered to sell.
5. Account to be annually laid before Parliament.
6. The funds exempted from provisions of Acts relating to Savings Banks.
7. Alteration of Act.

By this Act,

After reciting that, pursuant to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 71, there have been established in the several regiments of cavalry and infantry in Her Majesty's service Regimental Savings Banks for the custody and increase of small savings, belonging to the non-commissioned officers and soldiers serving therein: And that such savings have been applied in diminution of the charge of the public military expenditure, placed under the controul of the Secretary at War for the time being: And that it is expedient to amend the said Act:—

It is Enacted,

1. That it shall be lawful for the Secretary at War for the time being to authorize, by his warrant, payment from the funds granted for army services of the full amount of the money received and applied for the public service, as well as of any money which may hereafter be received and applied under and by virtue of the said recited Act, together with the interest allowed thereon, from the account of the Paymaster General to the account of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt; and the cashier of the Bank of England is hereby required to receive all such monies, and to place the same into a separate account, to be raised in the names of the said Commissioners in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, denominated "The Fund for the Military Savings Banks:" Provided always, that previous to any payment being made into the Bank of England as aforesaid, the person applying for that purpose shall in all cases produce to the officer of the Commissioners, at their office in London, a warrant from the Secretary at War, stating that the money mentioned therein is part of the funds of the Military Savings Banks.

II. That the said Commissioners shall cause all the monies paid into the Bank of England, and placed to their account, in pursuance of this Act, to be invested from time to time, under such regulations as the said Commissioners shall direct, in the purchase of any bank annuities in their names, and to be carried to the account hereinbefore provided; and the interest or dividends which shall arise from time to time, and become due thereon, shall in like manner be invested in the purchase of bank annuities: Provided always, that such interest or dividends shall not be subject or liable to any taxes, charges, or impositions whatever.

III. That it shall and may be lawful for the Secretary at War for the time being, by his warrant, to require that within fourteen days from the day the same is lodged at the office of the said Commissioners, the whole or any part of the bank annuities standing in the books of the Bank of England in the names of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, on account of the fund for the Military Savings Banks, shall be sold, and the produce thereof paid to the account of the Paymaster General at the Bank of England.

IV. That it shall and may be lawful for the said Commissioners, and they are hereby authorized and empowered, on the request as aforesaid of the said Secretary at War, to sell from time to time any part of the said bank annuities which shall be standing in their names in the books of the Bank of England in pursuance of this Act, and the certificate of the cashier of the Bank of England of the money having been placed to the account of the Paymaster General shall be a full and sufficient discharge to the said Commissioners.

v. That the gross amount of all monies received and paid by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt under the authority of this Act, prepared up to the 5th of January in every year, shall be annually laid before both Houses of Parliament on or before the 1st of April in every year, if Parliament shall be then sitting, or if Parliament shall not be sitting, then within the first fourteen days of the next session of Parliament.

vi. That the funds placed in the hands of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt under the authority of this Act, shall not be taken to be within the provisions of any Act heretofore passed relating to Savings Banks, but shall be held in trust for the non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the army, at the disposal of the Secretary at War for the time being.

vii. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CAP. XXVIII.

AN ACT to empower Canal Companies and the Commissioners of Navigable Rivers to vary their Tolls, Rates, and Charges on different Parts of their Navigations.

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Canal companies authorized to vary their tolls or rates on different portions of their canals; and also, from time to time, to reduce and again advance their tolls or rates.
2. Tolls to be charged equally to all persons under the like circumstances.
3. Act not to apply to existing companies until a meeting of shareholders have determined thereupon, nor in other cases until approved by trustees or proprietors, and notices thereof duly published.
4. Saving rights specifically reserved to canal companies and others by existing Acts of Parliament.
5. Canal companies subject to a limitation of profits not to raise their dues so as to exceed the maximum of profits.
6. Nothing herein to exempt any canal, &c. from any general Act.
7. Act may be amended, &c.

By this Act,

After reciting that by divers Acts of Parliament various canal companies and the commissioners or trustees of several navigable rivers have been authorized and empowered to levy and receive certain tolls, rates, and charges for the use of their respective canals and navigations, which tolls, rates, and charges are for the most part required to be levied at one uniform rate per ton or per mile throughout the entire length of the said navigations and rivers respectively, without regard to any difference of circumstances which may exist in reference thereto: And that by an Act of Parliament passed in this present session, called, 'The Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845,' powers have been given to railway companies to vary the tolls, rates, and charges upon railways, so as to accommodate them to the circumstances of the traffic thereon: And that greater competition for the public advantage would be obtained if canal companies and the commissioners or trustees of navigable rivers which have already been or may hereafter be from time to time incorporated or established, or which are regulated under the authority of Parliament, were to have the like powers granted to them in respect of their several canals and navigations and other works connected therewith; but such beneficial purposes cannot be effected without the authority of Parliament:—

It is Enacted,

1. That from and after the passing of this Act, and subject to the provisions and limitations herein contained, it shall be lawful for the company of proprietors of any canal, or for the undertakers, commissioners, or trustees of any navigation or navigable river, already or hereafter to be established or incorporated or which is regulated under the authority of Parliament or for their respective lessees, committees, directors, or managers, or their superintendents, or other agents by them severally authorized, in such manner as may be required by their respective Acts of incorporation or for regulating such canals or navigations, from time to time to alter or vary the tolls, rates, and duties granted to them, or by them respectively authorized to be levied and received for the use of their several canals or navigations, or any branches therefrom, or any railways or tramways connected therewith, and made under the authority of such canal or navigation Acts respectively, either upon the whole or upon or for any particular portion or portions of such canals, navigations, branches, railways, or tramways, according to local circumstances, or the quantity of traffic or otherwise, as they shall think fit, and also from time to time to lower or reduce and again to raise or advance, such tolls, rates, and duties, and also any tolls or charges by them respectively authorized to be levied and received for any haulage, trackage, or other power supplied by them, either upon the whole or upon any particular portion or portions of their said several canals, navigations, branches, railways, and tramways, as to such companies, commissioners, trustees, or lessees, or their committees, directors, managers, or superintendents respectively, shall seem fit, any thing in the several Acts of incorporation, or for regulating any such canals or navigations, contained to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided always, that in no case shall the tolls, rates, duties, and charges to be at any time levied or made by any such companies, commissioners, trustees, or lessees, for the use of any such canals, navigations, branches, railways, or tramways, or for the supply of any such haulage, trackage, or other power, exceed the amount which they are by their said several Acts respectively authorized to levy or receive.

II. Provided and enacted, That all tolls, rates, and duties for the use of any such canals, navigations, branches, railways, or tramways shall be at all times charged equally to all persons, and after the same rate, whether per mile, or per ton per mile, or otherwise, in respect of all boats, barges, and other vessels of a like description passing along or using the same portion of the said canal, navigation, branches, railways, or tramways respectively, and upon all goods, animals, articles, and things of a like description, and conveyed or propelled in a like boat, barge, or other vessel passing along or using the same portion of the said canal, navigation, branches, railways, or tramways, under the like circumstances; and that all tolls and charges for haulage or trackage or other power, to be supplied by any such company, commissioners, trustees, or lessees, shall be at all times charged equally to all persons, and after the same rate, whether per mile, or per ton per mile, or otherwise, in respect of all goods, animals, articles, and things of a like description, and conveyed in a like boat or vessel, drawn or propelled by a like power, and passing along or using the same portion of any such canal, navigation, branches, railways, or tramways, under the like circumstances; and no reduction or advance in any tolls or charges for the use of any such canal, navigation, branches, railways, or tramways, or for the supply of any haulage, trackage, or other power by the said companies, commissioners, trustees, or lessees, shall be made, either directly or indirectly, in favour of or against any particular company or person passing along or using the same portion of such canal, navigation, branches, railways, or tramways.

III. Provided and enacted, That this Act shall not apply to any canal or navigation the property wherein is vested in shareholders until a meeting of the shareholders thereof shall have been duly convened, in such manner as meetings are by their respective acts of incorporation or settlement required to be called, or are usually called, and it shall have been determined, by a majority of two-thirds of the votes of the shareholders in such meeting assembled, either in person or by proxy (where by such acts of incorporation or settlement voting by proxy is allowed), to adopt the powers hereby granted, and where such navigations are vested in commissioners or trustees, without any body of shareholders or proprietors, until a special meeting of such commissioners or trustees shall have been duly convened in such manner as special meetings are by the respective Acts for regulating such navigations required to be called, or are usually called, and it shall have been determined by a majority of such commissioners or trustees in such meeting assembled to adopt the powers by this Act granted, or to any canal or navigation the property wherein is vested in one or more owner or owners, proprietor or proprietors, unless the owner or owners, proprietor or proprietors thereof shall determine to adopt the powers and provisions hereby granted, nor in either case until public notice of such determination and intention shall have been inserted in the London Gazette in respect of canals or navigations in England or Wales, in the Edinburgh Gazette in respect of canals or navigations in Scotland, and in the Dublin Gazette in respect of canals or navigations in Ireland, and in some newspaper circulation in the county or counties wherein such canal or navigation, or some part thereof, shall pass, one month at the least previously to the exercise of such powers, whereupon, or immediately after the expiration of such notice, every such company, and all such commissioners, trustees, or lessees, owners and proprietors, or their respective committees, directors, or managers, or their agents by them duly authorized in manner aforesaid, may from time to time put in force and exercise the said powers or any of them in the manner by this Act authorized.

IV. Provided and enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall be deemed or construed to deprive any canal or navigation company, or the commissioners, trustees, undertakers, or proprietors of any canal, river or navigation, or the owners, lessees, or occupiers of any lands, collieries, quarries, or other hereditaments adjoining or near to any of such canals or navigations, or the overseers or surveyors of the roads of any parish, township, or hamlet through which any such canal or navigation may pass, of any powers, rights, privileges, exemptions, or advantages specifically and expressly secured to them by any existing Act of Parliament: Provided also, that where by any canal or navigation Act or Acts now passed the tolls, rates or duties (whether tolls per mile or tolls in gross) upon any description of goods, animals, articles, or things, or upon any boats, barges, or other vessels which shall be navigated, carried, or conveyed along any canal or navigation, or any portion thereof, and which shall pass into, out of, or along any such canal or navigation, or any portion thereof, from, into, or along any other canal or navigation, canals or navigations, adjoining or communicating therewith, or any portion thereof, or from or to the junction or junctions with any such adjoining or communicating canal or navigation, canals or navigations, are or shall be specially fixed, determined, or limited, either absolutely, or with reference to the tolls, rates, or duties to be levied or received from time to time on goods, animals, articles, or things, boats, barges, or other vessels passing into, out of, or along such canal or navigation, or any portion or portions thereof respectively, from, into, or along any other adjoining or communicating canal or navigation, canals or navigations; or from or to the junction or junctions with such other adjoining or communicating canal or navigation, canals or navigations; or where in any such Act or Acts any special enactment or provision shall have been inserted for securing a rateable reduction or advance of the respective tolls, rates, or duties to be levied or received from time to time on goods, animals, articles, or things, boats, barges, or other vessels, or on goods, animals, articles, or things of the same description, passing over, along, into or from any canal or navigation, or several and distinct portions of any canal or navigation, into or along two or more adjoining or communicating canals or navigations, or from or to the respective junctions of two or more adjoining or communicating canals or navigations, no alteration or variation of the tolls, rates, and duties so specially fixed, determined, or limited, or any or either of them, other than such alterations or variations as are respectively authorized to be made under the several Acts for regulating such canals or navigations, shall be made under the authority of this Act without the previous consent in writing of the proprietors, trustees, undertakers, or commissioners of the canal or navigation, or of all the several canals or navigations, who are expressly mentioned in such special enactments or provisions, or of the committee, directors, or managers of the company, trustees, undertakers, or commissioners, or respective companies, trustees, undertakers, or commissioners of such canal or navigation, canals or navigations, which consents such companies, trustees, undertakers, and commissioners, or their respective committees, directors or managers, are hereby authorized to give, either under their common seals respectively, or under the hand of their respective clerks or secretaries, although any such companies, trustees, or undertakers so consenting may not have adopted the other powers of this Act.

V. Provided and enacted, That where in any canal or navigation Act there shall have been inserted any special provision, which shall be still in force and unrepealed, whereby the amount of the annual dividends, interest, or profits to be shared or divided amongst the proprietors or shareholders of such canal or navigation shall have been limited not to exceed a certain per-centage or amount, and the maximum of such per-centage or amount shall have been attained at the time of the passing of this Act, it shall not be lawful for the company of proprietors, trustees, or undertakers of any such canal or navigation to avail themselves of any of the powers of this Act for the purpose of raising or increasing the tonnage rates, tolls, or duties which on the 1st of January immediately before the passing of this Act were charged or levied upon any boats, barges, or other vessels carried upon or passing along such canal or navigation, or any part thereof.

VI. That nothing herein contained shall be construed to exempt any canal or navigation company who shall adopt the powers of this Act from the operation of any general Act regulating the manner of charging tolls and other charges upon canals and navigations in respect of passengers, goods, animals, articles, and things of a like description, which may be passed in the course of any future session of Parliament.

VII. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

By this Act,

After reciting that it is expedient to regulate the labour of children, young persons, and women, in print works:—

It is Enacted,

I. That this Act shall take effect from and after the 1st of January 1846, except any provisions for the taking effect of which any other time shall be hereinafter specially limited; all which last-mentioned provisions shall take effect from and after such time as shall be hereinafter specially mentioned in that behalf.

II. That in this Act, unless another sense shall be plainly shewn by the context, or by some positive enactment to the contrary, the words "Print Work" shall be taken to mean any building or shed, and any part thereof, within which any persons are employed to print figures, patterns, or designs, by means of blocks or cylinders, or by means of any other tool, instrument, or mechanism, upon any woven fabric of cotton, wool, hair, fur, silk, flax, hemp, or jute, either separately or mixed together, or mixed with any other material; or upon any felted fabric of wool or fur, either separately or mixed with any other material; or upon any cotton, linen, woollen, worsted, or silken yarn; and the words "incidental printing process" shall be taken to mean any process of preparing, dyeing, bleaching, cleaning, calendering, dressing, or finishing incident or necessary to the completion of the chief process of printing figures, patterns, or designs upon any of the aforesaid materials, and carried on within buildings, sheds, fields, or portions of ground lying adjacent to each other, or forming a part or parts of the establishment where the chief process of printing as aforesaid is carried on; and the word "Child" shall be taken to mean a child under the age of thirteen years; and the words "Young Person" shall be taken to mean a person of the age of thirteen years and under the age of sixteen years; and the word "Parent" shall be taken to mean parent, guardian, or person having the legal custody of any such child; and any word denoting the "Masculine Gender" and "Singular Number" shall be taken to include a female as well as a male, and any number of persons; and any person who shall work in any print work, whether for wages or not, or as a learner or otherwise, either in printing or in any incidental printing process, or in cleaning any part of the print work, or in cleaning any block, cylinder, tool, or machine used therein, or in any other kind of work whatsoever, save in the cases hereinafter excepted, shall be deemed to be employed therein within the meaning of this Act; and the word "Inspector" and "Sub-Inspector" shall be taken to mean respectively an inspector and sub-inspector of print works; and the word "Agent" shall be taken to mean any person having on behalf of the occupier of any print work the care or direction thereof or of any part thereof, or of any person employed therein; and the word "Month" shall be taken to mean a calendar month; and the word "Day" shall be taken to mean from six of the clock in the morning until ten of the clock in the evening of the same day; and the word "Night" shall be taken to mean from ten of the clock in the evening of any one day until six of the clock of the next following morning; and any part of such print work may be taken to be a print work within the meaning of this Act; but this enactment shall not extend to any part of such buildings used solely for the purposes of a dwelling house; and nothing in this Act contained shall extend to any person, being a mechanic, artisan, or labourer, working only in making or repairing the machinery or any part of the print work.

III. That the inspectors and sub-inspectors of factories appointed or to be appointed by virtue of an Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 103, intituled 'An Act to regulate the Labour of Children and young Persons in the Mills and Factories of the United Kingdom,' and of another Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 15, intituled 'An Act to amend the Laws relating to Labour in Factories,' shall respectively be inspectors and sub-inspectors for carrying into effect the powers, authorities, and provisions of this Act.

IV. That every inspector and sub-inspector shall have power to enter every part of any print work at any time, by day or by night, when any person shall be employed therein, and to enter by day any place which he shall have reason to believe to be a print work, and to enter any school in which children employed in print works are educated, and at all times to take with him into any print work the certifying surgeons of the district hereinafter mentioned, and any constable or other peace officer whom he may need to assist him, and shall have power to examine, either alone or in the presence of any other person, as he shall think fit, every person whom he shall find in a print work or in such a school, or whom he shall have reason to believe to be or to have been employed in a print work within twelve months next preceding the time when he shall require him to be examined touching any matter within the provisions of this Act; and the inspector or sub-inspector may, if he shall see cause, require such person to make and sign a declaration of the truth of the matters respecting which he shall have been or shall be so examined; and every inspector and sub-inspector shall have power to examine the registers, certificates, notices, and other documents kept in pursuance of this Act; and every person who shall refuse to be examined as aforesaid, or who shall refuse to sign his name or affix his mark to a declaration of the truth of the matters respecting which he shall have been examined, or who shall in any manner attempt to conceal or otherwise prevent any child or other person from appearing before or being examined by an inspector or sub-inspector, or who shall prevent or knowingly delay the admission of an inspector or sub-inspector to any part of a print work or school, or shall prevent an inspector or sub-inspector from examining any register, certificate, notice, or other document kept in pursuance of this Act, shall be deemed guilty of wilfully obstructing the inspector or sub-inspector in the execution of the powers intrusted to him.

v. That every inspector shall keep full minutes of all his visits and proceedings, and shall report the same to one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State twice in every year, and oftener if required, and shall report the state and condition of the print works, and of the persons employed therein whose labour is regulated by this Act, and whether such print works are conducted according to the provisions of this Act.

vi. That every person carrying on business at any print work shall, within one month next after the passing of this Act, or within one month after beginning to carry on such business, send a written notice, addressed to the office of the factory inspectors, London, containing the name of such print work, together with the place, township, or parish, and county, where the same is situated, the post town to which he desires his letters to be addressed, the nature of the work, and the name of the firm under which such business is or is to be carried on.

vii. That the certifying surgeons appointed or to be appointed by virtue of the said Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 15, shall be certifying surgeons for carrying into effect the powers, authorities, and provisions of this Act.

viii. That the certificates of age required by this Act, herein called surgical certificates, shall be given according to the form and directions contained in Schedule (A.) annexed to this Act; and the name of every person for whom a surgical certificate is required by this Act, and the date of the first day of employment or re-employment of such person, shall be registered in the form and according to the directions given in the Schedule (B.) annexed to this Act, before it shall be lawful to employ such person in a print work.

ix. That no such surgical certificate given by any person who is not an appointed certifying surgeon shall be of any force unless it is given by a person duly authorized by an university or college, or other public body having authority in that behalf to practise surgery or medicine, and countersigned, according to the form and directions given in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, by some Justice of the Peace, not being the occupier of a print work, and not being the father, son, or brother of the occupier of a print work; and no person shall countersign any such surgical certificate in the absence of the person named therein, or without proof that the person brought before him is the same to whom the certificate was granted.

x. That no person shall grant any surgical certificate required by this Act, except upon personal inspection of the person named therein; and no certifying surgeon shall examine any person for the purposes of this Act, or sign or issue any such surgical certificate, elsewhere than at the print work where such person is to be employed, unless for special cause, to be allowed by an inspector; and if a certifying surgeon shall refuse to grant a certificate of age to any person presented to him for such examination, he shall give, when required, instead of such certificate, a paper specifying under his hand the reasons for such refusal, in the form and directions given in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed.

xi. That if the occupier of a print work shall agree in writing with the certifying surgeon of a district for the payment to be made by the occupier of the print work to the certifying surgeon for the examination of persons for whom surgical certificates are required by this Act, and if the terms of such agreement shall be in conformity with such regulations for the guidance of the surgeons as shall be made by the inspector of the district, and shall be countersigned by the inspector in token of such conformity, all penalties which may be incurred by any party for breach of such agreement may be recovered as other penalties under this Act may be recovered, and shall be applied as other penalties under this Act are directed to be applied and no such agreement shall be liable to any stamp duty.

xii. That an inspector shall fix the amount of fees to be paid by the occupier of a print work, and the times when such fee shall be paid to the certifying surgeon, and also the times when such certifying surgeon shall visit a print work, provided he shall be required to fix such fees and visits by the occupier of a print work; and the fees so to be fixed by the inspector shall not in any case where the surgeon shall examine more than one person exceed 1s. for each person who shall be presented to him at the print work by the occupier thereof or his agent to be examined, together with 6d. for every half-mile that the distance of the print work from the residence of such surgeon shall exceed one mile, and such fees, including mileage, shall not be less than 1s., and shall in no case exceed 5s., for any one visit, except when upon such visit the certifying surgeon shall examine for the said certificates of age more than ten persons who may be brought before him as aforesaid, in which case he shall receive 6d. for each person that he may so examine, instead of all other fees; and in any case where a print work situated within the distance of one mile from the residence of a certifying surgeon the fee for such print work shall not exceed 2s. 6d. for each visit, except when at any one visit he shall examine for the said certificates of age more than five persons who may be brought before him as aforesaid, in which case he shall receive 6d. for each person that he may so examine, instead of all other fees; and no certifying surgeon shall receive more than 6d. for any certificate which he may be allowed by an inspector as hereinbefore provided, to sign or issue otherwise than at the print works where the person is to be employed; and the occupier of any print work shall pay such fees to the certifying surgeon at the time of signing such certificates, or at any other time when he may be directed by the inspector to do so; and the occupier of such print work may deduct the fee, or any part thereof, not exceeding in any one case the sum of 3d., from the wages of the person for whom the certificate may have been granted; but in any case where such agreement as aforesaid has been executed between an occupier of a print work and the certifying surgeon, the amount named in such agreement shall be instead of the fees fixed by any inspector in virtue of this Act: Provided always, that no certifying surgeon shall be required to visit any print work situated within three miles of his residence oftener than once in each week, or to visit any print work situated at a greater distance than three miles oftener than once in every fortnight, unless with the consent of the occupier of the print work.

xiii. That every inspector and sub-inspector may annul any surgical certificate granted under this Act by writing across the surgical certificate the word "annulled," with his name, and the date of annulling such certificate; provided that in each case he shall have reason to believe the real age of the person mentioned therein to be less than that mentioned in the certificate.

or provided the certifying surgeon of the district shall, upon reference made to him, deem such person to be then of deficient health or strength, or by disease or bodily infirmity incapacitated for labour, or liable to be injured by continued employment; and no certificate so annulled shall be valid in respect of the person named therein for the purposes of this Act from the day when the certificate shall have been so annulled; and the production of the certificate shall be evidence that the certificate was annulled on the day so stated.

xiv. That in case any person shall be desirous of proving the real age of any person for whom a certifying surgeon shall have refused to grant a certificate of age for the purposes of this Act, or whose surgical certificate any inspector or sub-inspector shall have annulled, the inspector or sub-inspector shall, on demand, give to such person a requisition under his hand in a form to be approved of by the inspectors and by the registrar general, for the production of a duly certified copy of the entry of the birth or baptism of such person, provided the party demanding the same shall declare the names of such person and of his parents, with the place where and the year in which he was born or baptized, which particulars shall be set forth in the requisition; and every party to whom such requisition shall have been given shall be entitled, upon payment of 1s., to receive, on personal application, or on application in writing in such form and under such regulations as shall be approved of by the inspectors and registrar general, from any minister, registrar, or other person having the care of any register of births or baptisms in which the birth or baptism of such person is entered, a duly certified copy of the entry in such register, which shall be indorsed on the aforesaid requisition, and shall be signed by the minister, registrar, or other person having charge of such register; and such payment of 1s. shall be instead of all other fees or payments to which such minister, registrar, or other person shall be entitled; and if the said certified copy proving the age of the person named therein to be such as to entitle him to have the surgical certificate required shall be produced to the certifying surgeon of the district, he shall examine the same, and if it shall appear to him that the said certified copy has not been altered or falsified in any manner, the certifying surgeon shall thereupon, without further fee or reward, give a surgical certificate in the form provided for that case in Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, and shall write the word "examined" upon the certified copy of the entry of the birth or baptism which he shall have received, with his signature, and the date of such signature, and shall send such certified copy by the post to the sub-inspector of the district, who shall send a receipt for the same by post to the said surgeon, and shall keep such certified copy of the entry of the birth or baptism for future reference, if necessary; and if any inspector shall require a certified copy of the entry of the birth of any person employed in any print work from the office of the registrar general, he, or any person deputed by him, shall, on producing a requisition in the form hereinbefore provided, be entitled to examine the indexes to the registers in the general register office, and to receive such certified copy indorsed on the requisition without the payment of any fee; but no certified copy of the entry of any birth or baptism issued in consequence of any such requisition hereinbefore provided shall be admissible in evidence in any court or for any purpose, save for the purposes of this Act: Provided always, that in those cases in which a surgical certificate shall have been refused or annulled in consequence of deficient health or strength, or by reason of disease or bodily infirmity, the inspector or sub-inspector shall not sign the requisition hereinbefore mentioned, and such person shall not be employed on proof of real age only.

xv. That before employing any person requiring a surgical certificate under this Act the occupier of the print work shall obtain the surgical certificate, save as hereinafter excepted, and shall keep and be bound to produce every such certificate when required to the inspector or sub-inspector; and no surgical certificate shall be valid, except for employment at the print work for which it was originally granted, or, if granted by a certifying surgeon, at any other print work in the occupation of the same person who is occupier of the print work for which the certificate was originally granted, provided such other print work be in the district of the certifying surgeon who granted the certificate, and the certificate be produced in the print work where the person named in the certificate is at work; and the certifying surgeon, as often as he shall visit a print work for the purpose of granting certificates, shall enter in the register of children the date of his visit, and the other particulars set forth in the form and according to the directions given in Schedule (B.) to this Act annexed.

xvi. Provided and enacted, That no occupier of any print work shall be liable to any penalty for employing any person in any manner not contrary to the other provisions of this Act, without a surgical certificate, for any time not exceeding seven working days, or, when the certifying surgeon shall reside more than three miles from the print work, for any time not exceeding thirteen working days, provided all surgical certificates for that print work be granted only by the certifying surgeon appointed for that print work; but this enactment shall not be construed to authorize the employment of any person in respect of whom the certifying surgeon shall have refused to grant such surgical certificate.

xvii. That every surgical certificate given under this Act, and which shall not have been annulled, shall be evidence in the first instance of the age of the person named therein, but shall not protect any person, knowing such person to be of less than the age certified, from any penalty for employing or conniving at the employment of such person otherwise than is allowed by this Act; and in every proceeding on any information or complaint for employing any person contrary to this Act a declaration in writing, by the certifying surgeon of the district, that he has personally examined such person, and believes him to be under such age as shall be set forth in such declaration, shall be evidence in the first instance, until the contrary shall be made to appear, that such person is under the age mentioned in such declaration.

xviii. That if any inspector or sub-inspector shall make a complaint before a Justice of the Peace that the real age of any person who is employed in a print work without a surgical certificate is less than sixteen, the occupier of the print work in which such person is employed shall be liable to the penalties for employing persons for whom a surgeon's certificate is required by law without the proper surgical certificate, unless upon the proceeding for the enforcement of such penalties he shall prove, by an extract from a legal register of birth or baptism, that the said person had completed his sixteenth year of age.

xix. That after the 1st of January 1846 no child under the age of eight years shall be employed in any print work.

xx. That no child shall be employed in a print work (save in the cases hereafter excepted) until the occupier thereof shall have obtained a surgeon's certificate, according to the form and directions given in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, in proof that such child has the ordinary strength and appearance of a child of at least eight years of age, and is not incapacitated by disease or bodily infirmity from working daily in a print work, as allowed by this Act.

xxi. That no young person shall be employed in a print work (save in the cases hereafter excepted) until the occupier thereof shall have obtained a surgical certificate according to the form and directions given in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, in proof that such young person has the ordinary strength and appearance of a young person of at least thirteen years of age, and is not incapacitated by disease or bodily infirmity from working in a print work, as allowed by this Act.

xxii. That after the 1st of January 1846 no child or female shall be employed in any print work during the night.

xxiii. That after the 1st of July 1846, the parent or person having any direct benefit from the wages of any child employed or intended to be employed in a print work shall cause such child to attend some school for at least thirty days, together or separately, exclusive of Sundays, during the half year between the 1st of January and the 30th of June, both days inclusive, and in like manner for thirty days during the half year between the 1st of July and the 31st of December, both days inclusive, in each year, during any part of which it shall be employed in a print work, such attendance being after the hour of eight of the clock in the morning and before the hour of six of the clock in the evening, and such attendance shall not be less than 150 hours during each half year; but no attendance above five hours on any one day shall be reckoned as a part of the said 150 hours.

xxiv. That so soon as a child shall be employed in a print work the parent or person having direct benefit from the wages of such child shall notify to the occupier of the print work the school which such child is to attend during the time it is employed in such print work, and the occupiers of the print work shall enter in the register of children hereinafter required to be kept the name of the schoolmaster and the situation of the school so notified to him; and the parent or person having direct benefit from the wages of such child shall provide a school certificate book, according to the form and directions given in the Schedule (A.) annexed to this Act, and shall deliver the same to the master of the school which such child is to attend, and the said master shall enter therein, week by week, the attendance or absence of such child during that week, and shall produce such certificate book, while in his custody, to the inspector or sub-inspector of the district, when required; and the master of any school which shall be attended by children employed in a print work shall keep a register of their names and attendance, and if the inspector of the district shall disapprove of the form of register adopted by the schoolmaster, it shall be kept in such other form as the inspector shall direct.

xxv. That after the 1st of July 1846 the occupier of every print-work shall, before employing any child therein, obtain from a schoolmaster a certificate, according to the form and directions given in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, that such child had attended school for at least fifty days, as required by this Act, during the half year ending on the 30th of June or 31st of December next before the beginning of such employment, and the like certificate at the beginning of each following period of six months during which the employment of such child shall be continued in that print work; and such occupier shall keep every such certificate so long as such child shall continue in his employment for twelve months after the date thereof, and shall produce the same to any inspector or sub-inspector, when required, during such period.

xxvi. That if an inspector, on his personal examination, or on the report of a sub-inspector, shall be of opinion that any schoolmaster who grants certificates of the school attendance of children employed in a print work is unfit to instruct children, by reason of his incapacity to teach them to read and write, from his gross ignorance, or from his not having the books and materials necessary to teach them reading and writing, or because of his immoral conduct, or of his continued neglect to keep the registers, and fill up and sign the certificates of school attendance, as required by this Act, the inspector of the district may annul any certificate granted by such disqualified schoolmaster, by a notice in writing addressed to the occupier of the print work in which the children named in the certificate are employed, or his principal agent, setting forth the grounds on which he deems such schoolmaster to be unfit; and after the date of such notice no certificate of school attendance granted by such schoolmaster shall be valid for the purposes of this Act, unless with the consent in writing of the inspector of the district; but no inspector shall annul any such certificate unless in the aforesaid notice he shall name some other school situated within two miles of the print work where the children named in the certificate are employed: Provided always, that any schoolmaster whose certificate shall have been annulled, or the occupier of the print work in which the children named in the said certificate are employed, on behalf of the schoolmaster, may appeal to the Secretary of State against any such decision of the inspector, and the Secretary of State may, if he think fit, rescind such decision: Provided also, that every inspector shall in his annual report to the Secretary of State state the instances (if any) in which he shall have had occasion to annul any such certificate, together with the reasons which he has in each case assigned for so doing.

xxvii. That registers shall be kept in the print work to which they relate by the occupier of every print work, according to the forms and directions given in Schedule (B.) to this Act annexed; and every inspector shall have power to require such occupier to send to him, in such manner as may be directed in the requisition, any extracts from such registers, and any other information with relation to the persons employed in the print work which may be requisite to facilitate the performance of the duties of such inspector in any inquiry made under the authority of this Act; but no information so sent by the occupier of any print work which is not contained in the registers, certificates, and other documents required by this Act to be received or kept shall be admissible in evidence in any proceeding against him for the recovery of any penalty; and the registers, certificates, and other documents required by this Act to be received or kept shall be forthwith produced to the inspector or sub-inspector, on his demanding to examine the same, at any time when the print work is at work.

xxviii. That the hours of the day during which it is lawful to employ children, young persons, and women shall be regulated in every print work by a public clock, or by some other clock open to the public view, to be approved of in either case in writing under the hand of the inspector or sub-inspector of the district.

xxix. That such abstract of this Act as shall be directed by one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State shall be fixed on a moveable board, and be hung up as soon as received by the occupier of the print work or his agent in the entrance of the print work, and in such other places as the inspector or sub-inspector of the district may direct; and notices of the names and addresses of the inspector and sub-inspector of the district in which the print work is situated, of the clock by which the hours of work in the print work are regulated, and any alteration thereof, together with every other notice required by this Act, written or printed in legible characters, and fixed on moveable boards, (each particular notice being signed by the occupier of every print work or his agent,) shall be hung up at the entrance of the print work, where they may be easily read by the persons employed in the print work, and in such other places as the inspector or sub-inspector of the district may direct, and whence they shall not be removed while the print work is at work; and in case any such abstract of this Act or notice shall become illegible in any part, the occupier of the print work shall cause a new copy thereof to be provided and hung up as aforesaid; and every notice required to be hung up shall be in the forms and according to the directions given in the Schedule (C.) hereunto annexed.

XXX. That the occupier of any print work in which any offence against this Act has been proved to have been committed, and for which a pecuniary penalty may be imposed, shall in every case (save as hereinafter provided) be deemed in the first instance to have committed the offence, and shall be liable to pay the penalty; but any occupier who shall have been proceeded against by any inspector or sub-inspector shall be entitled, upon complaint or information duly made by such occupier, to have any agent, servant, or workman whom he shall charge as the actual offender brought by summons before the Justices at the time appointed for hearing the complaint made against him by the inspector or sub-inspector; and if after the commission of the offence has been proved the occupier of the print work shall prove to the satisfaction of the Justices, that he had used due diligence to enforce the execution of the Act, and that the said agent, servant, or workman had committed the offence in question without his knowledge, consent, or connivance, the said agent, servant, or workman shall be convicted of such offence, and shall pay the penalty instead of the occupier of the print work; and the payment of such penalty and costs shall be enforced against the agent, servant, or workman in like manner as penalties are made recoverable by this Act: Provided always, that when it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the inspector or sub-inspector, at the time of discovering the offence, that the occupier of the print work had used all due diligence to enforce the execution of this Act, and also by what person such offence had been committed, and also that it had been committed without the personal consent, connivance, or knowledge of the occupier, and in contravention of his orders, then the inspector or sub-inspector shall proceed against the person whom he shall believe to be the actual offender in the first instance, without first proceeding against the occupier of the print work.

XXXI. That all complaints for offences against this Act shall be preferred within two months next after the commission of the offence, except in the case of complaints for having employed a child without the school certificate required by this Act, in which case the complaints may be preferred within six months next after the commission of the offence, or in the case of complaints for offences punishable at discretion by fine or imprisonment, in which case the complaints may be preferred within twelve months next after the commission of the offence; and no person shall be liable to a larger amount of penalties for any repetition from day to day of the same kind of offence than the highest penalty hereinafter named for such offence, unless such repetition of offence shall have been committed after a complaint shall have been made for the previous offence, and except also for offences of employing two or more children or young persons or women contrary to law.

XXXII. That all complaints for the enforcement of any penalty under this Act shall be heard and determined by two or more Justices of the Peace acting for the county or other jurisdiction wherein the offence was committed, or for any adjoining county or jurisdiction, with the like authority as though the cause of complaint had arisen within such adjoining county or jurisdiction, provided that the place of hearing the complaint in such other county or jurisdiction be not more than five miles from the place where the offence was committed; and the Justices by whom any person shall be fined for any offence against this Act may order that such person shall pay the penalty, and also the reasonable costs and charges of such proceedings and conviction, either immediately or within such time as the said Justices shall think fit; and in default of payment thereof any Justice may cause the same to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party convicted, together with the reasonable costs and charges of such conviction, distress, and sale, by warrant under the hand and seal of any such Justice; and where the warrant of distress is directed against the goods and chattels of any person being the occupier of a print work, it shall be lawful under such warrant to distrain any goods and chattels found in the said print work which could be liable to be distrained for rent in arrear.

XXXIII. That in England and Ireland a summons for an offence against this Act shall be issued by any Justice upon complaint being made to him in writing by an inspector or sub-inspector, or upon oath before him by any other person, that to the best of the knowledge and belief of the inspector, sub-inspector, or such other person, such an offence has been committed; and in Scotland a summons for an offence against this Act shall be issued by any Justice upon complaint being made to him in writing by an inspector or sub-inspector, or by the procurator fiscal, or by any person having a title and interest to prosecute with the concurrence of the procurator fiscal, that to the best of the knowledge and belief of such inspector, sub-inspector, procurator fiscal, or other person, such an offence has been committed; and in every such prosecution in Scotland the proceedings shall be summary, and it shall not be necessary to take down in writing more than the substance of the evidence; and no higher or other fees shall be allowed in Scotland to the clerk of court or constables than is allowed to be paid to the sheriff clerk and sheriff officers in causes and prosecutions under the authority of an Act, 1 Geo. 4. c. 55, intituled 'An Act for the more effectual Recovery of Small Debts, and for diminishing the Expenses of litigation in Causes of small Amount in the Sheriff Courts in Scotland.'

XXXIV. That every person who shall be summoned to answer any complaint shall be bound to appear at the time and as mentioned in the summons, and to produce before the Justices then and there present every register or other account, paper, or notice required by law to be kept by him or his agent, which shall be mentioned in the summons; and if he shall not appear accordingly then (upon proof of due service of the summons) the Justices may hear and determine the case in his absence, or issue their warrant, as hereinafter provided, for enforcing his attendance, and the attendance of any witness who all refuse or neglect to appear.

xxxv. And it is declared and enacted, That it shall be no objection to the competency of any Inspector or sub-inspector to give evidence as a witness in any prosecution under this Act that it is brought at the instance of such inspector or sub-inspector, or in Scotland the procurator fiscal or other person as aforesaid.

xxxvi. That any Justice of the Peace, upon any complaint under this Act, may summon any witness to appear and give evidence at a time and place appointed for hearing such complaint, and by warrant under his hand and seal may require any person to be brought before the Justices by whom the complaint shall be heard who shall neglect or refuse to appear at the time and place appointed in any summons, proof upon oath being first given of personal service of the summons upon the person against whom such warrant shall be granted, and may commit any person coming or brought before such Justices who shall refuse to give evidence to the county prison or prison of the place where such offence was committed, there to remain for any time not exceeding one month, or until such person shall sooner submit himself to be examined; and in case of such submission the order of any Justice shall be a sufficient warrant to any gaoler or prison keeper for the discharge of such person.

xxxvii. That every inspector and sub-inspector shall be empowered to summon any person whom he shall charge with having offended against this Act, and also all witnesses who may be needed to give evidence concerning the charge; and every such summons shall be of the same effect as if issued by a Justice of the Peace after complaint upon oath before him, and shall be enforced in like manner, and the like proceedings may be had thereupon, as if complaint upon oath had been made before such Justice for such offence; and every constable and other peace officer to whom any such summons shall be directed shall be bound to take charge of and to serve such summons, and in default thereof shall be liable to be punished as if the summons had been issued by a Justice of the Peace; and every such summons of an offender or witness may be in the form provided in each case, and given in the Schedule (D.) hereunto annexed; and when an inspector or sub-inspector shall summon an offender he shall give to the same constable or peace officer a statement of the offence alleged to have been committed, who shall deliver it to a Justice of the Peace usually acting for the division in which the case is to be heard, or to the clerk of any such Justice, at least twenty-four hours before the period named in the summons for the appearance of the party charged with such offence.

xxxviii. That it shall be sufficient, in any information, complaint, or other proceeding under this Act, to set forth the name of the ostensible occupier or title of the firm by which the occupier employing the workpeople of the print work may be usually known; and the service of any summons, order, or notice required by this Act, or issued under the authority of this Act, and not expressly directed to be personal service, may be made by leaving the same at the dwelling-house of the person to whom the same shall be addressed, or, in the case of summoning or giving an order or notice to the occupier of a print work or to a schoolmaster, by giving a copy thereof in writing to the agent of such occupier, or by sending a copy thereof by the post, directed to the occupier of the print work at the print work, or to the schoolmaster at his school.

xxxix. That any person who shall be convicted of having employed any child, young person, or woman in any manner contrary to the provisions of this Act, or of employing any child under the age of thirteen years without having obtained the certificate from a schoolmaster required by this Act, such person (not being the parent of such child, or the husband of such woman, nor having any direct benefit from the wages of such child or woman), shall for every such offence be adjudged to pay a penalty of not less than 20s. and not more than 3*l*. for each child, young person, or woman so illegally employed. Provided always, that if the offence shall be the employment of any such child, young person, or woman during the night the penalty shall be not less than 40s. nor more than 5*l*. for each child, young person, or woman so illegally employed.

xl. That every parent and other person who shall have direct benefit from the wages of any child employed in any manner forbidden by this Act, who shall wilfully connive at such illegal employment, or who shall neglect to cause such child to attend school as hereinbefore provided, or who, when required by an inspector or sub-inspector, shall fail to produce certificate of the school attendance of such child, as required by this Act, and the husband of any woman employed during the night wilfully conniving at such employment, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than 5s. and not more than 20s. for each offence.

xli. That every person convicted of wilfully obstructing an inspector or sub-inspector in the execution of any of the powers intrusted to him by virtue of this Act shall be liable for each offence to a penalty of not less than 3*l*. and not more than 10*l*.

xlii. That every occupier of a print work in which an inspector or sub-inspector shall be obstructed in the night, by an attempt to prevent his making a full and complete examination of all parts of the print works, and of every person employed therein, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than 20*l*. and not more than 50*l*.

xliii. That every person convicted of making, giving, signing, countersigning, counterfeiting, or making use of any certificate authorized or required by or by virtue of this Act, knowing the same to be untrue, or of wilfully making or wilfully conniving at making any false or counterfeited certificate, or any false entry in any register, or any other account, paper, or notice required by or by virtue of this Act, and also every person convicted of wilfully making and signing a false declaration in any proceedings under this Act, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than 5*l*. and not more than 20*l*., or to be imprisoned for any time not exceeding six calendar months in the house of correction in the county, town, or place where the offence was committed.

xliv. That the penalty for any offence against this Act for which no special penalty is herein provided shall be any sum not less than 2*l*. and not more than 5*l*.

xlv. Declared and Enacted, That the non-compliance with any direction contained in any schedule to this Act annexed shall be deemed an offence against the provisions of this Act.

xlvi. That every person who shall be convicted twice within twelve calendar months for an offence of the same kind against this Act shall pay for the second offence any sum not less than one half of the highest penalty for that offence, and if convicted three times within twelve calendar months for an offence of the same kind, shall pay not less than two-thirds of the highest penalty, and if convicted more than three times within twenty-four calendar months for an offence of the same kind shall pay the highest penalty; but a repetition of the same kind of offence shall not be considered as the second or subsequent offences referred to in this enactment, unless such second or subsequent offence shall have been committed after a complaint has been made for the previous offences; and in any case in which a person shall be convicted at any one time for offences against this Act, so that the penalties amount in the whole to more than 100*l.*, the sum of 100*l.*, together with all the reasonable costs and charges of such proceedings and convictions, may be paid, instead of the penalties for all offences committed by such person before the day on which the last summons was taken out against him or her.

XLVII. Provided always, That no person shall be liable to a larger amount of penalties for any repetition from day to day of the same kind of offence than the highest penalty herein appointed for such offence, unless such repetition of offence shall have been committed after a complaint shall have been made for the previous offence; but the offence of employing two or more children or women contrary to law shall be considered a repetition of the same kind of offence within the meaning of this provision.

XLVIII. That all penalties for any offence against this Act shall be applied under the direction of one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, and shall be paid, on account of the inspector for the district in which the penalty was imposed, to such banker as shall be appointed by such inspector to receive the same; and every person to whom any such penalty shall be paid shall pay over the amount thereof to the banker so appointed, within fourteen days of receiving the same; and it shall be lawful for the Secretary of State to remit the whole or any part of such penalty, and so much thereof as shall not be so remitted, and not otherwise especially appropriated by this Act, shall be applied by such inspector, under the direction of one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, in such manner as shall appear best for the establishment or support of day schools for the education of children employed in print works; and so much of an Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76, intituled 'An Act to provide for the Regulation of Corporations in England and Wales,' as provides that certain penalties and forfeitures, if recovered before any Justice of any borough having a separate Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace, shall be recovered for and adjudged to be paid to the treasurer of such borough, shall be repealed as to the penalties imposed under this Act.

XLIX. That whenever any person shall be convicted of any offence against this Act, the clerk of the peace where such conviction shall have been filed shall, upon the request in writing of any inspector or sub-inspector, deliver or cause to be delivered to him a copy of the conviction, certified under his hand to be a true copy; and every such copy shall be received as evidence of such conviction upon any future proceeding under this Act; and for every such copy the clerk shall be entitled to have a fee of 1*s.*, and no more.

L. That every conviction under this Act may be in the form given in the Schedule (D.) to this Act annexed, or in any other form more suitable to the case, and shall be certified in England and Ireland to the next General or Quarter Session of the Peace, and in Scotland to the clerk of the Justices of the Peace, there to be filed amongst the records of the county, riding, division, stewartry, town, or place.

LI. That no appeal shall be allowed against any conviction under this Act, except for an offence punishable, at discretion, by fine or imprisonment, or when the penalty awarded shall be more than 3*l.*; neither shall any conviction, except as aforesaid, be removable by certiorari or bill of advocacy into any court whatever; and no information, conviction, or other proceeding on any complaint for an offence against this Act shall be quashed or deemed illegal for matter of form, or for the want of any averment unnecessary to be proved, or the omission of any word, or for the insertion of any word, in any case in which such omission or such insertion respectively do not affect the essence of the offence, nor for the wrong designation of a name or time or place, where the person, time, and place intended shall have been so stated as to have been, in the opinion of the Justices by whom the complaint shall have been heard, clearly understood by the person charged with such offence; and it shall not be necessary, in any information, conviction, or other proceeding under this Act, to define the processes carried on in such print work, or to set out that the print work or process of employment referred to is not within any of the cases excepted, provided that it be therein stated that such print work is a print work within this Act; and the proof of being within any such excepted case shall lie upon the party claiming the benefit of such exception.

LII. That any person aggrieved by any such conviction for which an appeal is allowed by this Act may appeal to the next Court of General or Quarter Sessions which shall be holden not less than twelve days after the day of the conviction for the county or other jurisdiction wherein the cause of complaint shall have arisen; provided that the person so intending to appeal shall give to the inspector or sub-inspector of the district notice in writing of such appeal, and of the cause or matter thereof, within three days after the conviction or order, and seven clear days at the least before such session, and shall also enter into a recognisance with two sufficient sureties before a Justice of the Peace for the county or other jurisdiction seven clear days at the least before such session, conditioned personally to appear at the said session, and to try such appeal, and to abide the judgment of the Court thereon, and to pay such costs as shall be by the Court awarded; and the Court at such session shall hear and determine the matter of appeal, and shall make such order thereon as to the Court shall seem meet; and in case of the dismissal of the appeal or the affirmation of the conviction or order the Court shall adjudge and order the party to be punished according to the conviction, or to obey the order appealed against, and to pay such costs as shall be awarded, and shall, if necessary, issue process for enforcing such judgment.

LIII. That in all cases in which a Justice of the Peace is required or empowered to do any thing under this Act, or is named therein, a Burgh Magistrate shall have within his jurisdiction the same powers and duties as are herein given to such Justice, and shall exercise the same in Scotland; but no complaint preferred for any offence against this Act committed in a print work shall be heard by a Justice of the Peace or Burgh Magistrate, being an occupier of the print work, or being the father, son, or brother of the occupier of the print work, in which the offence set forth in the complaint shall have been committed.

LIV. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

Certifying Surgeon.

The Form of Surgical Certificate to be given to a young Person who has obtained a Certificate of real Age shall be the same as the above, omitting the Words "and that the said young Person has the ordinary Strength and Appearance of a young Person of at least Thirteen Years of Age, and that I believe the real Age of the said young Person to be at least Thirteen Years," and substituting these Words in their Place, "and that a Certificate of the Birth [or Baptism] of the said young Person has been produced to me in the Form required by this Act, proving that the real Age of such young Person is at least Thirteen Years."

The Form of Surgical Certificate to be given in either Case by any Practitioner who is not a certifying Surgeon must be the same as the corresponding Form above given, omitting the Words "duly appointed a certifying Surgeon," and substituting the Words "duly authorized by the University [or College or other public Body having Authority in that behalf] of to practise Surgery [or Medicine]," and making the following Addition, which must be signed by a Justice of the Peace or Burgh Magistrate:—

The Child [or young Person] named in the above-written Certificate has been this Day brought before me; and the Appearance of the said Child [or young Person] agrees with the Description therein given: and I believe the real Age of the said Child [or young Person] to be at least [here insert the Word "Eight," or "Thirteen" in the Case of a young Person.]
 Years; and I declare that I have no beneficial Interest in and am not the Occupier of any Print Work, and that I am not the Father, Son, or Brother of the Occupier of any Print Work.

Dated this Day of One thousand eight hundred and Signed C.D., Justice.

 [or Burgh Magistrate.]

In every Surgical Certificate of Age the Day of the Month on which it shall be granted shall be written in Words, and not in Figures.

So soon as any Certificates authorized by this Act to be received as Proof of the Age of any Persons shall be obtained by the Occupier of a Print Work or his Agent, they shall be fixed in a Book, to be called "The Age Certificate Book," in the Order of the Dates at which they shall have been respectively received; and such Certificates shall be numbered in the Order in which they are so fixed in the Book; but the Certificates for Children shall be kept in a separate and distinct Place in the said Book, or in a separate Book, and shall be marked with a Series of running Numbers distinct from that of the Certificates for young Persons.

So soon as any Certificate of Age authorized by this Act shall be obtained, the Number hereinbefore required to be set against each Certificate shall be set against the Name of the Child or young Person to whom such Certificate has been granted in the first Column of the Register of the Persons employed required by this Act to be kept in each Factory.

If the Surgeon shall have refused to grant a Certificate of Age to any Child or young Person the Word "Refused" shall be entered by the Surgeon in the Column of the Register where the Numbers of the Certificates are required to be inserted.

CAP. XXX.

AN ACT to amend an Act passed in the Third and Fourth Years of the Reign of His late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled An Act for the better Administration of Justice in His Majesty's Privy Council.

(30th June 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Recited provisions of 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 41. not to apply to appeals admitted by Sudder Courts after the 1st of January 1846.
2. Appeals admitted after the 1st of January 1846 to be considered as abandoned by consent, unless, &c.

By this Act,

After reciting that by 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 41. reciting that various appeals to his Majesty in council from the courts of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut at the several Presidencies of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, in the East Indies, had been admitted by the said Courts, and the transcripts of the proceedings in appeal had been from time to time transmitted under the seal of the said courts through the East India Company, then called the United Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies, to the office of his Majesty's said Privy Council, but that the suitors in the causes so appealed had not taken the necessary measures to bring on the same to a hearing, it was enacted that it should be lawful for his Majesty in Council to give such directions to the said company and other persons, for the purpose of bringing to a hearing before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council the several cases appealed or thereafter to be appealed to his Majesty in council from the several courts of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut in the East Indies, and for appointing agents and counsel for the different parties in such appeals, and to make such orders for the security and payment of the costs thereof as his said Majesty in council should think fit, and thereupon such appeals should be heard and reported on to his Majesty in council, and should be by his Majesty in council determined, in the same manner, and the judgments, orders, and decrees of his Majesty in council thereon should be of the same force and effect, as if the same had been brought to a hearing by the direction of the parties appealing, in the usual course of proceeding: Provided always, that such last-mentioned powers should not extend to any appeals from the said courts of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut other than appeals in which no proceedings then had been or should thereafter be taken in England on either side for a period of two years subsequent to the admission of the appeal by such court of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut: And that by certain orders in council made under certain powers contained in the said Act provision is made for registering in the Council Office the arrival in this country of the transcripts of the proceedings in appeals from the said courts: And that it is considered advisable that the said Act should be amended in manner hereinafter mentioned:—

It is Enacted,

1. That the hereinbefore recited provisions of the said Act shall not apply to the case of any appeal which shall be admitted by any of the said Courts of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut after the 1st of January 1846.

11. That any appeal to be admitted by any of the said Courts of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut after the said 1st of January 1846 shall be considered and be held to be abandoned and withdrawn by consent of the parties thereto, unless proceedings shall be taken in England in the same by one or more of the parties thereto within two years after registration at the Council Office of the arrival of the transcript; and any such appeal as aforesaid shall be held to be abandoned and withdrawn in like manner under any other circumstances which her Majesty in council may from time to time by any orders or rules in that behalf direct to be taken and considered as a withdrawal thereof; and the East India Company are hereby required from time to time to ascertain and certify to the proper Courts in the East Indies all appeals which may from time to time become abandoned and dropped under the provisions of this clause.

CAP. XXXI.

AN ACT to facilitate the Transmission and Extinction of Heritable Securities for Debt in Scotland.
(30th June 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Heritable securities to be transferred in the form prescribed. When conveyance of heritable security is contained in a general deed of conveyance, the whole of such deed need not be recorded.
2. Completion of title of heir by writ of acknowledgment from proprietor.
3. Adjudgers to complete their title by recording the abbreviate of adjudication.
4. Heir or general disponee may complete title by notarial instrument recorded.
5. Assignations, conveyances, &c. to be registered forthwith.
6. Assignations or conveyances to be registered at any time.
7. In all questions under the Bankrupt Acts in Scotland, the dates of the registration of assignations, &c. to be held to be the dates of the instruments.
8. How any bond or disposition in security may be renounced or discharged.
9. Parties may use the present forms if they see fit.
10. Fees to be taken by existing town clerks of royal burghs and keepers of registers during their respective rights of office, &c.
11. Fees may be regulated by the Court of Session.
12. Interpretation clause.—"Notary Public;" "Creditor;" "Lands;" "Number;" "Gender."
13. Commencement of Act.
14. Act may be amended or repealed.

By this Act,

After reciting that it is expedient to facilitate the transmission and extinction of heritable securities for debt in Scotland :

It is Enacted,

I. That where an heritable security has been constituted by infestment the right of the creditor therein may be transferred either in whole or in part, by an assignation or other deed of conveyance, in the form or as nearly as may be in the terms set forth in the Schedule (No. 1.) hereto annexed; and on such assignation or conveyance being recorded in the general register of sasines, or in the particular register or burgh register of sasines applicable to the lands contained in the security, the said heritable security shall be transferred to the assignee as effectually as if such heritable security had been disposed and assigned, and the disposition and assignation or conveyance had been followed by sasine duly recorded according to the present law and practice; and such assignee or disponee shall thereupon be held to be fully entered as if he had obtained a renewal of the investiture in his favour, according to the law and practice in use before the passing of this Act: Provided always, that where the assignation or conveyance of an heritable security constituted as aforesaid is contained in a deed of conveyance granted for further purposes and objects, or conveying other properties, such as a marriage contract, deed of trust or settlement, it shall not be necessary to record the whole of such deed, but it shall be sufficient to expedite and to put upon record a notarial instrument, setting forth generally the nature of the deed of conveyance, and containing at length the part of such deed which relates to and conveys the security in question.

II. That upon the death of any creditor fully vested in right of an heritable security constituted as aforesaid, it shall be competent for his heir to complete his title thereto by a writ of acknowledgment to be granted in his favour by the person duly infest, of whom such security is held, in the form and as nearly as may be in the terms set forth in Schedule (No. 2.) hereto annexed; and on such writ being registered in the general register of sasines, or the particular or burgh register respectively as aforesaid, the heir in whose favour such writ has been granted shall be vested with the full right of the creditor in such security, and shall be held to be entered with the superior in like manner and to the same effect as the creditor himself.

III. That where an adjudication of any heritable security, vested as aforesaid, has been brought against the creditor in such security, or against the heir of such creditor, it shall be competent for the adjudger to complete his title thereto by recording, in the general or particular or burgh registers of sasines respectively as aforesaid, the abbreviate of the adjudication; which registration shall have the same effect as if the adjudger had been entered and infest on a charter of adjudication.

IV. That it shall be competent to the heir duly served and retoured, or to the general disponee of any creditor, who was duly vested in an heritable security as above mentioned, to complete his title to such security without the intervention of the superior, by expediting and recording an instrument under the hands of a notary public, in the form and as nearly as may be in the terms set forth in Schedule (No. 3.) hereto annexed, and on such instrument being registered in the general, particular, or burgh registers respectively as above mentioned, such heir or disponee shall be taken to be vested with the full right of the creditor in such security and to be entered with the superior, in the same manner and to the same effect as the creditor himself.

v. That assignments and conveyances of heritable securities, writs of acknowledgment in favour of heirs, or instruments taken in favour of heirs or disponees, or discharges of heritable securities, presented for registration in pursuance of this Act, shall be forthwith shortly registered in the minute books of the register of sasines in common form, and shall, with all due dispatch, be fully registered in the register books, and thereafter re-delivered to the parties, with certificates of due registration thereon, which shall be probative of such registration, such certificates specifying the date of presentation and the book and folio in which the ingrossment has been made, and being subscribed by the keeper of the register; and the date of entry in the minute book shall be held to be the date of registration, and extracts of writings, registered in pursuance of this Act, shall make faith in all cases, in like manner as the writings registered, except where the writings so registered are offered to be improved.

vi. That assignments or conveyances of heritable securities, constituted as aforesaid, may be registered at any time; and all such writings shall in competition be preferable according to the date of the registration thereof.

vii. That in all questions under an Act passed by the Parliament of Scotland in 1696, intituled 'An Act for declaring Notour Bankrupt;' and under an Act, 54 Geo. 3, intituled 'An Act for rendering the Payment of Creditors more equal and expeditious in Scotland;' and under an Act, 2 & 3 Vict. intituled, 'An Act for regulating the Sequestration of the Estates of Bankrupts in Scotland;' the date of the registration of all assignments, conveyances, writs of acknowledgment, instruments, discharges, or other deeds granted or taken in pursuance of this Act, shall be held to be the date of such assignments, conveyances, writs of acknowledgment, instruments, discharges, and deeds respectively, without prejudice to their validity or invalidity in other respects.

viii. That any bond and disposition in security, completed by infestment or other heritable security, may be effectually renounced and discharged, in whole or in part, by a discharge in the form or as nearly as may be in the terms set forth in the Schedule (No. 4.) hereto annexed, and by the registration of such discharge in the general register of sasines or the particular or burgh register of sasines as aforesaid.

ix. And it is enacted and declared, That nothing in this Act contained shall prevent the transmission or extinction of heritable securities in the forms in use at the passing of this Act.

x. That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the existing town clerks of royal burghs in Scotland, during the existence of their respective rights of office, from exacting and receiving the same fees in respect of the recording of assignments or conveyances of heritable securities, abbreviates of adjudication, writs of acknowledgment in favour of heirs, or instruments taken in favour of heirs and disponees under this Act, as the same town clerks would before the passing of this Act have been legally entitled to exact or receive on their own account, in respect of passing the infestments within burgh, and preparing and recording the instruments of sasine and resignation rendered unnecessary by such assignments, conveyances, writs of acknowledgment, instruments, or abbreviates of adjudication as aforesaid; provided always, that in computing the said fees such instruments of sasine and resignation shall not be computed as of greater length than the writings actually recorded whereby such instruments of sasine and resignation have been rendered unnecessary; and all other keepers of registers of sasine, during the existence of their respective rights of office, or until otherwise regulated by law, shall, upon the registration by them of each assignment, conveyance, writing of acknowledgment, abbreviate of adjudication, or instrument aforesaid, registered under the provisions of this Act, be entitled to the same fees as such keeper would have been entitled to upon the registration of an instrument of sasine of the same length in favour of the same party in reference to the same right, and to no other or further fee whatever.

xi. And it is enacted and declared, That nothing in this Act contained shall prevent the Court of Session from passing such acts of sederunt as the said Court may deem proper for regulating the aforesaid registers, and the fees to be paid to the several keepers thereof, and having regard to the nature and extent of the interests of such keepers.

xii. That the following words used in this Act and in the schedules hereto annexed shall in the construction thereof be interpreted as follows, except where the nature of the provision or the context of the Act shall be repugnant to such construction; (that is to say,) the words "notary public" shall be held to mean a notary public in Scotland duly admitted and practising there; the word "creditor," shall extend to and include the party in whose favour the heritable security is granted, or who is in right thereof; the word "lands" shall include all heritable subjects or real estate over which the security extends and whereof infestment may be taken; every word importing the singular number shall extend and be applied to several persons as well as one person, and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male.

xiii. That this Act shall commence and take effect from and after the 1st of October in the present year 1845.

xiv. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed during the present session of Parliament.

6. Alteration of Act.

By this Act,

After reciting that by 4 Geo. 4. c. 64, Justices of the Peace in Quarter Sessions assembled were authorized, under the restrictions therein mentioned, from time to time to borrow and take up on mortgage of the rate of any county such sum of money and for such purposes as therein mentioned, and to secure every such sum of money so borrowed upon the credit of the said rate: And that by 5 Geo. 4. c. 85, the Justices of the Peace assembled at any General or Quarter Sessions to be holden for any county were authorized, in certain cases, and under the restrictions therein mentioned, to borrow on mortgage of the rate of such county any sum or sums of money not exceeding in the whole the principal sum of money that might then be outstanding on the securities theretofore granted under the said first-recited Act, and therewith to discharge the whole or any part of the money for which such securities should have been given: And that by 6 Geo. 4. c. 40, the Justices of the Peace assembled at any General or Quarter Sessions to be holden for any county were authorized, in certain cases, and under the restrictions therein mentioned, to borrow on mortgage of the rate of such county any sum or sums of money not exceeding in the whole the principal sum of money that might then be outstanding on the securities theretofore granted under the provisions of the said recited Acts, 4 Geo. 4. c. 64, and 5 Geo. 4. c. 85, or either of them, or under the provisions of an Act, 48 Geo. 3. c. 96, intituled, 'An Act for the better Care and Maintenance of Lunatics, being Paupers or Criminals, in England,' or under the provisions of any other Act or Acts, and therewith to pay off and discharge the whole or any part of the money for which such securities should have been given; and by the same now reciting Act some of the restrictions imposed by the said hereinbefore recited Acts upon the power thereby given to borrow money on mortgage of the rate of any county as aforesaid were repealed: And that by 7 Geo. 4. c. 63, the Justices of the Peace in Quarter Sessions assembled were authorized, under the restrictions therein mentioned, from time to time to borrow and take up on mortgage of the rate of any county such sum of money and for such purposes as therein mentioned, and to secure every such sum of money so borrowed upon the credit of the said rates; and by the now reciting Act the said recited Act, 6 Geo. 4. c. 40, and the several clauses, powers, and provisions therein contained relating to the paying off of any debt or debts, and the borrowing of any money for such purposes, were made applicable to the paying off any money borrowed under the provisions or for the purposes of the now reciting Act: And that by 9 Geo. 4. c. 40, the Justices of the Peace within the respective limits of their commission, assembled in their Quarter Sessions, were authorized, under the restrictions therein mentioned, from time to time to borrow and take up on mortgage of the rates for any county such sum of money and for such purposes as therein mentioned, and to secure all and every such sum and sums of money so borrowed upon the credit of the rates to be raised upon such county respectively: And that by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 49, the Justices of the Peace in Quarter Sessions assembled were authorized, under the restrictions therein mentioned, from time to time to borrow and take upon mortgage of the rate of any county such sum of money and for such purposes as therein mentioned, and to secure every such sum of money so borrowed upon the credit of the said rate; and by the now reciting Act the said recited Act, 6 Geo. 4. c. 40, and the several clauses, powers, and provisions in the said recited Act contained, relating to the paying off of any debt or debts, and the borrowing of any money for such purposes were made applicable to the paying off any money borrowed under the provisions or for the purposes of the now reciting Act: And that by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, some of the restrictions imposed by the said recited Act of 4 Geo. 4. c. 64, upon the power thereby given to borrow money on mortgage of the rate of any county, for the purposes therein mentioned, were repealed, and in lieu thereof other restrictions were imposed upon the power given by the said last-mentioned Act to borrow money for the purposes therein mentioned: And that the rates of the county of Middlesex are now charged with the payment of a large amount of money, under the provisions of the several hereinbefore recited Acts or some of them, and certain other Acts; and that it may from time to time be necessary to borrow on mortgage of the same rates further sums of money, to be applied for the purposes mentioned in the said several recited Acts, 4 Geo. 4. c. 64, 7 Geo. 4. c. 63, 9 Geo. 4. c. 40, and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 49; but such of the restrictions imposed by the same several Acts respectively, and by the said recited Act of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, upon the powers given to borrow money for the purposes aforesaid, as still remain unrepealed, make the borrowing of money on mortgage of the rates of the said county of Middlesex for the purposes aforesaid unnecessarily burden some to the rate-payers of the said county; and the provisions contained in the said several recited Acts of 5 Geo. 4. c. 85, 6 Geo. 4. c. 40, and 7 Geo. 4. c. 63, and in the said recited Act, 4 & 5 Vict. c. 49, enabling Justices of the Peace to borrow money for the purpose of paying off or discharging money borrowed under the provisions or for the purposes of the said recited Acts, or some of them, may render it difficult for the Justices of the Peace of the said county of Middlesex to borrow money on mortgage of the rates of the same county, for the purposes aforesaid, upon terms advantageous to the said rate-payers; and it is therefore expedient that so much of the said several recited Acts as authorizes the Justices of the Peace borrow money on mortgage of county rates for any other purpose than that of paying off or discharging money which at the time of the passing of this Act hath been borrowed on mortgage of the rates of any county should be repealed, so far as relates to the county of Middlesex; and that the Justices of the Peace for the same county should be authorized to borrow on mortgage of the rates of the same county such sums of money as may be hereafter required for the purposes mentioned in the said several hereinbefore recited Acts, 4 Geo. 4. c. 64, 7 Geo. 4. c. 63, and 9 Geo. 4. c. 40, and the said Act 4 & 5 Vict. c. 49, respectively, (other than for paying off or discharging money hereafter to be borrowed on mortgage of the rates of the same county,) without being subject to the restrictions by the same several Acts and the said recited Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, respectively imposed upon the powers thereby given to borrow money for the purposes aforesaid, but subject to such other restrictions as are hereinafter imposed:—

It is Enacted,

- I. That so much of the said several recited Acts as authorizes the Justices of the Peace for any county to borrow money on mortgage of the rates to be raised upon such county for any purpose (other than the purpose of paying off or discharging any money which at the time of the passing of this Act hath been borrowed on mortgage of the rates of such county,) so far as the said several recited Acts respectively relate to the said county of Middlesex, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.
- II. That from time to time, when any estimate shall have been approved by the Justices of the Peace for the said county of Middlesex in General or Quarter Sessions assembled, for the building or rebuilding, repairing or enlarging any gaol or house of correction in and for the said county, under the powers of the said recited Act, 4 Geo. 4. c. 64, and also when any estimate shall have been approved by the Justices of the Peace for the said county in General or Quarter Sessions assembled, for the building or rebuilding, repairing, improving, or enlarging any shire hall, county hall, or other building in and for the said county, under the powers of the said recited Act, 7 Geo. 4. c. 63, and also when it shall seem necessary and expedient to the Justices of the Peace for the said county in General or Quarter Sessions assembled to borrow and take up on mortgage of the rates to be raised upon the said county any money, in order to defray the charge and costs of carrying the said recited Act, 9 Geo. 4. c. 40, relating to county lunatic asylums, into execution, so far as the same relates to the said county, and also when any estimate shall have been approved by the Justices of the Peace for the said county in General or Quarter Sessions assembled for the upholding, maintaining, supporting, altering, widening, repairing, improving, or rebuilding of any county bridge or bridges, or the approaches thereto, or the land arches connected therewith, which the said county is legally bound to repair or maintain, it shall and may be lawful for the Justices of the Peace for the said county in General or Quarter Sessions assembled from time to time to borrow and take up at interest on mortgage of the rate of the said county, by instrument in the form contained in the Schedule to this Act annexed, or to the like effect, any sum or sums of money, not exceeding the amount of such estimates or of such charge and costs as aforesaid respectively (as the case may be), as to the said Justices shall appear necessary and expedient for the purposes aforesaid, and to secure every such sum of money so borrowed upon the credit of the said rate.
- III. That from time to time when the Justices of the Peace for the said county shall borrow any money under the powers of this Act, the said Justices shall charge the rate to be raised upon the said county, not only with the interest of the money so borrowed, but also with the payment of such further sum as will insure the payment of the whole sum borrowed within thirty years from the time of borrowing the same; and such sums shall be assessed on the said county in such manner as county rates are directed to be assessed under the laws in force for that purpose, and shall be paid and applied, under the direction of the said Justices, in discharge of the interest and of so many of the principal sums on the said securities as such money will extend to discharge in each year, until the whole of the money for which such securities shall be made, and the interest thereof, shall be fully paid and discharged; and the said Justices shall and they are hereby required to fix one or more day or days in each year on which such payment shall be made, and shall make orders for assessments in due time, so as to provide for the regular payment thereof; and such Justices shall also and they are hereby required to appoint a proper person to keep an exact and regular account of all the receipts and payments under the authority of this Act in a book or books separate and apart from all other accounts, and the same to adjust and settle in such manner as that it may easily be seen that interest is growing due, and what principal money has been discharged, and what remains due, and the book or books so adjusted and settled to deliver into court at every General or Quarter Sessions to be held for the said county; and the said Justices shall also and they are hereby required at every such sessions carefully to inspect all such accounts, and to make orders for carrying the several purposes of this Act into execution, in such manner as to them shall seem meet.
- IV. That the costs and expenses of preparing, obtaining, and passing this Act, and all other charges incident or relating thereto, shall be paid by the treasurer of the said county of Middlesex out of the first monies which shall be in his hands on account of the county rates.
- V. That this Act shall be deemed and taken to be a public Act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such.
- VI. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act or Acts to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

The SCHEDULE referred to in this Act.

WE, One of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, and Chairman of the Court of General [or Quarter] Sessions of the Peace for the County of Middlesex, holden at the Sessions House situate at _____ in and for the County of the _____ Day of _____ and _____ Two others of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace acting for the said County, and assembled in the said Court, in pursuance of the Powers to us given by an Act made in the _____ Year of the Reign of Her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled [here insert the Title of this Act], do hereby in open Court mortgage and charge all the Rates to be raised within the said County under the Description of County Rates with the Payment of the Sum of _____ of lawful Money of Great Britain and Ireland, which hath proposed and agreed to lend and hath now actually paid to the Treasurer of the said County of Middlesex, upon the Credit of the said Rates, to defray the Expense of [state the Purpose to which the Money is to be applied]; and we do hereby confirm and establish the same unto the said his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, for securing the Repayment of the said Sum of _____ and Interest for the same after the Rate of _____ for every One hundred Pounds for a Year; and do order the Treasurer for such County of Middlesex to pay the Interest of the said Sum of _____ or of so much thereof as shall from Time to Time remain undischarged, half-yearly on the _____ Day of _____ and the _____ Day of _____ in every Year, as the same shall become due, until the Principal shall be discharged, pursuant to the Directions of the said Act; and to pay One equal Thirtieth Part or Share of the said Principal Sum of _____ to the said his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, on the _____ Day of _____ which will be in the Year of _____ our Lord One thousand eight hundred and _____ and One other equal Thirtieth Part or Share of the said Principal Sum on the _____ Day of _____ in each and every succeeding Year, until the whole of the said Sum of _____ shall be fully paid and discharged, pursuant to the Directions of the said Act. As witness our Hands and Seals, the Day and Year first above written.

By this Act,

After reciting that it is expedient to comprise in one general Act sundry provisions usually introduced into Acts of Parliament authorizing the construction of railways in Scotland, and that as well for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of repeating such provisions in each of the several Acts relating to such undertakings as for insuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves: And that a Bill is now pending in Parliament, intituled 'An Act for consolidating in One Act certain Provisions usually inserted in Acts authorizing the taking of Lands for Undertakings of a public Nature in Scotland,' and which is intended to be called 'The Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845':—

It is Enacted,

I. That the provisions of this Act shall apply to every railway in Scotland which shall by any Act which shall hereafter be passed be authorized to be constructed, and this Act shall be incorporated with such Act; and all the clauses and provisions of this Act, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by any such Act, shall apply to the undertaking authorized thereby, so far as the same shall be applicable to such undertaking, and shall, as well as the clauses and provisions of every other Act which shall be incorporated with such Act, form part of such Act, and be construed together therewith, as forming one Act.

II. And with respect to the construction of this Act, and other Acts to be incorporated therewith,—it is enacted as follows: The expression "the special Act" used in this Act shall be construed to mean any Act which shall be hereafter passed authorizing the construction of a railway, and with which this Act shall be so incorporated as aforesaid; and the word "prescribed" used in this Act in reference to any matter herein stated shall be construed to refer to such matter as the same shall be prescribed or provided for in the special Act, and the sentence in which such word shall occur shall be construed as if, instead of the word "prescribed," the expression "prescribed for that purpose in the special Act" had been used; and the expression "the lands" shall mean the lands which shall by the special Act be authorized to be taken or used for the purposes thereof; and the expression "the undertaking" shall mean the railway and works, of whatever description, by the special Act authorized to be executed.

III. The following words and expressions both in this and the special Act shall have the meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; (that is to say,)

Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number, and words importing the plural number only shall include also the singular number:

Words importing the masculine gender only shall include females:

The word "Lands" shall include lands, houses, tenements, and heritages of any tenure:

The word "Lease" shall include a missive or an agreement for a lease:

The word "Toll" shall include any rate or charge or other payment payable under the special Act, for any passenger, animal, carriage, goods, merchandise, articles, matters, or things conveyed on the railway:

The word "Month" shall mean calendar month:

The "Lord Ordinary" shall mean the Lord Ordinary of the Court of Session in Scotland officiating on the Bills in time of vacation, or the junior Lord Ordinary if in time of session, as the case may be:

The word "Oath" shall include affirmation in the case of Quakers, or other declaration or solemnity lawfully substituted for an oath in the case of any other persons exempted by law from the necessity of taking an oath:

The word "County" shall include any ward or other like division of a county:

The word "Sheriff" shall include the sheriff substitute:

The word "Justice" shall mean Justice of the Peace acting for the county, city, or place where the matter requiring the cognizance of any such Justice shall arise, and who shall not be interested in the matter; and where such matter shall arise in respect of lands being the property of one and the same party, situate not wholly in any one county, city, or place, shall mean a Justice acting for the county, city, or place where any part of such lands shall be situate, and who shall not be interested in such matter; and where any matter shall be authorized or required to be done by two Justices, the expression "two Justices" shall be understood to mean two or more Justices assembled and acting together:

Where under the provisions of this or the special Act any notice shall be required to be given to the owner of any lands, or where any act shall be authorized or required to be done with the consent of any such owner, the word "Owner" shall be understood to mean any person or corporation who, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, would be enabled to sell and convey lands to the company.

The expression "the Bank" shall mean any one of the incorporated or chartered banks in Scotland.

The expression "the Company" shall mean the company or party which shall be authorized by the special Act to construct the railway:

The expression "the Railway" shall mean the railway and works by the special Act authorized to be constructed:

The expression "the Board of Trade" shall mean the Lords of the Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council appointed for Trade and Foreign Plantations.

IV. That in citing this Act in other Acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression 'The Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845.'

And after reciting that it may be convenient, in some cases, to incorporate with Acts hereafter to be passed some portion only of the provisions of this Act:—

It is Enacted,

V. That for the purpose of making any such incorporation, it shall be sufficient in any such Act to enact that the clauses of this Act with respect to the matter so proposed to be incorporated (describing such matter as it is described in this Act, and the words introductory to the enactment with respect to such matter), shall be incorporated with such Act, and thereupon all the clauses and provisions of this Act with respect to the matter so incorporated shall, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by such Act, form part of such Act, and such Act shall be construed as if the substance of such clauses and provisions were set forth therein with reference to the matter to which such Act shall relate.

VI. And with respect to the construction of the railway and the works connected therewith,—it is enacted as follows: In exercising the power given to the company by the special Act to construct the railway, and to take lands for that purpose, the company shall be subject to the provisions and restrictions contained in this Act and in the said Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act; and the company shall make to the owners and occupiers of and all other parties interested in any lands taken or used for the purposes of the railway, or injuriously affected by the construction thereof, full compensation for the value of the lands so taken or used, and for all damage sustained by such owners, occupiers, and other parties, by reason of the exercise, as regards such lands, of the powers by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, vested in the company; and, except where otherwise provided by this or the special Act, the amount of such compensation shall be ascertained and determined in the manner provided by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act for determining questions of compensation with regard to lands purchased or taken under the provisions thereof; and all the provisions of the said last-mentioned Act shall be applicable to determining the amount of any such compensation, and to enforcing the payment or other satisfaction thereof.

VII. If any omission, mis-statement, or erroneous description shall have been made of any lands, or of the owners, lessees, or occupiers of any lands, described on the plans or books of reference mentioned in the special Act, or in the Schedule to the special Act, it shall be lawful for the company, after giving ten days' notice to the owners of the lands affected by such proposed correction, to apply to the sheriff for the correction thereof; and if it shall appear to such sheriff that such omission, mis-statement, or erroneous description arose from mistake, he shall certify the same accordingly, and shall in such certificate state the particulars of any such omission, and in what respect any such matter shall have been mis-stated or erroneously described; and such certificate shall be deposited in the office of the principal sheriff clerk in every county in which the lands affected thereby shall be situate, and shall also be deposited with the schoolmasters of the several parishes (or, in royal burghs, with the town clerk,) in which the lands affected thereby shall be situate; and such certificate shall be kept by such sheriff clerks, schoolmasters, and other persons respectively along with the other documents to which they relate; and thereupon such plan, book of reference, or schedule shall be deemed to be corrected according to such certificate; and it shall be lawful for the company to make the works in accordance with such certificate.

VIII. It shall not be lawful for the company to proceed in the execution of the railway unless they shall have previously to the commencement of such work deposited in the office of the principal sheriff clerk in every county in or through which the railway is intended to pass a plan and section of all such alterations from the original plan and section as shall have been approved of by Parliament, on the same scale and containing the same particulars as the original plan and section of the railway, and shall also have deposited with the schoolmasters of the several parishes (or, in royal burghs, with the town clerk) in or through which such alterations shall have been authorized to be made, copies or extracts of or from such plans and sections as shall relate to such parishes respectively.

IX. The said sheriff clerks, schoolmasters, and town clerks shall receive the said plans and sections of alterations, and copies and extracts thereof respectively, and shall retain the same, as well as the said original plans and sections, and shall permit all persons interested to inspect any of the documents aforesaid, and to make copies and extracts of and from the same, in the like manner, and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided in the case of the original plans and sections by an act, 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 83, intitled, 'An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties and other Persons to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Order of either House of Parliament.'

X. True copies of the said plans and books of reference, or of any alteration or correction thereof, or extract therefrom certified by any such sheriff clerk in Scotland, which certificate such sheriff clerk shall give to all parties interested, when required, shall be received in all courts of justice or elsewhere as evidence of the contents thereof.

XI. In making the railway it shall not be lawful for the company to deviate from the levels of the railway, as referred to the common datum line described in the section approved of by Parliament, and as marked on the same, to any extent exceeding in any place five feet, or, in passing through a town, village, street, or land continuously built upon, two feet, without the previous consent in writing of the owners and occupiers of the land in which such deviation is intended to be made; or in case any street or public highway shall be affected by such deviation, then the same shall not be made without the consent of the trustees or commissioners having the controul of such street or public highway, or, if there be no such trustees or commissioners, without the consent of the sheriff, or without the consent of the trustees or commissioners for any public sewers, or the proprietors of any canal, navigation, gas works, or waterworks affected by such deviation: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the company to deviate from the said levels to a further extent without such consent as aforesaid, by lowering solid embankments or viaducts, provided that the requisite height of headway as prescribed by Act of Parliament be left for roads, streets, or canals passing under the same: Provided also, that notice of every application to the sheriff for the purpose of considering the matter shall, fourteen days previous to such application, be given in some newspaper circulating in the county, and also be affixed upon the door of the parish church in which such deviation or alteration is intended to be made, or, if there be no church, some other place to which notices are usually affixed.

XII. Before it shall be lawful for the company to make any greater deviation from the level than five feet, or, in any town, village, street, or land continuously built upon, two feet, after having obtained such consent as aforesaid, it shall be incumbent on the company to give notice of such intended deviation by public advertisement, inserted once at least in two newspapers, or twice at least in one newspaper, circulating in the district or neighbourhood where such deviation is intended to be made, three weeks at least before commencing to make such deviation; and it shall be lawful for the owner of any lands prejudicially affected thereby, at any time before the commencement of the making of such deviation, to apply to the Board of Trade, after giving ten days' notice to the company, to decide whether, having regard to the interests of such applicants, such proposed deviation is proper to be made; and it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, if they think fit, to decide such question accordingly, and by their certificate in writing either to disallow the making of such deviation or to authorize the making thereof, either simply or with any such modification as shall seem proper to the Board of Trade; and after any such certificate shall have been given by the Board of Trade it shall not be lawful for the company to make such deviation, except in conformity with such certificate.

xiii. Where in any place it is intended to carry the railway on an arch or arches or other viaduct, as marked on the said plan or section, the same shall be made accordingly; and where a tunnel is marked on the said plan or section as intended to be made at any place, the same shall be made accordingly, unless the owners, lessees, and occupiers of the land in which such tunnel is intended to be made shall consent that the same shall not be so made.

xiv. It shall not be lawful for the company to deviate from or alter the gradients, curves, tunnels, or other engineering works described in the said plan or section, except within the following limits, and under the following conditions; (that is to say,)

Subject to the above provisions in regard to altering levels, it shall be lawful for the company to diminish the inclination or gradients of the railway to any extent, and to increase the said inclination or gradients as follows; (that is to say,) in gradients of an inclination not exceeding one in a hundred, to any extent not exceeding ten feet per mile, or to any further extent which shall be certified by the Board of Trade to be consistent with the public safety, and not prejudicial to the public interest; and in gradients exceeding the inclination of one in a hundred, to any extent not exceeding three feet per mile, or to any further extent which shall be so certified by the Board of Trade as aforesaid:

It shall be lawful for the company to diminish the radius of any curve described in the said plan to any extent which shall leave a radius of not less than half a mile, or to any further extent authorized by such certificate as aforesaid from the Board of Trade:

It shall be lawful for the company to make a tunnel, not marked on the said plan or section, instead of a cutting, or a viaduct instead of a solid embankment, if authorized by such certificate as aforesaid from the Board of Trade.

xv. It shall be lawful for the company to deviate from the line delineated on the plans so deposited, provided that no such deviation shall extend to a greater distance than the limits of deviation delineated upon the said plans, nor to a greater extent in passing through a town, than ten yards, or elsewhere to a greater extent than one hundred yards from the said line, and that the railway by means of such deviation be not made to extend into the lands of any person, whether owner, lessee, or occupier, whose name is not mentioned in the books of reference, without the previous consent in writing of such person, unless the name of such person shall have been omitted by mistake, and the fact that such omission proceeded from mistake shall have been certified in manner herein or in the special Act provided for in cases of unintentional errors in the said book of reference.

xvi. Subject to the provisions and restrictions in this and the special Act, and any Act incorporated therewith, it shall be lawful for the company, for the purpose of constructing the railway, or the accommodation works connected therewith, herein-after mentioned, to execute any of the following works; (that is to say,)

They may make or construct in, upon, across, under, or over any lands, or any streets, hills, valleys, roads, railroads, or tramroads, rivers, canals, brooks, streams, or other waters, within the lands described in the said plans, or mentioned in the said books of reference or any correction thereof, such temporary or permanent inclined planes, tunnels, embankments, aqueducts, bridges, roads, ways, passages, conduits, drains, piers, arches, cuttings, and fences as they think proper;

They may alter the course of any rivers not navigable, canals, brooks, streams, or watercourses, and of any branches of navigable rivers, such branches not being themselves navigable, within such lands, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining tunnels, bridges, passages, or other works over or under the same, and divert or alter, as well temporarily as permanently, the course of any such rivers or streams of water, roads, streets, or ways, or raise or sink the level of any such rivers or streams, roads, streets, or ways, in order the more conveniently to carry the same over or under or by the side of the railway, as they may think proper;

They may make drains or conduits into, through, or under any lands adjoining the railway, for the purpose of conveying water from or to the railway;

They may erect and construct such houses, warehouses, offices, and other buildings, yards, stations, wharfs, engines, machinery, apparatus, and other works and conveniences as they think proper;

They may from time to time alter, repair, or discontinue the before-mentioned works or any of them, and substitute others in their stead; and

They may do all other acts necessary for making, maintaining, altering, or repairing, and using the railway:

Provided always, that in the exercise of the powers by this or the special Act granted the company shall do as little damage as can be, and shall make full satisfaction in manner herein and in the special Act, and any Act incorporated therewith, provided, to all parties interested, for all damage by them sustained by reason of the exercise of such powers.

xvii. It shall not be lawful for the company to construct on the shore of the sea, or of any creek, bay, arm of the sea or navigable river communicating therewith, where and so far up the same as the tide flows and reflows, any work, or to construct any railway or bridge across any creek, bay, arm of the sea, or navigable river, where and so far up the same as the tide flows and reflows, without the previous consent of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, to be signified in writing under the hands of two of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works, and Buildings, and of the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral aforesaid for the time being, to be signified in writing under the hand of the secretary of the Admiralty, and then only according to such plan and under such restrictions and regulations as the said Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works, and Buildings, and the said Lord High Admiral, or the said Commissioners, may approve of, such approval being signified as last aforesaid; and where any such work, railway, or bridge shall have been constructed it shall not be lawful for the company at any time to alter or extend the same without obtaining, previously to making any such alteration or extension, the like consents or approvals; and if any such work, railway, or bridge shall be commenced or completed contrary to the provisions of this Act, it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works, and Buildings, or the said Lord High Admiral, or the said Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral, to abate and remove the same, and to restore the site thereof to its former condition, at the costs and charge of the company; and the amount thereof may be recovered in the same manner as a penalty is recoverable against the company.

XXVIII. It shall be lawful for the company, for the purpose of constructing the railway, to raise, sink, or otherwise alter the position of any of the watercourses, water pipes, or gas pipes belonging to any of the houses adjoining or near to the railway, and also the mains and other pipes laid down by any company or society who may furnish the inhabitants of such houses or places with water or gas, and also to remove all other obstructions to such construction, so as the same respectively be done with as little detriment and inconvenience to such company, society, or inhabitants as the circumstances will admit, and be done under the superintendence of the company to which such water pipes or gas pipes belong, and of the several commissioners or trustees, or persons having controul of the pavements, sewers, roads, streets, highways, lanes, and other public passages and places within the parish or district where such mains, pipes, or obstructions shall be situate, or of their surveyor, if they or he think fit to attend, after receiving not less than forty-eight hours' notice for that purpose.

XIX. Provided, That it shall not be lawful for the company to remove or displace any of the mains or pipes (other than private service pipes), syphons, plugs or other works belonging to any such company or society, or to do anything to impede the passage of water or gas into or through such mains or pipes, until good and sufficient mains or pipes, syphons, plugs, and all other works necessary or proper for continuing the supply of water or gas as sufficiently as the same was supplied by the mains or pipes proposed to be removed or displaced, shall, at the expense of the company, have been first made and laid down in lieu thereof, and be ready for use, in a position as little varying from that of the pipes or mains proposed to be removed or displaced as may be consistent with the construction of the railway, and to the satisfaction of the surveyor or engineer of such water or gas company or society, or, in case of disagreement between such surveyor or engineer and the company, as a Justice shall direct.

XX. It shall not be lawful for the company to lay down any such pipes contrary to the regulations of any Act of Parliament relating to such water or gas company or society, or to cause any road to be lowered for the purposes of the railway, without leaving a covering of not less than eighteen inches from the surface of the road over such mains or pipes.

XXI. The company shall make good all damage done to the property of the water or gas company or society, by the disturbance thereof, and shall make full compensation to all parties for any loss or damage which they may sustain by reason of any interference with the mains, pipes, or works of such water or gas company or society, or with the private service pipes of any person supplied by them with water.

XXII. If it shall be necessary to construct the railway or any of the works over any mains or pipes of any such water or gas company or society, the company shall, at their own expense, construct and maintain a good and sufficient culvert over such main or pipe, so as to leave the same accessible for the purpose of repairs.

XXIII. If by any such operations as aforesaid the company shall interrupt the supply of water or gas they shall forfeit 20*l.* for every day that such supply shall be so interrupted, and such penalty shall be appropriated to the benefit of the poor of the parish in which such obstruction shall occur, in such manner as the minister and kirk-session of the parish shall direct.

XXIV. If any person wilfully obstruct any person acting under the authority of the company in the lawful exercise of their power, in setting out the line of the railway, or pull up or remove any poles or stakes driven into the ground for the purpose of so setting out the line of the railway, or deface or destroy any marks made for the same purpose, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l.* for every such offence.

XXV. And with respect to the temporary occupation of lands near the railway during the construction thereof,—it is enacted as follows: Subject to the provisions herein and in the special Act contained, it shall be lawful for the company, at any time before the expiration of the period by the special Act limited for the completion of the railway, to enter upon and use any existing private road, being a road gravelled or formed with stones or other hard materials, and not being an avenue or a planted or ornamental road, or an approach to any mansion house, within the prescribed limits, if any, or, if no limits be prescribed, not being more than five hundred yards distant from the centre of the railway as delineated on the plans; but before the company shall enter upon or use any such existing road they shall give three weeks' notice of their intention to the owners and occupiers of such road, and of the lands over which the same shall pass, and shall in such notice state the time during which, and the purposes for which, they intend to occupy such road, and shall pay to the owners and occupiers of such road, and of the lands through which the same shall pass, such compensation for the use and occupation of such road, either in a gross sum of money or by half-yearly instalments, as shall be agreed upon between such owners and occupiers respectively and the company, or in case they differ about the compensation the same shall be settled by the sheriff in the same manner as any compensation not exceeding 50*l.* is directed to be settled by the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845.

XXVI. It shall be lawful for the owners and occupiers of any such road, and of the lands over which the same passes, within ten days after the service of the aforesaid notice, by notice in writing to the company to object to the company making use of such road, on the ground that other roads, such as the company are hereinbefore authorized to use for the purposes aforesaid, or that some public road, would be more fitting to be used for the same; and upon the objection being so made such proceedings may be had as are hereinafter mentioned with respect to lands temporarily occupied by the company, in respect of which three weeks' notice is hereinafter required to be given, and in the same manner as if in the provisions relative to such proceedings the word road or roads, or the words road and the land over which the same passes, as the case may require, had been substituted in such provisions for the word lands.

XXVII. Subject to the provisions herein and in the special Act contained, it shall be lawful for the company, at any time before the expiration of the period by the special Act limited for the completion of the railway, without making any previous payment, tender, or deposit, to enter upon any lands within the prescribed limits, or, if no limits be prescribed, not being more than two hundred yards distant from the centre of the railway as delineated on the plans, and not being a garden, orchard, or plantation attached or belonging to a house, nor a park, planted walk, avenue, or ground ornamentally planted, and not being nearer to the mansion house of the owner of any such lands than the prescribed distance, or if no distance be prescribed, then not nearer than five hundred yards therefrom, and to occupy the said lands so long as may be necessary for the construction or repair of that portion of the railway, or of the accommodation works connected therewith, hereinafter mentioned, and to use the same for any of the following purposes; (that is to say,)

For the purpose of taking earth or soil by side cuttings therefrom;

For the purpose of depositing spoil thereon;

For the purpose of obtaining materials therefrom for the construction or repair of the railway or such accommodation works as aforesaid; or

For the purpose of forming roads thereon to or from or by the side of the railway:

And in exercise of the powers aforesaid it shall be lawful for the company to deposit and also to manufacture and work upon such lands materials of every kind used in constructing the railway, and also to dig and take from out of any such lands any clay, stone, gravel, sand, or other things that may be found therein useful or proper for constructing the railway or any such roads as aforesaid, and for the purposes aforesaid to erect thereon workshops, sheds, and other buildings of a temporary nature: Provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall exempt the company from an action for nuisance or other injury, if any done, in the exercise of the powers hereinbefore given, to the lands or habitations of any party other than the party whose lands shall be so taken or used for any of the purposes aforesaid: Provided always, that no stone or slate quarry, brick field, or other like place, which at the time of the passing of the special Act shall be commonly worked or used for getting materials therefrom for the purpose of selling or disposing of the same, shall be taken or used by the company, either wholly or in part, for any of the purposes lastly hereinbefore mentioned.

XXVIII. In case any such lands shall be required for spoil banks or for side cuttings, or for obtaining materials for the construction or repairing of the railway, the company shall before entering thereon (except in the case of accident to the railway requiring immediate reparation) give three weeks' notice in writing to the owners and occupiers of such lands of their intention to enter upon the same for such purposes; and in case the said lands are required for any of the other purposes hereinbefore mentioned the company shall (except in the cases aforesaid) give ten days' like notice thereof, and the company shall in such notices respectively state the substance of the provisions hereinafter contained respecting the right of such owner or occupier to require the company to purchase any such lands, or to receive compensation for the temporary occupation thereof, as the case may be.

XXIX. The said notice shall either be served personally on such owners and occupiers, or left at their last usual place of abode, if any such can, after diligent inquiry, be found, and in case any such owner shall be absent from the United Kingdom, or cannot be found after diligent inquiry, such notice shall be served on the factor or agent (if any) of such owner, and shall also be left with the occupier of such lands, or, if there be no such occupier, shall be affixed upon some conspicuous part of such lands.

XXX. In any case in which a notice of three weeks is hereinbefore required to be given it shall be lawful for the owner or occupier of the lands therein referred to, within ten days after the service of such notice, by notice in writing to the company to object to the company making use of such lands, either on the ground that the lands proposed to be taken for the purposes aforesaid, or some part thereof, or of the materials contained therein, are essential to be retained by such owner, in order to the beneficial enjoyment of other neighbouring lands belonging to him, or on the ground that other lands lying contiguous or near to those proposed to be taken would be more fitting to be used for such purposes by the company; and upon objection being so made such proceedings may be had as hereinafter mentioned; and if in such case the company shall refuse to occupy such other lands in lieu of those mentioned in the notice, it shall be lawful for the sheriff, on the application of such owner or occupier, to summon the company and the owners and occupiers of such other lands to appear before him at a time and place to be named in such summons, such time not being more than fourteen days after such application nor less than seven days from the service of such summons; and on the appearance of the parties, or in the absence of any of them, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such sheriff to determine summarily which of the said lands shall be used by the company for the purposes aforesaid, and to authorize the company to occupy and use the same accordingly.

XXXI. If in the case last mentioned it shall appear to such sheriff, upon the inquiry before him, that the lands of any other party not summoned before them, being sufficient in quantity, and such as the company are hereinbefore authorized to take or use for the purposes aforesaid, would be more fitting to be used by the company than the lands of the person who shall have been so summoned as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said sheriff to adjourn such inquiry, and to summon such other person to appear before him at any time, not being more than fourteen days from such inquiry, nor less than seven days from the service of such summons; and on the appearance of the parties, or, in the absence of any of them, on proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such sheriff to determine finally which lands shall be used for the purposes aforesaid, and to authorize the company to occupy and use the same accordingly.

XXXII. Before entering, under the provisions hereinbefore contained, upon any such lands as shall be required for spoil banks or for side cuttings, or for obtaining materials or forming roads as aforesaid, the company shall, if required by the owner or occupier thereof, seven days at least before the expiration of the notice to take such lands as hereinbefore mentioned, find two sufficient persons, to be approved of by the sheriff, in case the parties differ, who shall enter into a bond to such owner or occupier in a sum to such amount as shall be approved of by the sheriff, in case the parties differ, for the payment of such compensation as may become payable in respect of the same in manner herein mentioned.

XXXIII. Before the company shall use any such lands for any of the purposes aforesaid they shall, if required so to do by the owner or occupier thereof, separate the same by a sufficient fence from the lands adjoining thereto, with such gates as may be required by the said owner or occupier for the convenient occupation of such lands, and shall also, to all private roads used by them as aforesaid, put up fences and gates in like manner, in all cases where the same may be necessary to prevent the straying of cattle from or upon the lands traversed by such roads, and in case of any difference between the owners or occupiers of such roads and lands and the company as to the necessity for such fences and gates, such fences and gates as any two Justices shall deem necessary for the purposes aforesaid, on application being made to them in like manner as hereinbefore is provided in respect to the use of such road.

XXXIV. That if any land shall be taken or used by the company, under the provisions of this or the special Act, for the purpose of getting materials therefrom for the construction or repair of the railway, or the accommodation works connected therewith, they shall work the same in such manner as the surveyor or agent of the owner of such land shall direct, or, in case of disagreement between such surveyor or agent and the company, in such manner as any Justice shall direct, on the application of either party, after notice of the hearing of the application shall have been given to the other party.

XXXV. In all cases in which the company shall in exercise of the powers aforesaid enter upon any lands for the purpose of making spoil banks or side cuttings thereon, or for obtaining therefrom materials for the construction or repair of the railway, it shall be lawful for the owners or occupiers of such lands, or parties having such interests therein as, under the provisions in the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act mentioned, are capable of being by them sold or conveyed to the company, at any time during the possession of any such lands by the company, and before such owners or occupiers shall have accepted compensation from the company in respect of such temporary occupation, to serve a notice in writing on the company requiring them to purchase the said lands, or interests therein capable of being sold and conveyed by them respectively; and in such notice such owners or occupiers shall set forth the particulars of such their interest in such lands, and the amount of their claim in respect thereof; and the company shall thereupon be bound to purchase the said lands, or the interest therein capable of being sold and conveyed by the parties serving such notice.

XXXVI. In any of the cases aforesaid, where the company shall not be required to purchase such lands, and in all other cases where they shall take temporary possession of lands by virtue of the powers herein or in the special Act granted, it shall be incumbent on the company, within one month after their entry upon such lands, upon being required so to do, to pay to the occupier of the said lands the value of any crop or dressing that may be thereon, as well as full compensation for any other damage of a temporary nature which he may sustain by reason of their so taking possession of his lands, and shall also from time to time during their occupation of the said lands pay half-yearly to such occupier or to the owner of the lands, as the case may require, a rent to be fixed by the sheriff, in case the parties differ, and shall also within six months after they shall have ceased to occupy the said lands, and not later than six months after the expiration of the time by the special Act limited for the completion of the railway, pay to such owner and occupier, or deposit in the Bank for the benefit of all parties interested, as the case may require, compensation for all permanent or other loss, damage or injury that may have been sustained by them by reason of the exercise, as regards the said lands, of the powers herein or in the special Act granted, including the full value of all clay, stone, gravel, sand, and other things taken from such lands.

XXXVII. The amount and application of the purchase-money and other compensation payable by the company in any of the cases aforesaid shall be determined in the manner provided by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act for determining the amount and application of the compensation to be paid for lands taken under the provisions thereof.

XXXVIII. That it shall be lawful for the company, in addition to the lands authorized to be compulsorily taken by them under the powers of this or the special Act, to contract with any party willing to sell the same for the purchase of any land adjoining or near to the railway, or to any other railway communicating therewith, and on which the traffic thereupon may pass, and in any town or city adjoining to or near such railways, not exceeding in the whole the prescribed number of acres for extraordinary purposes; (that is to say,)

For the purpose of making and providing additional stations, yards, wharfs, and places for the accommodation of passengers, and for receiving, depositing, and loading or unloading goods or cattle to be conveyed upon the railway, and for the erection of weighing machines, toll houses, offices, warehouses, and other buildings and conveniences:

For the purpose of making convenient roads or ways to the railway, or any other purpose which may be requisite or convenient for the formation or use of the railway.

XXXIX. And with respect to the crossing of roads, or other interference therewith,—it is enacted as follows: If the line of the railway cross any turnpike road or public highway, then (except where otherwise provided by the special Act) either such road shall be carried over the railway, or the railway shall be carried over such road, by means of a bridge, of the height and width and with the ascent or descent by this or the special Act in that behalf provided; and such bridge, with the immediate approaches, and all other necessary works connected therewith, shall be executed and at all times thereafter maintained at the expense of the company: Provided always, that, with the consent of the sheriff, or two or more Justices, as after mentioned, it shall be lawful for the company to carry the railway across any highway, other than a public carriage road, on the level.

XL. If the railway cross any turnpike road or public carriage road on a level, the company shall erect and at all times maintain good and sufficient gates across such road, on each side of the railway where the same shall communicate therewith, and shall employ proper persons to open and shut such gates; and such gates shall be kept constantly closed across such road on both sides of the railway, except during the time when horses, cattle, carts, or carriages passing along the same shall have to cross such railway; and such gates shall be of such dimensions and so constructed as when closed to fence in the railway, and prevent cattle or horses passing along the road from entering upon the railway; and the person intrusted with the care of such gates shall cause the same to be closed as soon as such horses, cattle, carts, or carriages shall have passed through the same, under a penalty of 40s. for every default therein: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, in any case in which they are satisfied that it will be more conducive to the public safety that the gates on any level crossing over any such road should be kept closed across the railway, to order that such gates shall be kept so closed, instead of across the road, and in such case such gates shall be kept constantly closed across the railway, except when engines or carriages passing along the railway shall have occasion to cross such road, in the same manner and under the like penalty as above directed with respect to the gates being kept closed across the road.

XL. Where the railway crosses any turnpike road on a level adjoining to a station, all trains on the railway shall be made to slacken their speed before arriving at such turnpike road, and shall not cross the same at any greater rate of speed than four miles an hour; and the company shall be subject to all such rules and regulations with regard to such crossings as may from time to time be made by the Board of Trade.

XLII. Every bridge to be erected for the purpose of carrying the railway over any road (except where otherwise provided by the special Act) shall be built in conformity with the following regulations; (that is to say,)

The width of the arch shall be such as to leave thereunder a clear space of not less than thirty-five feet if the arch be over a turnpike road, and of twenty-five feet if over a public carriage road, and of twelve feet if over a private road:

The clear height of the arch from the surface of the road shall be not less than sixteen feet for a space of twelve feet if the arch be over a turnpike road, and fifteen feet for a space of ten feet if over a public carriage road; and in each of such cases the clear height at the springing of the arch shall not be less than twelve feet:

The clear height of the arch for a space of nine feet shall not be less than fourteen feet over a private carriage road:

The descent made in the road in order to carry the same under the bridge shall not be more than one foot in thirty feet if the bridge be over a turnpike road, one foot in twenty feet if over a public carriage road, and one foot in sixteen feet if over a private carriage road, not being a tramroad or railroad, or if the same be a tramroad or railroad the descent shall not be greater than the prescribed rate of inclination, and if no rate be prescribed the same shall not be greater than as it existed at the passing of the special Act.

XLIII. Every bridge erected for carrying any road over the railway shall (except as otherwise provided by the special Act) be built in conformity with the following regulations; (that is to say,)

There shall be a good and sufficient fence on each side of the bridge of not less height than four feet, and on each side of the immediate approaches of such bridge of not less than three feet:

The road over the bridge shall have a clear space between the fences thereof of thirty-five feet if the road be a turnpike road, and twenty-five feet if a public carriage road, and twelve feet if a private road:

The ascent shall not be more than one foot in thirty feet if the road be a turnpike road, one foot in twenty feet if a public carriage road, and one foot in sixteen feet if a private carriage road, not being a tramroad or railroad, or if the same be a tramroad or railroad the ascent shall not be greater than the prescribed rate of inclination, and if no rate be prescribed the same shall not be greater than as it existed at the passing of the special Act.

XLIV. Provided always, That in all cases where the average available width for the passage of carriages of any existing roads within fifty yards of the points of crossing the same is less than the width hereinbefore prescribed for bridges over or under the railway, the width of such bridges need not be greater than such average available width of such roads, but so nevertheless that such bridges be not of less width, in the case of a turnpike road or public carriage road, than twenty feet: Provided also, that if at any time after the construction of the railway the average available width of any such road shall be increased beyond the width of such bridge on either side thereof, the company shall be bound, at their own expense, to increase the width of the said bridge to such extent as they may be required by the trustees or surveyors of such road, not exceeding the width of such road as so widened, or the maximum width herein or in the special Act prescribed for a bridge in the like case over or under the railway.

XLV. Provided, that if the mesne inclination of any road within two hundred and fifty yards of the point of crossing the same, or the inclination of such portion of any road as may require to be altered, or for which another road shall be substituted, shall be steeper than the inclination hereinbefore required to be preserved by the company, then the company may carry any such road over or under the railway, or may construct such altered or substituted road at an inclination not steeper than the said mesne inclination of the road so to be crossed, or of the road so requiring to be altered, or for which another road shall be substituted.

XLVI. If, in the exercise of the powers by this or the special Act granted, it be found necessary to cross, cut through, raise, sink, or use any part of any road, whether carriage road, horse road, tramroad, or railway, either public or private, so as to render it impassable for or dangerous to passengers or carriages, or to the persons entitled to the use thereof, the company shall, before the commencement of any such operations, cause a sufficient road to be made instead of the road to be interfered with, and shall at their own expense maintain such substituted road in a state as convenient for passengers and carriages as the road so interfered with, or as nearly so as may be.

XLVII. If the company do not cause another sufficient road to be so made before they interfere with any such existing road as aforesaid, they shall forfeit 20*l.* for every day during which such substituted road shall not be made after the existing road shall have been interrupted; and such penalty shall be paid to the trustees, commissioners, surveyor, or other person having the management of such road, if a public road, and shall be applied for the purposes thereof, or in case of a private road the same shall be paid to the owner thereof; and every such penalty shall be recoverable, with costs, by action in any competent court.

XLVIII. If any party entitled to a right of way over any road so interfered with by the company shall suffer any special damage by reason that the company shall fail to cause another sufficient road to be made before they interfere with the existing road, it shall be lawful for such party to recover the amount of such special damage from the company, with expenses, by action in the Court of Session, if the damage claimed exceeds 25*l.*, or in the sheriff court, if the damage claimed does not exceed 25*l.*, and that whether any party shall have sued for such penalty as aforesaid or not, and without prejudice to the right of any party to sue for the same.

XLIX. If the road so interfered with can be restored compatibly with the formation and use of the railway, the same shall be restored to as good a condition as the same was in at the time when the same was first interfered with by the company, or as near thereto as may be; and if such road cannot be restored compatibly with the formation and use of the railway, the company shall cause the new or substituted road, or some other sufficient substituted road, to be put into a permanently substantial condition, equally convenient as the former road, or as near thereto as circumstances will allow; and the former road shall be restored, or the substituted road put into such condition as aforesaid, as the case may be, within the following periods after the first operation on the former road shall have been commenced, unless the trustees or parties having the management of the road to be restored by writing under their hands consent to an extension of the period, and in such case within such extended period; (that is to say,) if the road be a turnpike road, within six months, and if the road be not a turnpike road, within twelve months.

L. If any such road be not so restored, or the substituted road so completed as aforesaid, within the periods herein or in the special Act fixed for that purpose, the company shall forfeit to the trustees, commissioners, surveyor, or other person having the management of the road interfered with by the company, if a public road, or if a private road to the owner thereof, 20*l.* for every day after the expiration of such periods respectively during which such road shall not be so restored or the substituted road completed; and it shall be lawful for the sheriff or Justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be laid out in executing the work in respect whereof such penalty was incurred.

LI. If in the course of making the railway the company shall use or interfere with any road they shall from time to time make good all damage done by them to such road; and if any question shall arise as to the damage done to any such road by the company, or as to the repair thereof by them, the same shall be determined by the sheriff or two Justices; and such sheriff or Justices may direct such repairs to be made in the state of such road, in respect of the damage done by the company, and within such period as they think reasonable, and may impose on the company, for not carrying into effect such repairs, any penalty not exceeding 5*l.* per day as to such sheriff or Justices shall seem just; and such penalty shall be paid to the surveyor or other person having the management of the road interfered with by the company, if a public road, and be applied for the purposes of such road, or if a private road the same shall be paid to the owner thereof: Provided always, that in determining any such question with regard to a turnpike road the said sheriff or Justices shall have regard to and make full allowance for any tolls that may have been paid by the company on such road in the course of the using thereof.

LII. If the railway shall cross any highway other than a public carriageway on the level, the company shall at their own expense make and at all times maintain convenient ascents and descents and other convenient approaches, with handrails and other fences, and shall, if such highway be a bridleway, erect and at all times maintain good and sufficient gates, and if the same shall be a footway, good and sufficient gates or stiles on each side of the railway where the highway shall communicate therewith.

LIII. When the company shall intend to apply for the consent of the sheriff or two Justices, as hereinbefore provided, so as to authorize them to carry the railway across any highway other than a public carriage road on the level, they shall, fourteen days at least previous to the time at which such application is intended to be made, cause notice of such intended application to be given in some newspaper circulating in the county, and also to be affixed upon the door of the parish church of the parish in which such crossing is intended to be made, or if there be no such church some other place to which notices are usually affixed; and if it appear to the sheriff, or to any two or more Justices acting for the district in which such highway at the proper crossing thereof is situate, after such notice as aforesaid, that the railway can, consistently with a due regard to the public safety and convenience, be carried across such highway in the level, it shall be lawful for such sheriff or Justices to consent that the same may be so carried accordingly.

LIV. If, when the railway shall cross any highway on the level, the company fail to make convenient ascents and descents or other convenient approaches, and such handrails, fences, gates, and stiles as they are hereinbefore required to make, it shall be lawful for the sheriff or two Justices, on the application of the surveyor of roads, or of any two householders within the parish or district where such crossing shall be situate, after not less than ten days' notice to the company, to order the company to make such ascent and descent or other approach, or such handrails, fences, gates, or stiles as aforesaid, within a period to be limited for that purpose by such sheriff or Justices; and if the company fail to comply with such order they shall forfeit 5*l.* for every day that they fail so to do; and it shall be lawful for the sheriff or Justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be applied in such manner and by such person as they think fit, in executing the work in respect whereof such penalty was incurred.

LV. If the commissioners or trustees of any turnpike road, or the surveyor of any highway, apprehend danger to the passengers on such road in consequence of horses being frightened by the sight of the engines or carriages travelling upon the railway, it shall be lawful for such commissioners, or trustees, or surveyor, after giving fourteen days' notice to the company to apply to the Board of Trade with respect thereto; and if it shall appear to the said Board that such danger might be obviated or lessened by the construction of any works in the nature of a screen near to or adjoining the side of such road, it shall be lawful for them, if they shall think fit, to certify the works necessary or proper to be executed by the company for the purpose of obviating or lessening such danger, and by such certificate to require the company to execute such works within a certain time after the service of such certificate, to be appointed by the said Board.

LVI. Where by any such certificate as aforesaid the company shall have been required to execute any such work in the nature of a screen, they shall execute and complete the same within the period appointed for that purpose in such certificate and if they fail so to do they shall forfeit to the commissioners, or trustees, or surveyor, 5*l.* for every day during which such works shall remain uncompleted beyond the period so appointed for their completion; and it shall be lawful for the Justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be laid out in executing the work in respect whereof such penalty was incurred.

LVII. Where, under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, the company are required to maintain or keep in repair any bridge, fence, approach, gate, or other work executed by them, it shall be lawful for the sheriff or two Justices, on the application of the surveyor of roads, or of any two householders of the parish or district where such work may be situate, complaining that any such work is out of repair, after not less than ten days' notice to the company, to order the company to put such work into complete repair within a period to be limited for that purpose by such sheriff or Justices; and if the company fail to comply with such order they shall forfeit 5*l.* for every day that they fail so to do; and it shall be lawful for the sheriff or Justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be applied, in such manner and by such persons as they think fit, in putting such work into repair.

And after reciting that expense might frequently be avoided, and public convenience promoted, by a reference to the Board of Trade upon the construction of public works of an engineering nature connected with the railway, where a strict compliance with the provisions of this or the special Act might be impossible, or attended with inconvenience to the company and without adequate advantage to the public;—

It is Enacted,

LVIII. That in case any difference in regard to the construction, alteration, or restoration of any road or bridge, or other public work of an engineering nature, required by the provisions of this or the special Act, shall arise between the company and any trustees, commissioners, surveyors, or other persons having the controul of or being authorized by law to enforce the construction of such road, bridge, or work, it shall be lawful for either party, after giving fourteen days' notice in writing of their intention so to do to the other party, to apply to the Board of Trade to decide upon the proper manner of constructing, altering, or restoring such road, bridge, or other work; and it shall be lawful for the Board of Trade, if they shall think fit, to decide the same accordingly, and to authorize, by certificate in writing, any arrangement or mode of construction in regard to any such road, bridge, or other work which shall appear to them either to be in substantial compliance with the provisions of this and the special Act, or to be calculated to afford equal or greater accommodation to the public using such road, bridge, or other work; and after any such certificate shall have been given by the Board of Trade, the road, bridge, or other work therein mentioned shall be constructed by the company in conformity with the terms of such certificate, and being so constructed shall be deemed to be constructed in conformity with the provisions of this and the special Act: Provided always, that no such certificate shall be granted by the Board of Trade unless they shall be satisfied that existing private rights or interests will not be injuriously affected thereby.

LIX. That all regulations, certificates, notices, and other documents in writing purporting to be made or issued by or by the authority of the Board of Trade, and signed by some officer appointed for that purpose by the Board of Trade, shall, for the purposes of this and the special Act, and any Act incorporated therewith, be deemed to have been so made and issued, and that without proof of the authority of the person signing the same, or of the signature thereto, which matters shall be presumed until the contrary be proved; and service of any such document, by leaving the same at one of the principal offices of the railway company, or by sending the same by post addressed to the secretary at such office, shall be deemed good service upon the company; and all notices and other documents required by this or the special Act to be given to or laid before the Board of Trade shall be delivered at, or sent by post addressed to, the office of the Board of Trade in London.

LX. And with respect to works for the accommodation of lands adjoining the railway,—it is enacted as follows: The company shall make and at all times thereafter maintain the following works for the accommodation of the owners and occupiers of lands adjoining the railway: (that is to say,)

Such and so many convenient gates, bridges, arches, culverts, and passages over, under, or by the sides of or leading to or from the railway as shall be necessary for the purpose of making good any interruptions caused by the railway to the use of the lands through which the railway shall be made; and such works shall be made forthwith after the part of the railway passing over such lands shall have been laid out or formed, or during the formation thereof:

Also sufficient posts, rails, hedges, ditches, mounds, or other fences for separating the land taken for the use of the railway from the adjoining lands not taken, and protecting such lands from trespass, or the cattle of the owners or occupiers thereof from straying thereout, by reason of the railway, together with all necessary gates made to open towards such adjoining lands, and not towards the railway, and all necessary stiles; and such posts, rails, and other fences shall be made forthwith after the taking of any such lands, if the owners thereof shall so require, and the said other works as soon as conveniently may be:

Also all necessary arches, tunnels, culverts, drains, or other passages, either over or under or by the sides of the railway, of such dimensions as will be sufficient at all times to convey the water as clearly from the lands lying near or affected by the railway as before the making of the railway, or as nearly so as may be; and such works shall be made from time to time as the railway works proceed:

Also proper watering places for cattle where by reason of the railway the cattle of any person occupying any lands lying near thereto shall be deprived of access to their former watering places; and such watering places shall be so made as to be at all times as sufficiently supplied with water as theretofore, and as if the railway had not been made, or as nearly so as may be; and the company shall make all necessary watercourses and drains for the purpose of conveying water to the said watering places:

Provided always, that the company shall not be required to make such accommodation works in such a manner as would prevent or obstruct the working or using of the railway, and that the company may, in lieu of such accommodation works, make compensation to the owners and occupiers of the lands, for the want thereof, in such manner as may be agreed upon between the company and such owners and occupiers, nor to make any accommodation works with respect to which the owners, lessees, and occupiers of the lands shall have agreed to receive and shall have been paid compensation instead of the making of them.

LXI. If any difference arise respecting the kind or number of any such accommodation works, or the dimensions or sufficiency thereof, or respecting the maintaining thereof, the same shall be determined by the sheriff or two Justices; and such sheriff or Justices shall also appoint the time within which such works shall be commenced and executed by the company.

LXII. If for seven days next after the time appointed by such sheriff or Justices for the commencement of any such works the company shall fail to commence such works, or having commenced shall fail to proceed diligently to execute the same in a sufficient manner, it shall be lawful for the party aggrieved by such failure himself to execute such works or repairs; and the reasonable expenses thereof shall be repaid by the company to the party by whom the same shall so have been executed; and if there be any dispute about such expenses the same shall be settled by the sheriff or two Justices: Provided always, that no such owner or occupier or other person shall obstruct or injure the railway, or any of the works connected therewith, for a longer time nor use them in any other manner than is unavoidably necessary for the execution or repair of such accommodation works.

LXIII. If any of the owners or occupiers of lands affected by such railway shall consider the accommodation works made by the company, or directed by such sheriff or Justices to be made by the company, insufficient for the commodious use of their respective lands, it shall be lawful for any such owner or occupier, at his own expense, to make such further works for that purpose as he shall think necessary, and as shall be agreed to by the company, or, in case of difference, as shall be authorized by the sheriff or two Justices.

LXIV. If the company so desire, all such last-mentioned accommodation works shall be constructed under the superintendence of their engineer, and according to plans and specifications to be submitted to and approved by such engineer; nevertheless the owners or occupiers of lands shall not be entitled to require, either that plans should be adopted which would involve a greater expense than that incurred in the execution of similar works by the company, or that the plans selected should be executed in a more expensive manner than that adopted in similar cases by the company.

LXV. The company shall not be compelled to make any further or additional accommodation works for the use of owners and occupiers of land adjoining the railway after the expiration of the prescribed period, or, if no period be prescribed, after five years from the opening of the railway for public use.

LXVI. Until the company shall have made the bridges or other proper communications which they shall under the provisions herein, or in the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, contained, have been required to make between lands intersected by the railway, and no longer, the owners and occupiers of such lands, and any other persons whose right of way shall be affected by the want of such communication, and their respective servants, may at all times freely pass and repass, with carriages, horses and other animals, directly (but not otherwise) across the part of the railway made in or through their respective lands, solely for the purpose of occupying the same lands, or for the exercise of such right of way, and so as not to obstruct the passage along the railway, or to damage the same; nevertheless, if the owner or occupier of any such lands have in his arrangements with the company received or agreed to receive compensation for or on account of any such communications, instead of the same being formed, such owner or occupier, or those claiming under him, shall not be entitled so to cross the railway.

LXVII. During the execution of any contract made with the company, the works in course of being done under such contract, and all the materials of every description brought upon or near such works for the purpose of being used in the execution of such contract, shall, in all proceedings instituted by them for the purpose of protecting the same, or by the public prosecutor for the purpose of punishment on account of offences committed against the same, be held to be the property of the company.

LXVIII. If any person omit to shut and fasten any gate set up at either side of the railway, for the accommodation of the owners or occupiers of the adjoining lands, as soon as he, and the carriage, cattle or other animals, under his care, have passed through the same, he shall forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding 40s.

LXIX. That this or the special Act shall not prevent the owners or occupiers of lands adjoining to the railway, or any other persons, from laying down, either upon their own lands or upon the lands of other persons, with the consent of such persons, any collateral branches of railway to communicate with the railway, for the purpose of bringing carriages to or from or upon the railway, but under and subject to the provisions and restrictions of an Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 55, intituled 'An Act for the better Regulation of Railways, and for the Conveyance of Troops;' and the company shall, if required, at the expense of such owners and occupiers and other persons, and subject also to the provisions of the said last-mentioned Act, make openings in the rails, and such additional lines of rail as may be necessary for effecting such communication, in places where the communication can be made with safety to the public, and without injury to the railway, and without inconvenience to the traffic thereon; and the company shall not take any rate or toll or other monies for the passing of any passengers, goods, or other things along any branch so to be made by any such owner or occupier or other person; but this enactment shall be subject to the following restrictions and conditions; (that is to say,)

No such branch railway shall run parallel to the railway:

The company shall not be bound to make any such openings in any place which they shall have set apart for any specific purpose with which such communication would interfere, nor upon any inclined plane or bridge, nor in any tunnel:

The persons making or using such branch railways shall be subject to all bye-laws and regulations of the company from time to time made with respect to passing upon or crossing the railway, and otherwise; and the persons making or using such branch railways shall be bound to construct, and from time to time, as need may require, to renew, the offset plates and switches according to the most approved plan adopted by the company, and under the direction of their engineer.

LXX. And with respect to mines lying under or near the railway,—it is enacted as follows: The company shall not be entitled to any mines of coal, ironstone, slate, or other minerals, under any land purchased by them, except only such parts thereof as shall be necessary to be dug or carried away or used in the construction of the works, unless the same shall have been expressly purchased; and all such mines, excepting as aforesaid, shall be deemed to be excepted out of the conveyance of such lands, unless they shall have been expressly named therein and conveyed thereby.

LXXI. If the owner, lessee, or occupier of any mines or minerals lying under the railway, or any of the works connected therewith, or within the prescribed distance, or, where no distance shall be prescribed, forty yards, therefrom, be desirous of working the same, such owner, lessee, or occupier shall give to the company notice in writing of his intention so to do thirty days before the commencement of working; and upon the receipt of such notice it shall be lawful for the company to cause such mines to be inspected by any person appointed by them for the purpose; and if it appear to the company that the working of such mines, either wholly or partially, is likely to damage the works of the railway, and if the company be desirous that such mines or any parts thereof should be left unworked, and if they be willing to make compensation for such mines or minerals or such parts thereof as they desire to be left unworked, they shall give notice to such owner, lessee, or occupier of such their desire, and shall in such notice specify the parts of the mines under the railway or works or within the distance aforesaid which they shall desire to be left unworked, and for which they shall be willing to make compensation; and in such case such owner, lessee, or occupier shall not work or get the mines or minerals comprised in such notice; and the company shall make compensation for the same, and for all loss or damage occasioned by the non-working thereof, to the owner, lessee, and occupier thereof respectively; and if the company, and such owner, lessee, or occupier, do not agree as to the amount of such compensation, the same shall be settled as in other cases of disputed compensation.

LXXII. If before the expiration of such thirty days the company do not give notice of their desire to have such mines left unworked, and of their willingness to make such compensation as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such owner, lessee, or occupier to work the said mines or such parts thereof for which the company shall not have agreed to pay compensation, up to the limits of the mines or minerals for which they shall have agreed to make compensation, in such manner as such owner, lessee, or occupier shall think fit, for the purpose of getting the minerals contained therein; and if any damage or obstruction be occasioned to the railway or works by the working or getting of any such minerals which the company shall so have required to be left unworked, and for which they shall so have agreed to make compensation, the same shall be forthwith repaired or removed, as the case may require, and such damage made good, by the owner, lessee, or occupier of such mines or minerals, and at his own expense; and if such repair or removal be not forthwith done, or, if the company shall so think fit, without waiting for the same to be done by such owner, lessee, or occupier, it shall be lawful for the company to execute the same, and recover from such owner, lessee, or occupier the expense occasioned thereby, by action in any competent court.

LXXIII. If the working of any such mines or minerals under the railway or works, or within the above-mentioned distance therefrom, be prevented as aforesaid by reason of apprehended injury to the railway, it shall be lawful for the respective owners, lessees, and occupiers of such mines, and whose mines shall extend so as to be on both sides of the railway, to cut and make such and so many airways, headways, gateways, or water levels through the mines, measures, or strata, the working whereof shall be so prevented, as may be requisite to enable them to ventilate, drain, and work their said mines, but no such airway, headway, gateway, or water level shall be of greater dimensions or section than the prescribed dimensions and sections, and where no dimensions shall be prescribed not greater than eight feet wide and eight feet high, nor shall the same be cut or made upon any part of the railway or works, or so as to injure the same, or to impede the passage thereon.

LXXIV. The company shall from time to time pay to the owner, lessee, or occupier of any such mines extending so as to be on both sides of the railway all such additional expenses and losses as shall be incurred by such owner, lessee, or occupier by reason of the severance of the lands lying over such mines by the railway, or of the continuous working of such mines being interrupted as aforesaid, or by reason of the same being worked in such manner and under such restrictions as not to prejudice or injure the railway, and for any minerals not purchased by the company which cannot be obtained by reason of working and maintaining the railway; and if any dispute or question shall arise between the company and such owner, lessee, or occupier as aforesaid, touching the amount of such losses or expenses, the same shall be settled as in other cases of disputed compensation.

LXXV. If any loss or damage be sustained by the owner or occupier of the lands lying over any such mines the working whereof shall have been so prevented as aforesaid (and not being the owner, lessee, or occupier of such mines), by reason of the making of any such airway or other work as aforesaid, which or any like work would not have been necessary to be made for the working of such mines having been so prevented as aforesaid, the company shall make full compensation to such owner or occupier of the surface lands for the loss or damage so sustained by him.

LXXVI. For better ascertaining whether any such mines are being worked or have been worked so as to damage the railway or works, it shall be lawful for the company, after giving twenty-four hours' notice in writing, to enter upon any lands through or near which the railway passes wherein any such mines are being worked or are supposed so to be, and to enter and return from any such mines or the works connected therewith; and for that purpose it shall be lawful for them to make use of any apparatus or machinery connected with such mines belonging to the owner, lessee, or occupier of such mines, upon payment of the reasonable costs of using and working the same, and of any loss thereby occasioned to the working of the mines, or otherwise, and to use all necessary means for discovering the distance from the railway to the parts of such mines which are being worked or about so to be.

LXXVII. If any such owner, lessee, or occupier of any such mine shall refuse to allow any person appointed by the company that purpose to enter into and inspect any such mines or works in manner aforesaid, every person so offending shall, for such refusal, forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding 20*l*.

LXXVIII. If it appear that any such mines have been worked contrary to the provisions of this or the special Act, the company, if they think fit, give notice to the owner, lessee, or occupier thereof to construct such supports or works as shall be necessary means as may be necessary or proper for making safe the railway, and preventing injury thereto, and if such owner, lessee, or occupier do not forthwith proceed to construct the works necessary for making safe the railway, the company may themselves construct such works, and recover the expense thereof from such owner, lessee, or occupier by action in any competent court.

LXXIX. And with respect to the carrying of passengers and goods upon the railway, and the tolls to be taken thereon,—it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the company to use and employ locomotive engines or other moving power, and carriages and waggons to be drawn or propelled thereby, and to carry and convey upon the railway all such passengers and goods as shall be offered to them for that purpose, and to make such reasonable charges in respect thereof as they may from time to time determine upon, not exceeding the tolls by the special Act authorized to be taken by them.

LXXX. It shall be lawful for the company from time to time to enter into any contract with any other company, being the owners or lessees or in possession of any other railway, for the passage over or along the railway by the special Act authorized to be made of any engines, coaches, waggons, or other carriages of any other company, or which shall pass over any other line of railway, or for the passage over any other line of railway of any engines, coaches, waggons, or other carriages of the company, or which shall pass over their line of railway, upon the payment of such tolls and under such conditions and restrictions as may be mutually agreed upon; and for the purpose aforesaid it shall be lawful for the respective parties to enter into any contract for the division or apportionment of the tolls to be taken upon their respective railways.

LXXXI. Provided, that no such contract as aforesaid shall in any manner alter, affect, increase, or diminish any of the tolls which the respective companies, parties to such contracts, shall for the time being be respectively authorized and entitled to demand or receive from any person or any other company, but that all other persons and companies shall notwithstanding any such contract, be entitled to the use and benefit of any of the said railways, upon the same terms and conditions, and on payment of the same tolls, as they would have been in case no such contract had been entered into.

LXXXII. Nothing in this or the special Act contained shall extend to charge or make liable the company further or in any other case than where, according to the laws of Scotland, stage coach proprietors and common carriers would be liable, nor shall extend in any degree to deprive the company of any protection or privilege which common carriers or stage coach proprietors may be entitled to; but, on the contrary, the company shall at all times be entitled to the benefit of every such protection and privilege.

And after reciting that it is expedient that the company should be enabled to vary the tolls upon the railway so as to accommodate them to the circumstances of the traffic, but that such power of varying should not be used for the purpose of prejudicing or favouring particular parties, or for the purpose of collusively and unfairly creating a monopoly, either in the hands of the company or of particular parties;—

It is Enacted,

LXXXIII. That it shall be lawful, therefore, for the company, subject to the provisions and limitations herein and in the special Act contained, from time to time to alter or vary the tolls by the special Act authorized to be taken, either upon the whole or upon any particular portions of the railway, as they shall think fit; provided that all such tolls be at all times charged equally to all persons, and after the same rate, whether per ton per mile or otherwise, in respect of all passengers, and of all goods or carriages of the same description, and conveyed or propelled by a like carriage or engine, passing only over the same portion of the line of railway under the same circumstances; and no reduction or advance in any such tolls shall be made either directly or indirectly in favour of or against any particular company or person travelling upon or using the railway.

And after reciting that authority has been given by various Acts of Parliament to railway companies to demand tolls for the conveyance of passengers and goods and for other services over the fraction of a mile equal to the toll which they are authorized to demand for one mile;—

It is Enacted,

LXXXIV. That in cases in which any railway shall be amalgamated with any other adjoining railway or railways, such toll shall be calculated and imposed at such rates as if such amalgamated railways had originally formed one line of railway.

LXXXV. It shall not be lawful for the company at any time to demand or take a greater amount of toll, or make any greater charge for the carriage of passengers or goods, than they are by this and the special Act authorized to demand; and upon payment of the tolls from time to time demandable all companies and persons shall be entitled to use the railway, with engines and carriages properly constructed as by this and the special Act directed, subject nevertheless to the provisions and restrictions of the said Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 55, intitled 'An Act for the better Regulation of Railways, and for the Conveyance of Troops,' and to the regulations to be from time to time made by the company by virtue of the powers in that behalf hereby and by the special Act conferred upon them.

LXXXVI. A list of all the tolls authorized by the special Act to be taken, and which shall be exacted by the company, shall be published by the same being painted upon one toll board or more in distinct black letters on a white ground, or in white letters on a black ground, or by the same being printed in legible characters on paper affixed to such board, and by such board being exhibited in some conspicuous place on the stations or places where such tolls shall be made payable.

LXXXVII. The company shall cause the length of the railway to be measured, and posts or other conspicuous objects to be set up and maintained along the whole line thereof, at the distance of one quarter of a mile from each other, with numbers or marks inscribed thereon denoting such distances.

LXXXVIII. No tolls shall be demanded or taken by the company for the use of the railway during any time at which the board hereinbefore directed to be exhibited shall not be so exhibited, or at which the milestones hereinbefore directed to be set up and maintained shall not be so set up and maintained; and if any person wilfully pull down, deface, or destroy any such board or milestone, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l.* for every such offence.

LXXXIX. The tolls shall be paid to such persons, and at such places upon or near to the railway, and in such manner as under such regulations, as the company shall, by notice to be annexed to the lists of tolls, appoint.

xc. If, on demand, any person fail to pay the tolls due in respect of any carriage or goods, it shall be lawful for the company to detain and sell such carriage, or all or any part of such goods, or, if the same shall have been removed from the premises of the company, to detain and sell any other carriages or goods within such premises belonging to the party liable to pay such tolls, and out of the monies arising from such sale to retain the tolls payable as aforesaid, and all charges and expenses of such detention and sale, rendering the overplus, if any, of the monies arising by such sale, and by such of the carriages or goods as shall remain unsold, to the person entitled thereto, or it shall be lawful for the company to recover any such tolls by action at law.

xcI. Every person being the owner or having the care of any carriage or goods passing or being upon the railway shall, on demand, give to the collector of tolls, at the places where he attends for the purpose of receiving goods or of collecting tolls for the part of the railway on which such carriage or goods may have travelled or be about to travel, an exact account in writing signed by him of the number or quantity of goods conveyed by any such carriage, and of the point on the railway from which such carriage or goods have set out or are about to set out, and at what point the same are intended to be unloaded or taken off the railway; and if the goods conveyed by any such carriage, or brought for conveyance as aforesaid, be liable to the payment of different tolls, then such owner or other person shall specify the respective numbers or quantities thereof liable to each or any of such tolls.

xcII. If any such owner or other such person fail to give such account, or to produce his way-bill or bill of lading, to such collector or other officer or servant of the company demanding the same, or if he give a false account, or if he unload or take off any part of his lading or goods at any other place than shall be mentioned in such account, with intent to avoid the payment of any tolls payable in respect thereof, he shall for every such offence forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding 10*l.* for every ton of goods, or for any parcel not exceeding one hundred weight, and so in proportion for any less quantity of goods than one ton, or for any parcel exceeding one hundred weight, (as the case may be,) which shall be upon any such carriage; and such penalty shall be in addition to the toll to which such goods may be liable.

xcIII. If any dispute arise concerning the amount of the tolls due to the company, or concerning the charges occasioned by any detention or sale thereof under the provisions herein or in the special Act contained, the same shall be settled by the sheriff or by two Justices; and it shall be lawful for the company in the meanwhile to detain the goods, or (if the case so require) the proceeds of the sale thereof.

xcIV. If any difference arise between any toll collector or other officer or servant of the company and any owner of or person having the charge of any carriage passing or being upon the railway, or of any goods conveyed or to be conveyed by such carriage, respecting the weight, quantity, quality, or nature of such goods, such collector or other officer may lawfully detain such carriage or goods, and examine, weigh, gauge, or otherwise measure the same; and if upon such measuring or examination such goods appear to be of greater weight or quantity or of other nature than shall have been stated in the account given thereof, then the person who shall have given such account shall pay, and the owner of such carriage, or the respective owners of such goods, shall also, at the option of the company, be liable to pay, the costs of such measuring and examining; but if such goods appear to be of the same or less weight or quantity than and of the same nature as shall have been stated in such account, then the company shall pay such costs, and they shall also pay to such owner of or person having charge of such carriage, and to the respective owners of such goods, such damage (if any) as shall appear to the sheriff or any two Justices, on a summary application to him or them for that purpose, to have arisen from such detention.

xcV. If at any time it be made to appear to any such sheriff or Justices, upon the complaint of the company, that any such detention, measuring, or examining of any carriage or goods, as hereinbefore mentioned, was without reasonable ground, or that it was vexatious on the part of such collector or other officer, then the collector or other officer shall himself pay the costs of such detention and measuring, and the damage occasioned thereby; and in default of immediate payment of any such costs or damage the same may be recovered by pointing and sale of the goods of such collector, and such sheriff or Justices shall issue his or their warrant accordingly.

xcVI. If any person travel or attempt to travel in any carriage of the company, or of any other company or party using the railway, without having previously paid his fare, and with intent to avoid payment thereof, or if any person, having paid his fare for a certain distance, knowingly and wilfully proceed in any such carriage beyond such distance, without previously paying the additional fare for the additional distance, and with intent to avoid payment thereof, or if any person knowingly and wilfully refuse or neglect, on arriving at the point to which he has paid his fare, to quit such carriage, every such person shall for every such offence forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding 40*s.*

xcVII. If any person be discovered, either in or after committing or attempting to commit any such offence as in the preceding enactment mentioned, all officers and servants and other persons on behalf of the company, or such other company or party as aforesaid, and all constables, gaolers, and peace-officers, may lawfully apprehend and detain such person until he may conveniently be taken before the sheriff or some Justice, or until he be otherwise discharged by due course of law.

xcVIII. No person shall be entitled to carry, or to require the company to carry, upon the railway, any aquafortis, oil of vitriol, unpowder, lucifer matches, or any other goods which in the judgment of the company may be of a dangerous nature; and if any person send by the railway any such goods without distinctly marking their nature on the outside of the package containing the same, or otherwise giving notice in writing to the book-keeper or other servant of the company with whom the same are sent, at the time of so sending, he shall forfeit to the company 20*l.* for every such offence; and it shall be lawful for the company to refuse to take any parcel that they may suspect to contain goods of a dangerous nature, or require the same to be opened and ascertained the fact.

xcIX. If any collector of tolls or other officer employed by the company be discharged or suspended from his office, or die, second, or absent himself, and if such collector or other officer, or the wife, widow, or any of the family or representatives of any such collector or other officer, refuse or neglect, after seven days' notice in writing for that purpose, to deliver up to the company, or to any person appointed by them for that purpose, any station, dwelling-house, office, or other building, with its appurtenances, or any books, papers, or other matters belonging to the company in the possession or custody of any such collector or officer at the occurrence of any such event as aforesaid, then upon application being made by the company to the sheriff or to any two Justices, it shall be lawful for such sheriff or Justices to order any constable, with proper assistance, to enter upon such station or other building, and to remove any person found therein, and to take possession thereof, and of any such books, papers, or other matters, and to deliver the same to the company, or any person appointed by them for that purpose.

c. That the company shall every year cause an annual account in abstract to be prepared, shewing the total receipts and expenditure of all funds levied by virtue of this or the special Act for the year ending on the 31st of December or some other convenient day in each year, under the several distinct heads of receipt and expenditure, with a statement of the balance of such account, duly audited and certified by the directors, or some of them, and by the auditors, and shall, if required, transmit a copy of the said account, free of charge, to the sheriff clerks of the counties through which the railway shall pass, on or before the 31st of January then next; and the copy of such account shall be open to the inspection of the public at all seasonable hours, on payment of the sum of 1s. for every such inspection: Provided always, that if the said company shall omit to prepare or transmit such account as aforesaid, if required so to do by any such sheriff clerk, they shall forfeit for every such omission the sum of 20*l*.

CI. And with respect to the regulations of the use of the railway,—it is enacted as follows: It shall be lawful for the company, from time to time, subject to the provisions and restrictions in this and the special Act contained, to make regulations for the following purposes; (that is to say,)

For regulating the mode by which and the speed at which carriages using the railway are to be moved or propelled;

For regulating the times of the arrival and departure of any such carriages;

For regulating the loading or unloading of such carriages, and the weights which they are respectively to carry;

For regulating the receipt and delivery of goods and other things which are to be conveyed upon such carriages;

For preventing the smoking of tobacco, and the commission of any other nuisance, in or upon such carriages, or in any of the stations or premises occupied by the company;

And, generally, for regulating the travelling upon, or using and working of the railway;

But no such regulation shall authorize the closing of the railway, or prevent the passage of engines or carriages on the railway, at reasonable times, except at any time when in consequence of any of the works being out of repair, or from any other sufficient cause, it shall be necessary to close the railway or any part thereof.

CII. For better enforcing the observance of all or any of such regulations it shall be lawful for the company, subject to the provisions of an Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, intituled, 'An Act for regulating Railways,' to make bye-laws, and from time to time to repeal or alter such bye-laws, and make others, provided that such bye-laws be not repugnant to the laws of that part of the United Kingdom where the same are to have effect, or to the provisions of this or the special Act; and such bye-laws shall be reduced into writing, and shall have affixed thereto the common seal of the company; and any person offending against any such bye-law shall forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding 5*l*., to be imposed by the company in such bye-laws as a penalty for any such offence; and if the infraction or non-observance of any such bye-law or other such regulation as aforesaid be attended with danger or annoyance to the public, or hindrance to the company in the lawful use of the railway, it shall be lawful for the company summarily to interfere to obviate or remove such danger, annoyance, or hindrance, and that without prejudice to any penalty incurred by the infraction of any such bye-law.

CIII. The substance of such last-mentioned bye-laws, when confirmed or allowed according to the provisions of any Act in force regulating the allowance or confirmation of the same, shall be painted on boards, or printed on paper and pasted on boards, and hung up and affixed and continued on the front or other conspicuous part of every wharf or station belonging to the company, according to the nature or subject-matter of such bye-laws respectively, and so as to give public notice thereof to the parties interested therein or affected thereby; and such boards shall from time to time be renewed as often as the bye-law thereon or any part thereof shall be obliterated or destroyed; and no penalty imposed by any such bye-law shall be recoverable unless the same shall have been published and kept published in manner aforesaid.

civ. Such bye-laws, when so confirmed, published, and affixed, shall be binding upon and be observed by all parties, and shall be sufficient to justify all persons acting under the same; and for proof of the publication of any such bye-laws it shall be sufficient to prove that a printed paper or painted board, containing a copy of such bye-laws, was affixed and continued in manner by this Act directed, and in case of its being afterwards displaced or damaged then that such paper or board was replaced as soon as conveniently might be.

cv. Where the company shall be authorized by the special Act to lease the railway or any part thereof to any company or person, the lease to be executed in pursuance of such authority shall contain all usual and proper obligations on the part of the lessee for maintaining the railway, or the portion thereof comprised in such lease, in good and efficient repair and working condition during the continuance thereof, and for so leaving the same at the expiration of the term thereby granted and such other provisions, conditions, obligations, and agreements as are usually inserted in leases of a like nature.

cv. Such lease shall entitle the company or person to whom the same shall be granted to the free use of the railway or portion of railway comprised therein, and during the continuance of any such lease all the powers and privileges granted and which might otherwise be exercised and enjoyed by the company, or the directors thereof, or their officers, agents, servants, by virtue of this or the special Act, with regard to the possession, enjoyment, and management of the railway, or the part thereof comprised in such lease, and the tolls to be taken thereon, shall be exercised and enjoyed by the lessee, as the officers and servants of such lessee, under the same regulations and restrictions as are by this or the special Act imposed on the company, and their directors, officers, and servants; and such lessee shall, with respect to the railway comprised in such lease, be subject to all the obligations by this or the special Act imposed on the company.

cvii. And with respect to the engines and carriages to be brought on the railway,—it is enacted as follows: Every locomotive steam-engine to be used on the railway shall, if it use coal or other similar fuel emitting smoke, be constructed on the principle of consuming and so as to consume its own smoke; and if any engine be not so constructed the company or party using such engine shall forfeit 5l. for every day during which such engine shall be used on the railway.

CVIII. No locomotive or other engine, or other description of moving power, shall at any time be brought upon or used on the railway unless the same have first been approved of by the company; and within fourteen days after notice given to the company by any party desirous of bringing any such engine on the railway the company shall cause their engineer or other agent to examine such engine at any place within three miles distance from the railway to be appointed by the owner thereof, and to report thereon to the company; and within seven days after such report, if such engine be proper to be used on the railway, the company shall give a certificate to the party requiring the same of their approval of such engine; and if at any time the engineer or other agent of the company report that any engine used upon the railway is out of repair, or unfit to be used upon the railway, the company may require the same to be taken off, or may forbid its use upon the railway until the same shall have been repaired to the satisfaction of the company, and upon the engine being so repaired the company shall give a certificate to the party requiring the same of their approval of such engine; and if any difference of opinion arise between the company and the owner of any such engine as to the fitness or unfitness thereof for the purpose of being used on the railway, such difference shall be settled by arbitration.

CIX. If any person, whether the owner or other person having the care thereof, bring or use upon the railway any locomotive or other engine, or any moving power, without having first obtained such certificate of approval as aforesaid, or if, after notice given by the company to remove any such engine from the railway, such person do not forthwith remove the same, or if, after notice given by the company not to use any such engine upon the railway, such person do so use such engine, without having first repaired the same to the satisfaction of the company, and obtained such certificate of approval, every such person shall in any of the cases aforesaid forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding 20l.; and in any such case it shall be lawful for the company to remove such engine from the railway.

CX. No carriage shall pass along or be upon the railway (except in directly crossing the same, as herein or by the special Act authorized), unless such carriage be at all times, so long as it shall be used or shall remain on the railway, of the construction and in the condition which the regulations of the company for the time being shall require; and if any dispute arise between the company and the owner of any such carriage as to the construction or condition thereof, in reference to the then existing regulations of the company, such dispute shall be settled by arbitration.

CXI. The regulations from time to time to be made by the company respecting the carriages to be used on the railway shall be drawn up in writing, and be authenticated by the common seal of the company, and shall be applicable alike to the carriages of the company and to the carriages of other companies or persons using the railway; and a copy of such regulations shall, on demand, be furnished by the secretary of the company to any person applying for the same.

CXII. If any carriage, not being of such construction or in such condition as the regulations of the company for the time being require, be made to pass or be upon any part of the railway (except as aforesaid), the owner thereof, or any person having for the time being the charge of such carriage, shall forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding 10l. for every such offence, and it shall be lawful for the company to remove any such carriage from the railway.

CXIII. The respective owners of carriages using the railway shall cause to be entered with the secretary or other officer of the company appointed for that purpose the names and places of abode of the owners of such carriages respectively, and the numbers, weights, and gauges of their respective carriages; and such owners shall also, if so required by the company, cause the same particulars to be painted in legible characters on some conspicuous part of the outside of every such carriage, so as to be always open to view; and every such owner shall, whenever required by the company, permit his carriage to be weighed, measured, or gauged at the expense of the company.

CXIV. If the owner of any carriage fail to comply with the requisitions contained in the preceding enactment, it shall be lawful for the company to refuse to allow such carriage to be brought upon the railway, or to remove the same therefrom until such compliance.

CXV. If the loading of any carriage using the railway be such as to be liable to collision with other carriages properly loaded, or to be otherwise dangerous, or if the person having the care of any carriage or goods upon the railway suffer the same or any part thereof to remain on the railway so as to obstruct the passage or working thereof, it shall be lawful for the company to cause such carriage or goods to be unloaded and removed in any manner proper for preventing such collision or obstruction, and to detain such carriage or goods, or any part thereof, until the expenses occasioned by such unloading, removal, or detention be paid.

CXVI. The company shall not be liable for any damage or loss occasioned by any such unloading, removal, or detention as aforesaid, except for damage wilfully or negligently done to any carriage or goods so unloaded, removed, or detained; nor shall they be liable for the safe custody of any such carriage or goods so detained, unless the same be wrongfully detained by them, and then only for so long a time as the same shall have been so wrongfully detained.

CXVII. The respective owners of engines and carriages passing or being upon the railway shall be answerable for any damage done by their engines or carriages, or by any of the servants or persons employed by them, to or upon the railway, or the machinery or works belonging thereto, or to or upon the property of any other person.

CXVIII. It shall be lawful for any owner of any engine or carriage who shall pay the amount of any damage caused by the misfeasance or negligence of any servant or other person employed by him to recover the amount so paid by him from such servant or other person.

CXIX. And with respect to the settlement of disputes by arbitration,—it is enacted as follows: When any dispute directed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, to be settled by arbitration, shall have arisen, then, unless both parties shall concur in the appointment of a single arbiter, each party, on the request of the other party, shall nominate and appoint an arbiter to whom such dispute shall be referred; and every appointment of an arbiter shall be made on the part of the company, under the hand of the secretary or any two of the directors of the company, and on the part of any other party under the hand of such party, or if such party be a company or corporation, under the hand of the proper officer or person authorized by such company or corporation; and such appointment shall be delivered to the arbiter, and shall be deemed a submission to arbitration on the part of the party by whom the same shall be made; and after any such appointment shall have been made neither party shall have power to revoke the same without the consent of the other, nor shall the death of either party operate as such revocation; and if for the space of fourteen days after any such dispute shall have arisen, and after a request in writing, in which shall be stated the matters so required to be referred to arbitration, shall have been served by the one party on the other party, to appoint an arbiter, such last-mentioned party fail to appoint such arbiter, then upon such failure the party making the request, and having himself appointed an arbiter, may appoint such arbiter to act on behalf of both parties; and such arbiter may proceed to hear and determine the matters which shall be in dispute; and in such case the award or determination of such single arbiter shall be final.

CXX. If before the matters so referred shall be determined any arbiter appointed by either party die, or become incapable to act, the party by whom such arbiter was appointed may nominate and appoint in writing some other person to act in his place, and if for the space of seven days after notice in writing from the other party for that purpose he fail to do so the remaining or other arbiter may proceed ex parte; and every arbiter so to be substituted as aforesaid shall have the same powers and authorities as were vested in the former arbiter at the time of such his death or incapacity as aforesaid.

CXXI. Where more than one arbiter shall have been appointed, such arbiters shall, before they enter upon the matters so referred to them, nominate and appoint by writing under their hands an oversman to decide on any such matters on which they shall differ, or which shall be referred to them under this or the special Act; and if such oversman shall die, or become incapable to act, they shall forthwith after such death or incapacity appoint another oversman in his place; and the decision of every such oversman on the matters on which the arbiters shall differ shall be final.

CXXII. If in either of the cases aforesaid the said arbiters shall refuse, or shall for seven days after request of either party to such arbitration neglect to appoint an oversman, the Lord Ordinary, on the application of either party to such arbitration, shall appoint an oversman; and the decision of such oversman on the matters on which the arbiters shall differ, or which shall be referred to them under this or the special Act, shall be final.

CXXIII. If, when a single arbiter shall have been appointed, such arbiter shall die or become incapable to act, before he shall have made his award, the matters referred to him shall be determined by arbitration, under the provisions of this or the special Act, in the same manner as if such arbiter had not been appointed.

CXXIV. If, where more than one arbiter shall have been appointed, either of the arbiters refuse, or for seven days neglect to act, the other arbiter may proceed ex parte, and the decision of such arbiter shall be as effectual as if he had been the single arbiter by both parties.

CXXV. If, where more than one arbiter shall have been appointed, and where neither of them shall refuse or neglect to act as aforesaid, such arbiters shall fail to make their award within twenty-one days after the day on which the last of such arbiters shall have been appointed, or within such extended time as shall have been appointed for that purpose by both such arbiters, under their hands, the matters referred to them shall be determined by the umpire to be appointed as aforesaid.

CXXVI. The said arbiters or their oversman may call for the production of any documents in the possession or power of either party which they or he may think necessary for determining the question in dispute, and may examine the parties or their witnesses on oath, and administer the oaths necessary for that purpose, and may also grant diligence for the recovery of such documents as either party may require, or for citing witnesses, and on application to the Lord Ordinary letters of supplement, or such other writ as may be necessary, shall be issued by the Lord Ordinary in support of such diligence.

CXXVII. Except where by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, it shall be otherwise provided, the expenses of and attending every such arbitration, to be determined by the arbiters, including the expense of recording the decret arbitral or award in the books of council and session, and of furnishing extracts thereof from the said books, shall be in the discretion of the arbiters or the oversman, as the case may be.

CXXVIII. The arbiters or oversman, as the case may be, shall make the decret arbitral or award in writing, and shall cause the same to be recorded in the books of council and session; and extracts of decreets arbitral or awards so recorded shall make faith in all courts and cases in like manner as the original decreets arbitral or awards themselves, except where the originals are offered to be improven.

CXXIX. No award made in respect to any question referred to arbitration under the provisions of this or the special Act shall be set aside for irregularity or error in matter of form.

CXXX. That any summons or notice, or any writ or other proceeding at law, requiring to be served upon the company, may be served by the same being left at or transmitted through the post directed to the principal office of the company, or one of their principal offices where there shall be more than one, or being given personally to the secretary, or in case there be no secretary then by being given to any one director of the company.

CXXXI. That if any party shall have committed any irregularity, trespass, or other wrongful proceeding in the execution of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or by virtue of any power or authority thereby given, and if before action brought in respect thereof such party make tender of sufficient amends to the party injured, such last-mentioned party shall not recover in any such action; and if no such tender shall have been made it shall be lawful for the defender, by leave of the Court where such action shall be pending, at any time before the record is closed to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit, and thereupon such proceedings shall be had as in other cases where defenders are allowed to pay money into court.

CCXIII. And with respect to the recovery of damages not specially provided for, and to the determination of any other matter referred to the sheriff or to Justices, it is enacted as follows: In all cases where any damages, charges, or expenses are by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, directed to be paid, and the method of ascertaining the amount or enforcing the payment thereof is not provided for, such amount, in case of dispute, shall be ascertained and determined by the sheriff; and if the amount so ascertained be not paid by the company or other party liable to pay the same, within seven days after demand, the amount may be recovered by pouncing and sale of the goods of the company or other party liable as aforesaid, and the sheriff shall, on application, issue his warrant accordingly.

CCXIII. If sufficient goods of the company cannot be found whereon to levy any such damages, charges, or expenses payable by the company, the same may, if the amount thereof do not exceed 20*l.* be recovered by pouncing and sale of the goods of the treasurer of the company, and the sheriff, on application, shall issue his warrant accordingly; but no such pouncing and sale shall be executed against the goods of such treasurer unless seven days' previous notice in writing, stating the amount so due, and demanding payment thereof, have been given to such treasurer, or left at his residence; and if such treasurer pay any money under such distress or pouncing and sale as aforesaid he may retain the amount so paid by him, and all expenses occasioned thereby, out of any money belonging to the company coming into his custody or controul, or he may sue the company for the same.

CCXIV. Where in this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any question of damages, charges, expenses, or other matter is referred to the determination of any sheriff or Justices, it shall be lawful for the sheriff or any Justice, upon the application of either party, to order the other party to appear before such sheriff if the order shall be issued by the sheriff, or before two Justices if the order shall have been issued by a Justice, at a time and place to be named in such summons; and upon the appearance of such parties, or in the absence of any of them upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such sheriff or such two Justices, as the case may be, to hear and determine such question, and for that purpose to examine such parties or any of them, and their witnesses, on oath; and the expenses of every such inquiry shall be in the discretion of such sheriff or Justices, and he or they shall determine the amount thereof.

CCXV. The company shall publish the short particulars of the several offences for which any penalty is imposed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, or by any bye-law of the company affecting other persons than the shareholders, officers, or servants of the company, and of the amount of every such penalty, and shall cause such particulars to be painted on a board, or printed upon paper and pasted thereon, and shall cause such board to be hung up or affixed on some conspicuous part of the principal place of business of the company, and where any such penalties are of local application shall cause such boards to be affixed in some conspicuous place in the immediate neighbourhood to which such penalties are applicable or have reference; and such particulars shall be renewed as often as the same or any part thereof is obliterated or destroyed; and no such penalty shall be recoverable unless it shall have been published and kept published in the manner hereinbefore required.

CCXVI. If any person pull down or injure any board put up or affixed as required by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, for the purpose of publishing any bye-law or penalty, or shall obliterate any of the letters or figures thereon, he shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding 5*l.*, and shall defray the expenses attending the restoration of such board.

CCXVII. Every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the special Act, or by any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before the sheriff or two Justices; and on complaint being made to any sheriff or Justice he shall issue an order requiring the party complained against to appear before himself if the order be issued by a sheriff, or before two or more Justices if the order be issued by a Justice, at a time and place to be named in such order; and every such order shall be served on the party offending either in person or by leaving the same with some inmate at his usual place of abode; and upon the appearance of the party complained against, or in his absence after proof of the due service of such order, it shall be lawful for any sheriff or two Justices to proceed to the hearing of the complaint; and upon proof of the offence, either by the confession of the party complained against, or upon the oath of one credible witness or more, it shall be lawful for such sheriff or Justices to convict the offender, and upon such conviction to adjudge the offender to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, as well as such expenses attending the conviction as such sheriff or Justices shall think fit.

CCXVIII. If forthwith upon any such adjudication as aforesaid the amount of the penalty or forfeiture, and of such expenses as aforesaid, be not paid, the amount of such penalty and expenses shall be levied by pouncing and sale, and such sheriff or Justices, or either of them, shall issue his or their warrant of pouncing and sale accordingly.

CCXIX. It shall be lawful for any such sheriff or Justices to order any offender so convicted as aforesaid to be detained and kept in safe custody until return can be conveniently made to the warrant of pouncing and sale to be issued for levying such penalty or forfeiture and expenses, unless the offender give sufficient security, by way of recognizance or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the sheriff or Justices, for his appearance before him or them on the day appointed for such return, such day not being more than eight days from the time of taking such security; but if before issuing such warrant of pouncing and sale it shall appear to the sheriff or Justices, by the admission of the offender or otherwise, that no sufficient pouncing and sale can be had within the jurisdiction of such sheriff or Justices whereon to levy such penalty or forfeiture and expenses, he or they may, if he or they think fit, refrain from issuing such warrant; and in such case, or if such warrant shall have been issued, and upon the return thereof such insufficiency as aforesaid shall be made to appear to the sheriff or Justices, then such sheriff or Justices, shall by warrant cause such offender to be committed to gaol, there to remain without bail for any term not exceeding three months, unless such penalty or forfeiture and expenses be sooner paid and satisfied.

CXL. Where in this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any sum of money, whether in the nature of penalty or otherwise, is directed to be levied by pouding and sale, such sum of money shall be levied by pouding and sale of the goods and effects of the party liable to pay the same; and the overplus arising from the sale of such goods and effects, after satisfying such sum of money, and the expenses of the pouding and sale, shall be returned, on demand, to the party whose goods shall have been seized.

CXLI. No pouding and sale made by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be deemed unlawful, nor shall any party making the same be deemed a trespasser or wrongdoer, on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, warrant, or other proceeding relating thereto, but all persons aggrieved by such defect or irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action before the sheriff court.

CXLII. The sheriff or Justices by whom any such penalty or forfeiture shall be imposed, where the application thereof is not otherwise provided for, may award not more than one half thereof to the informer, and shall award the remainder to the kirk session, or treasurer or collector of the funds for the poor, of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed, for the benefit of the poor of such parish.

CXLIII. No person shall be liable to the payment of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, for any offence made cognizable before the sheriff or Justices, unless the complaint respecting such offence shall have been made before such sheriff or some Justice within six months next after the commission of such offence.

CXLIV. If, through any act, neglect or default, on account whereof any person shall have incurred any penalty imposed by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, any damage to the property of the company shall have been committed by such person, he shall be liable to make good such damage as well as to pay such penalty; and the amount of such damage shall, in case of dispute, be determined by the sheriff or Justices by whom the party incurring such penalty shall have been convicted; and on non-payment of such damages, on demand, the same shall be levied by pouding and sale, and such sheriff or Justices shall issue his or their warrant accordingly.

CXLV. It shall be lawful for any sheriff or Justice to summon any person to appear before him as a witness in any matter in which such sheriff or Justice or two or more Justices shall have jurisdiction under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, at a time and place mentioned in such summons, and to administer to him an oath to testify the truth in such matter; and if any person so summoned shall, without reasonable excuse, refuse or neglect to appear at the time and place appointed for that purpose, having been paid or tendered a reasonable sum for his expenses, or if any person appearing shall refuse to be examined upon oath or to give evidence before such sheriff or Justice or Justices, every such person shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l.* for every such offence.

CXLVI. It shall be lawful for any officer or agent of the company, and all persons called by him to his assistance, to seize and detain any person who shall be found committing any offence against the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, and whose name and residence shall be unknown to such officer or agent, and convey him with all convenient despatch before the sheriff or a Justice, without any warrant or other authority than this or the special Act; and such sheriff or Justice shall proceed with all convenient despatch in the matter of the complaint against such offender.

CXLVII. Any sheriff to whom any application is authorized to be made, and before whom any judicial proceeding shall in consequence take place or become necessary under or by virtue of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall and he is hereby authorized and required summarily to call before him all parties who appear to him to be interested therein, and to proceed forthwith to hear viâ voce, and pronounce judgment regarding the matters mentioned in such application or proceedings, or to do the several matters and things required by this Act to be done by him, without waiting the ordinary course of the roll of causes before him, and without written pleadings or a written record, or reducing any evidence which may be led by either of the parties to writing, unless and except where the said sheriff shall consider that the matters mentioned in such application or proceedings can with more advantage be decided with written pleadings and with a written record, in which case he shall proceed to make up a record, and bring the said matters to a conclusion with all convenient despatch; and the orders and judgments of the said sheriff when pronounced without a record shall be final and conclusive, and not subject to review by suspension or advocacy or to reduction on any ground whatever.

CXLVIII. The sheriff or Justice or Justices before whom any person shall be convicted of any offence against this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, may cause the conviction to be drawn up according to the form in the Schedule to this Act annexed.

CXLIX. No proceeding in pursuance of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, nor shall the same be removed by suspension or otherwise into any superior court.

CL. In all cases which may come before any sheriff substitute under this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, in which written pleadings shall have been allowed, and a written record shall have been made up, and where the evidence which has been led by the parties shall have been reduced to writing, but in no other case whatever, it shall be competent for any of the parties thereto, within seven days after a final judgment shall have been pronounced by such sheriff substitute, to appeal against the same to the sheriff of the county, by lodging a minute of appeal with the sheriff clerk of such county or his deputy; and the said sheriff shall thereupon review the proceedings of the said sheriff substitute and whole process, and, if he think proper, hear the parties viâ voce thereon, and pronounce judgment; and such judgment shall in no case be subject to review by suspension or advocacy or to reduction on any ground whatever.

CLI. If any party shall feel aggrieved by any determination or adjudication of any Justices with respect to any matter under the provisions of this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, he may, unless otherwise specially provided, appeal to the General Quarter Sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal shall have arisen; but no such appeal shall be entertained unless it be made within four months next after the making of such determination or adjudication, nor unless ten days' notice in writing of such appeal, stating the nature and grounds thereof, be given to the party against whom the appeal shall be brought, nor unless the appellant forthwith after such notice enter into recognizances, with two sufficient sureties, before a Justice, conditioned duly to prosecute such appeal, and to abide the order of the Court thereon.

CXL. At the Quarter Sessions for which such notice shall be given the Court shall proceed to hear and determine the appeal in a summary way, or they may, if they think fit, adjourn it to the following sessions; and upon the hearing of such appeal the Court may, if they think fit, mitigate any penalty or forfeiture, or they may confirm or quash the adjudication, and order any money paid by the appellant, or levied by distress upon his goods, to be returned to him, and may also order such further satisfaction to be made to the party injured as they may judge reasonable; and they may make such order concerning the expenses, both of the adjudication and of the appeal, as they may think reasonable.

CXLI. And with respect to the provision to be made for affording access to the special Act by all parties interested, It is enacted as follows: The company shall at all times after the expiration of six months after the passing of the special Act keep in their principal office of business a copy of the special Act, printed by the printers to Her Majesty or some of them; and shall also within the space of such six months deposit in the offices of each of the sheriff clerks of the several counties into which the works shall extend a copy of such special Act, so printed as aforesaid; and the said sheriff clerks shall receive, and they and the company respectively shall retain, the said copies of the special Act, and shall permit all persons interested to inspect the same, and make extracts or copies therefrom, in the like manner, and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided in the case of certain plans and sections by an Act, 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 83, intituled, 'An Act to compel Clerks of the Peace for Counties and other Persons to take the Custody of such Documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament.'

CLIV. If the company shall fail to keep or deposit, as hereinbefore mentioned, any of the said copies of the special Act, they shall forfeit 20*l.* for every such offence, and also 5*l.* for every day afterwards during which such copy shall be not so kept or deposited.

CLV. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CAP. XXXIV.

AN ACT for abolishing the separate Seal Office of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas.
 (21st July 1845.)

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Abolition of offices of Receiver General and Comptroller of the Seal.
2. Writs, &c. in Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Eschequer to be sealed by the Masters of those courts respectively, &c.—Fees.
3. Commissioners of the Treasury may direct certain sums of money to be paid to the Clerk of the Hanaper.

By this Act,

After reciting, that, by 6 Geo. 4. c. 89, it was recited, that the office of Receiver General and Comptroller of the Seal of the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas was, by letters patent under the Great Seal of England, dated the 30th of April, in the 25 Car. 2, granted to Henry Earl of Euston, afterwards Duke of Grafton, in tail male, and that the office was then held by a person entitled thereto under the said grant; and it was by the said Act enacted, that it should be lawful for the Commissioners of the Treasury to treat, contract, and agree with the person beneficially entitled to the fees, receipts, and profits of the said office, for the purchase of all the rights, profits, privileges, and advantages whatever belonging thereto, for such annuity, to be charged upon the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, as the said Commissioners should think fit, and that from and after the confirmation of the said agreement by Parliament the rights and interests of all persons whatsoever claiming or entitled to claim under the said recited letters patent should cease and determine: And that the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury treated, contracted, and agreed with George Henry Fitzroy, the late Duke of Grafton, who was entitled to the office of Receiver General and Comptroller of the Seal of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, and which contract and agreement have been acceded to by the present Duke of Grafton, for the purchase of the said office, and of all the rights, profits, privileges, and advantages whatsoever belonging thereto, for an annuity of 843*l.* payable to the Duke of Grafton, and an annuity of 300*l.* payable to John Pimlott, his deputy:—

It is Enacted,

I. That from and after the 31st of December 1845, the present office of Receiver General and Comptroller of the Seal of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas shall wholly cease and determine; and there shall be paid to the present Duke of Grafton the sum of 843*l.* per annum, and to John Pimlott, his deputy, the sum of 300*l.* per annum; the said annuity to the Duke of Grafton to be paid to him during his life, and at his decease to be continued from time to time to such persons as would have been entitled to the fees, profits, and advantages of the said office of Receiver General and Comptroller of the Seal of the said Courts, under the letters patent before recited, if the same had not been abolished by this Act and the said annuity to John Pimlott to be paid to him during his life; and such annuities shall commence on the 1st January 1846, and shall be issued and paid and payable quarterly out of and be charged and chargeable upon the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

II. That from and after the said 31st of December 1845 all writs and other processes hitherto sealed and re-sealed at the said office of the Receiver General and Comptroller of the Seal of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas shall be sealed and re-sealed by the Masters of the said courts respectively, and by the Queen's Coroner and Attorney and Master of the Crown side of the Court of Queen's Bench, with the seals or stamps now or which may hereafter be used by the Masters respectively in their several offices, and with no other seals; and all proceedings, acts, matters, and things usually had, done, and performed in the said offices hereby abolished, and which it is requisite or needful to be continued, shall be had, done, and performed by the Masters of the said respective courts, and by the Queen's Coroner and Attorney and Master on the Crown Side of the Court of Queen's Bench, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as the same might or would have been had, done, and performed by the said Receiver General and Comptroller of the Seals of the said courts, or his deputy; subject nevertheless to all such orders and directions as shall or may from time to time be made by the Judges of the said courts for regulating the proceedings and practice and the receipt of fees therein; and all records, books, papers, and other documents of and concerning the duties of the said offices hereby abolished, and also all seals used therein, shall on the 31st of December 1845 be delivered by the said Receiver General and Comptroller of the Seal of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, or by his deputy, to the Masters of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas respectively, and to the Queen's Coroner and Attorney and Master on the Crown side of the Court of Queen's Bench, according to the particular court and office to which such records and other things may relate, to be by them kept and preserved in the respective offices: Provided always, that the fees now payable for sealing and re-sealing the said writs and other processes shall from and after the said 31st of December 1845 be taken and received by the Masters of the said courts, and by the Queen's Coroner and Master in the Crown Office, and such fees shall be accounted for by them in the same manner as other fees received in their said respective offices.

And after reciting that certain sums of money, amounting to 1,653*l.* 14*s.* per annum, have for many years past been paid out of the profits of his office by the Receiver General and Comptroller of the Seals of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, by way of rent-charge, into the receipt of the hanaper in the Court of Chancery, and such payments, unless otherwise provided for, will wholly cease and determine:—

It is Enacted,

III. That it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, or any three or more of them, if they shall deem it expedient, to direct the whole or any part of the said sum of money to be paid to the clerk of the hanaper in the Court of Chancery, at such times and in such manner as they may think proper, out of the fee funds respectively of the Masters of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, into which funds the fees for sealing writs and other process issued from the said courts will be payable upon the abolition of the said office of the Receiver General and Comptroller of the Seals of the operation of this Act.
